CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

77402

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

VOLUME XXXI.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1898.

VOLUME XXXI, PART V.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

Three thousand copies of Army Regulations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Two thousand copies of the Military Laws of the United States, of which 650 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the circumstances, I think I will not ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill to-night. I understand that there is a report about to be made.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit the report of the committee of conference on House joint resolution 233.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, having met, after full and free conference report to their respective Houses as follows:

That they have been unable to agree.

C. K. DAVIS,
J. B. FORAKER,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT ADAMS, Jr.,
JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, so far as I can with propriety, I will state in a few words the points of disagreement.

There was no difficulty in agreeing to the House amendment whereby the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba was stricken out. The point of contention was the restoration of the words "are and." Upon that the differences were irreconcilable, and from that the disagreement resulted.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Minnesota in making that statement speaks for the majority of the committee in each House. There were members of the conference committee who insisted upon a recognition of the Republic of Cuba and presented every form of view on that subject that could be presented, and could get no recognition of it in any form. That failing, they were willing to make an effort to get a recognition of the right of the people of Cuba to be free and independent, and that failed, because, as the Senator from Minnesota has stated, a majority in the House were not in favor of recognizing them as being free and independent. I do not believe there is any use to send this committee back for the purpose of trying to get an agreement.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. MASON. May I ask the Senator from Alabama to repeat his last sentence?

Mr. MORGAN. I said that I did not believe there was any use to send the conferees back for the purpose of getting an agreement unless the House recedes from its action.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think it is due to the Senate to say that I have been very greatly disappointed. I stated to the Senate, before the conference committee was appointed, I had reason to believe, on account of information that had been given to me, that if we would appoint the conferees to meet with the conferees of the House, we could agree, provided on behalf of the Senate we would yield the Turpie amendment. It was with what I thought was an understanding that by yielding that amendment we might come to an agreement that I consented to serve on the conference committee. When I speak of assurances, I speak of what was said to me by members of the House who had voted in opposition to the Turpie amendment in the House, and what was said to me by Senators who had so voted in the Senate.

When, therefore, we went into conference, although it was not because I had changed my mind about it, but in order that we might have harmony and unity of action with respect to this important matter, we did promptly agree to abandon the Turpie amendment, provided the words "are and" might be restored in the first proposition, so as to make it read "that the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent."

Mr. MORGAN. And to say nothing about the republic?

Mr. FORAKER. To say nothing at all about the republic.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not agree to that.

Mr. FORAKER. We thought that would be satisfactory, but we found out to our very great disappointment that it was not satisfactory to those who represent the House. I do not know what is now the proper course to pursue, but I want to say one other word in justification of our course in refusing to agree. It seems to me that if we are not to recognize the independence of the people of Cuba that they are free and independent we thereby negative the proposition upon which we have been proceeding, that Spain by her conduct has forfeited her sovereignty, and that as a result there is no sovereignty there at all. If there be no sovereignty of Spain in that island, surely the people of that island are free and independent, and it seems to us to be absolutely unjustifiable upon principle that we should fail to recognize the independence of the people of that island.

But there is another reason. If we are to intervene in the affairs of Cuba with force of arms, we are to fight somebody, if fighting becomes necessary. War is to be the result, and if war be the result it will be war between the Government of the United States and the Kingdom of Spain and all the subjects of Spain. Until we recognize the independence of the people of the Island of Cuba the people of that island, as to their legal status, remain the subjects of Spain; and we are declaring war when we declare war against Spain, if we come to that, against the people of the Island of Cuba as well as the subjects of Spain elsewhere. Therefore, it seemed to me to be a point so absolutely vital that I could not get the consent of my mind to abandon. Under no circumstances do I think we ought to yield that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. And ask for a further conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that is done I desire to say that I have not yielded the recognition of the Republic of Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion before the Senate is that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution 233.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say one word upon the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I suppose that if we go to war and send our ships into Cuban waters and our armies onto Cuban territory, if we have recognized an existing government there we must put our troops and our soldiers under the command of that government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me? I think he must have misunderstood me. We yielded the point as to the government. We did yield that for the sake of harmony.

Mr. HOAR. We must put our ships and our soldiers under the command of that government. We must do just as France did when she recognized the independence of the colonies of Great Britain. She put her troops under the command of George Washington.

Now, that I am not prepared to do. What I want to do is to leave the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our forces, master of that situation. I hold that he has the constitutional power to recognize the independence of Cuba, and that the moment we land our forces or send our ships there he will recognize that independence; but he will do it on such terms and conditions as he sees fit to make, and among those terms and conditions, I suppose, if he does what I presume everybody here would have him do, will be the retaining the control of all military and naval operations there on the part of our ships and our troops in his hands.

Now, I do not want to embarrass that question with any doubtful phrases. To say "they ought to be free" I like better, because "of right and ought to be" seems to be a little implication that in fact they are not free. If I agreed with the Senator from Ohio I would prefer the phrase without the words "of right" rather than with them, but he knows better what he wants, of course, than anybody else.

Mr. FORAKER. It is the language of the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. HOAR. True; but the circumstances attending the Declaration of Independence were different, and I have pointed out the difference. I do not want this matter to be embarrassed by any doubt about phraseology. I do not want it to be said that these words "free and independent" mean recognition or to have any lurking, doubtful, disputed meaning in this resolution. So, what I think we ought to do is to pass the substance of the House resolution, or what the House have now agreed to, and I think when that is done all these things will be added unto it.

You will have within ten days everything you desire. You will have had it in a constitutional way. You will have had it in a way that does not entangle or commit the American people, and you will have it in a way where the President, the House, and the Senate will not be embarrassed in regard to the characteristics of either of these branches of the Government as individuals, for they certainly represent the great masses and sentiments of the American people, and you will have it in a way in which the President, House, and Senate will all be agreed.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the criticism upon the language "are and of right ought to be free" is a hundred years too late. This language is quoted from the Declaration of Independence, where it twice occurs. That remarkable document which we and our ancestors have been reading as our political creed for a hundred years lays down the great fundamental principles of liberty. So we have understood. In the first place, they declare as a self-evident truth that all men are created equal. We have been taught to believe that that is the orthodox faith of all free people. It has been ours. We have met annually at every Fourth of July, that consecrated and holy day in our history, and had this creed read to ourselves and to our children. These truths are self-evident: First, that all men are equal.

Does not that apply to Cuba as well as to the United States? Is not Cuba in the same position now that the Continental Congress was in 1776? Had not the blood of the patriots flowed in Boston and at other places before the declaration was made? Were not the people of the colonies under the power of the mother government then as the people of Cuba are under the power of the mother government in that island to-day? How can you draw a distinction?

My friends, the fathers who settled these colonies maintained that freedom was the gift of God; and they meant what they said when they used the words, that "all men are equal" and that "these colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent colonies." What had they been saying to George III in the beginning of the Revolution? Sir, when we signed this document, we expatriated ourselves and left our allegiance behind us. They said, "We came here as men with God-given rights to establish a government for ourselves, and we did not bring your government with us; we owe you nothing."

They said that the right of expatriation was a natural right; and they said, besides, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, and that they have certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—rights that can not be transferred to king or any other government; natural-born, God-given rights, as it is said in the Declaration of Independence.

Therefore they said they were free and ought to be free by God's gift and not by the gift of any crown. So we say of the people of Cuba, maintaining our own faith and applying it to the people of Cuba, they, too, are equal with us. They, too, have the same inalienable rights that we have—a right to life and to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness. We say, besides, that governments are instituted among men, not inherited.

Crowns do not descend by inheritance in this country; kings do not rule here by divine right; but we said, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That is our creed. We apply it to Cuba. We say there can be no just government in Cuba except it comes from the consent of the governed, and it is for that reason that I have been standing here for two years fighting for the right of the people of Cuba to govern themselves, to prescribe their own mode of government and enforce it among themselves.

In the criticism made by the House of Representatives about the declaration "are free" instead of "ought to be free," they simply turn their backs upon the history of their own country—turn their backs upon the doctrine of our own country that men are born free. Natural rights, this declaration of independence says—natural rights, among which are the right to life, the right to liberty, the right to pursue happiness.

Mr. President, it is a very small thing at a supreme moment like this for the House of Representatives to criticise the creed written in the Declaration of Independence. That which the committee have surrendered to them is much more important, and I am in favor of the course suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], to insist that we will not abandon our creed even in this supreme moment.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the motion may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. And ask for a conference.

Mr. DAVIS. And ask for a further conference, I suggest.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. No.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the motion by adding the words "and ask for a further conference."

Mr. STEWART. Let the request for it come from them.

Mr. MASON. I did not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves to amend the motion by adding that the Senate shall ask for a further conference with the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not an amendable motion. We would have to divide it if it were a joint motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not understand that was the motion.

Mr. MASON. It was not the motion, but it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point of order is that it is not amendable. You must first put the question——

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not an amendable motion, I think.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the point of order be decided.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia has been recognized.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the report of our conferees and their statement of the considerations which actuated their disagreement make our last stage even worse than the first, and that there is nothing at this juncture the Senate can do with any regard to its conviction, and the grave reasons which they have assigned for their conviction, but to insist upon their disagreement with the House. It would seem from the report of our conferees that all recognitions of freedom are to be erased from the resolution should we ratify what has been done by the House.

I have read, Mr. President, with great care and respect, and I will add with my entire concurrence, the admirable statement of the doctrine of intervention made by the national Republican party in the last campaign. In that document I read these words:

> We reassert the Monroe doctrine in its full extent, and we reaffirm the right of the United States to give the doctrine effect by responding to the appeal of any American state for friendly intervention in case of European encroachment.

There are two leading American thoughts in that resolution, and I care not who uttered them, whether it were the Republican convention or the Democratic convention or the Populist convention, they contain a doctrine upon which every American may stand, for it is part of our common heritage which no party can appropriate to the exclusion of any other portion of the American people. Those two thoughts which are engraved in that statement of the national Republican party are, first, that the intervention of the United States should be in response to the appeal of an American state, which state in this instance is the Republic of Cuba.

The second thought is that the intervention so made in response to the appeal of the American state must be "friendly intervention," not "hostile constraint," and must be intervention in behalf of that state against encroachment. All of these encroachments against human nature which have been recited by those who have been witnesses of the tyranny of Spain in Cuba have been aimed at and have fallen upon the Cuban Republic and its adherents, and so history written in blood and tears has made up the awful case against which the national Republican convention directed its American anathema in its platform.

Time and again have we recognized in so far as we might the existence of a republican government in Cuba. The House of Representatives two years ago and the Senate alike recognized that republic and asked that belligerent rights should be accorded to it. In this Congress the Senate has repeated that opinion and passed resolutions recognizing the republic and according to it, not, indeed, independence in the family of nations, but those belligerent rights which can only be predicated of government in war.

Yea, Mr. President, unconsciously to these authors, perhaps, and yet with as precise and potent legal effect, the resolutions which came over to this body from the House of Representatives, and I might also add the message of the President, do themselves informally recognize a Cuban Government. Why do I say this? Because "war" is a term of international law. It can not be predicated in a legal sense or in an international sense of anything else but government. If two men fight upon a street, it is a mere individual quarrel. If a mob or riot attack an arsenal or railroad bridge or what not, they do not rise above the dignity of mob or riot or emeute or insurrection or whatsoever else you may call it. They are trespassers and lawbreakers—no more.

But no matter what they destroy, no matter what may be their numbers, nothing that they may do is war. War is that which can only be carried on by organization, and the only organization which can conduct war, according to the municipal law of the United States and according to universal international law, is government. It may not be an independent government; it may be a government which is denied the right of independence, but it is de facto government and as such entitled to certain respect, and having annexed to its de facto character certain international rights and privileges.

Mr. President, in the resolutions originally passed by the House of Representatives and in the message of the President we are told that it is necessary for the United States to intervene in order to stop war. War can not be stopped unless war exists. War can not exist unless two governments are engaged in combat, and although it is sought by the resolutions which are commended to us to ignore the Cuban government, it is upon a doctrine which has been conceded in the resolutions and in the papers submitted to us. It is vain after this recital to contend that Congress can not recognize a government, and that it is an exclusive Executive prerogative.

Mr. President, it is essential, as many of us believe, in order to put this Government in its best attitude toward its own institutions and toward the civilized world, to persevere in that line which is laid down by the National Republican Convention and which is in harmony with the American thought upon this subject, to relieve us of domestic and international complications, and to prevent, as pointed out heretofore by the honorable Senator from Alabama and to-night by other Senators upon this floor, the inevitable consequence of having those in Cuba who have appealed for intervention put in common line and attitude with our Spanish enemies.

War dissolves the bonds of society and draws a dead line between all the citizens of one country and all the citizens of another. The moment that the United States declares war, or that which is the equivalent of war, it ranks Spain and all her subjects, and the Cubans in common with them, upon the other side of the line of battle, and ranks all Americans upon this side of the line. It is, therefore, in my judgment, and I reach that judgment with regret, for it is my earnest desire to agree with my colleagues here, necessary for the Senate to insist upon its disagreement. If we do not in some form recognize the Cuban Government, we leave it in identity with the Spanish oppressor.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to use the language of an ancient lover of liberty, "I do not rise to waste the night in words." I desire to state—and if I be wrong in my statement, those of you who are more learned in parliamentary affairs will state it correctly to me—the parliamentary situation.

The House of Representatives sends to the Senate of the United States a joint resolution familiar to all, which was amended by the Senate of the United States in preamble and resolution, taking out all of the House preamble and inserting all of the Senate preamble, and taking out all of the House resolution and inserting all the Senate resolution, and, as a matter of parliamentary fiction, sending back to the House of Representatives the Senate joint resolution as an amendment to the House joint resolution. The House concur in all of the Senate amendments save two, whereby they strike out the words "are, and," taking out the mere bouquet, the mere sentiment expressed, which could not in any way in a preamble interfere with the Executive function, and also striking out what is known to this body as the Turpie amendment.

I understood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to state that if we agreed to a conference, upon his information and judgment we would recede from the material amendment known as the Turpie amendment, whereby formally we declared in a legislative way for the independence of the Republic of Cuba, leaving only a mere suggestion to the Executive in the preamble that the Cuban people are and ought to be free. In other words, Mr. President, the friends of the Turpie amendment upon this side of the Chamber were willing to sacrifice, in order to secure immediate action, the material suggestion which was claimed interfered with Presidential prerogative, in order to have speedy action, as was suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who now occupies the chair.

I wish to be understood in my vote, and I wish to be understood in this particular: While I have spoken often upon this question, I have not taken one minute of this body's time since the committee report came before it until now, and I take this moment in order that I may state, as every Senator ought to have the right to state, his position and his intention before the vote is taken. I am informed now by the Senator from Ohio that he was misinformed as to the intention; that the things he had a right to presume upon he had been misled about, and that the committee of conference on the part of the House of Representatives, whom we had supposed, if we yielded to them all the substance of independence, would yield to us at least the poor privilege of saying that the people of Cuba are and ought to be free, would not yield it.

The night is late, and the hour is late, and the parliamentary situation is this: We, friends of Cuba as we have been, without arrogating to ourselves a divine thought or claiming a monopoly of human sympathy, the men who have fought and pleaded in this Chamber for recognition even of the belligerent rights of the struggling men, are told in this late hour that the Administration and the power of the country say to us that we shall not have even the poor privilege of paying our compliments to the struggling men of Cuba; that we must even abandon the movement and the hope that food and shelter and protection shall go to the suffering men, women, and children of Cuba. We must abandon even every thought of it, or they will withhold from the concentrados the bread and meat which are to come from the generous heart of the American people.

Understand me, Mr. President. This is the notice they serve upon us, and this is the notice I am here to answer, "That you shall not have intervention unless you concede to the technical demands of the Administration." We have conceded it. We have yielded it, and I am here to yield more. My vote is to be given to you and your demands, and with my vote I give you notice that I shall watch the outcome of events. Understand me, Mr. President. The notice you serve on us is this: The ten concentrados on the Republican side shall not even have a ship to carry food to the women and children who are starving; we will lock you in deadlock. That is the notice served upon us by the Senator from Maine. We will refuse to the dying children even the bread to keep life unless you give up your ideas.

We gave up our ideas. We surrendered at 4 o'clock upon the proposition that we might have a chance to express in this resolution the hope that Cuba and the people of Cuba might be free. You have denied us that by your conference report. The powers that control, the powers that manipulate, the men who pull the strings, have driven us to the position where you say to us who have stood for this proposition, "You must abandon even an expression of sympathy for Gomez and his army, to get bread for the women and children who are dying in Cuba;" and I say to you now, "I do not honor you, I do not care for you, I capitulate; but as I love my children I do not surrender." [Applause in the galleries].

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MASON. I beg pardon of my friends in the Senate; I have but few, and I care for less at this stage of the game.

I wish you to understand me. While I shall vote for any proposition that sends a ship afloat and opens the guns and takes food to the women and children, remember that while I have capitulated I have not surrendered even one iota of the doctrine which I have preached from the pulpit in this corner of the Chamber. I enlisted in this fight for the women and children who were being murdered. I have made my fight in public and in private, in open brawl upon the street, and in private contact with men of brains. I have met you. You have conquered me. I quit to-night upon this proposition; I surrender and vote with you; but I give you notice that to-morrow morning I will try the remainder of this case, and if God lives and right is right, independence of Cuba will be adopted in the Senate before I pass from this sphere of life.

Mr. President, I am done. I would have been more effective if I had been more quiet, possibly, but I have spoken what I have felt. I have rested upon the thought that in the final contact and the final settlement the men who control affairs in the conference committee would give us a chance at least to pay an honest tribute to Gomez and the 30,000 men who have fought for the independence of Cuba. I said to you the other day, before this report was made, that I hoped for intervention and independence, but that if I could not get intervention and independence I would take one or the other, as you gave it to me. You are in power. You have the votes. I am going to vote with you. I am going to give you intervention to-night, and to-morrow I shall ask independence, and I will fight you as I have from this side until you give it to the people of Cuba.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, perhaps I can assist the Senator from Illinois a little. Possibly somebody else may like this suggestion. I suggest a resolution in this form:

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America will vindicate the right of the people of Cuba to be a free and independent state.

That is what we mean, and it is not yet in the resolutions.

Mr. ALLEN. Make it "a republic."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to inquire what is the question before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WHITE. Let the amendment be declared from the desk, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That a further conference be asked with the House of Representatives, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is a very small minority——

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Chair if the pending question is not on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. That the Senate insist upon its amendment without a conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] moved to amend that motion by adding to it "and that the Senate ask for a further conference to be appointed by the Chair."

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt that it is in order; but after it is adopted, then the question will be clearly divisible.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is clearly divisible.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is a very small minority in this Chamber which, in spite of adverse criticism, has consumed exceedingly little time; and as a member of that minority I regret the consumption of time of which I have been this evening an unwilling witness. I trust that this matter may soon be brought to a conclusion. Dissenting most radically, as I do, from the majority sentiment of this Chamber, I yet appreciate in the presence of the great crisis that is about upon us, and is indeed upon us now, that we ought to solve this matter with but little disputation. I trust that the question now before the Senate may be soon presented and will be early determined. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORMAN. I supposed the Senator from Minnesota made that motion, did he not?

Mr. COCKRELL. That was withdrawn.

Mr. FORAKER. I think there is practically an agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the other motion being put.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the demand for the yeas and nays will not be pressed upon this question, but that we shall take the vote viva voce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the call for the yeas and nays? In the opinion of the Chair there is not.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that there is no occasion for a vote by the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; let us vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. SPOONER and others. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a viva voce vote on the first part of the question.

Mr. ALLEN. After the Chair stated the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the proposed amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Missouri said he did not care, and now the question is whether the entire proposition is to be put as amended or whether it is to be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair put very distinctly the proposition made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLEN. By itself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By itself.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me remind the Chair that the Senator from Missouri accepted the amendment, as I understood him.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] moves that the Senate ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. WOLCOTT, and others. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is detained at home by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. MURPHY'S name was called). The Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] is absent. He stands paired with his colleague [Mr. PLATT of New York]. If present, I am informed that the senior Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH (when Mr. WETMORE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. In consequence of the statement made by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], I was about to announce that I would withdraw my vote, but I will let it stand for the present, in order that I may transfer my pair to some one else.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and I suggest that the Senator from Georgia transfer his pair to him.

Mr. BACON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and will let my vote in the negative stand.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague is not able to be present to-night.

Mr. PLATT of New York (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], who, I am informed, has not voted. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEAR. As I stated, I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], who is absent, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the affirmative). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea." I withdraw my vote accordingly.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I understand by an arrangement announced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], his pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has been transferred to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], with whom I was paired, and so I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Faulkner,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Hoar,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quay,
Carter,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Sewell,
Clark,	Gear,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Mason,	Spooner,
Davis,	Gray,	Morrill,	Warren,
Deboe,	Hale,	Penrose,	Wilson.
Elkins,	Hanna,	Perkins,

NAYS—40.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Harris,	Mantle,	Roach,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Mills,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Mitchell,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Kenney,	Money,	Turley,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Nelson,	Turner,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Clay,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—10.

Morgan,	Smith,	Walthall,	White.
Murphy.	Tillman,	Wellington,
Platt, N. Y.	Vest,	Wetmore,

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM and others. Oh, no!

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not insist on that motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Montana will withdraw the motion. If he does so I will move that the Senate take a recess for one hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move that the Senate take a recess for one hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Lindsay,	Pettus,
Allen,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Faulkner,	McBride,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Quay,
Baker,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Roach,
Berry,	Gear,	Mallory,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Martin,	Shoup,
Butler,	Gray,	Mason,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Hanna,	Mills,	Stewart,
Cannon,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Carter,	Harris,	Money,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Turley,
Chilton,	Heitfeld,	Morrill,	Turner,
Clark,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	White,
Cullom,	Kenney,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Davis,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In answer to the roll call 76 Senators have responded. A quorum is present.

WAR WITH SPAIN.

Mr. MORGAN. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it may be reported at the desk and laid upon the table, subject to be called up at some other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the introduction of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 153) declaring war against Spain, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the United States of America, without fault on their part, being involved in hostilities with Spain, on account of the war that is being waged by that power against the people of Cuba, the conduct of which is inhuman in its character; has long disturbed the peace of the United States; has greatly injured our commerce; has violated the rights of our people, guaranteed by treaties; has destroyed their lives by assassination and their property with the torch, and has culminated in the loss of the lives of our officers and sailors through the criminal destruction of the battle ship Maine while it was at anchor in the bay of Havana, on a visit of courtesy; and also for other well-known causes:

First. The Congress of the United States declares that a state of war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government and people of the United States.

The foregoing declaration does not apply to the government of the Republic of Cuba, or to the people who are included in its citizenship.

Third. The President of the United States is required to use the land and naval forces of the United States in executing and maintaining this declaration of war until an honorable peace is concluded and the future safety and welfare of the people of the United States and the independence of Cuba are secured by the expulsion of the armed forces and the dominion of the Spanish Government from the Island of Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table, in the absence of objection.

FORT MAGINNIS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 161) providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the request presented by me for the consideration of the bill, in view of the fact that I observe that the messenger from the House of Representatives has appeared in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana withdraws the request. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
April 18, 1898.

Resolved, That the House further insist upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution 233, authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate accede to the request for a further conference, and that the committee be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference, and asks that the Chair appoint the conferees. Senators in favor of the motion will say "aye"——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for a division of that question.

Mr. GRAY and others. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLEN. Senators say "Oh, no;" but I say yes. I do ask for a division of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to a division if he requests it.

Mr. ALLEN. Senators can outvote me if they desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the first part of the proposition, that the Senate agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives. The question is on that branch of the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, Mr. President, so far as the other question is concerned, when it is before the Senate I desire to amend it by offering a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate now.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to amend it by offering a substitute that we proceed under the rule to the selection of conferees.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, if I understand the question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ALLEN. I do.

Mr. MASON. I rise to ask a question for information. If I understand the pending question, it is that the Chair shall appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; but I suppose that is subject to amendment like any other motion or any other proposition that is before the Senate.

Mr. President, the rules point out specifically and plainly the course the Senate shall pursue in a case of this kind. I offer my amendment in the same manner that I offered a similar amendment this afternoon, not because I have any doubt in my mind as to the fairness of the presiding officer—I do not want to be put in the light of reflecting upon his fairness—but because the rules require the Senate, unless unanimous consent to the contrary is given, to proceed to select the conferees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, unless otherwise ordered. That is, the rules require that the Senate shall make the selection. There is no discretion about that.

Mr. GRAY. "Unless otherwise ordered."

Mr. ALLEN. I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware that "otherwise ordered" means that we can select an agent to do our work for us.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that that clause of the rule, "unless otherwise ordered," clearly points out the fact that it is competent for the Senate to order the business to be done in any other way it sees fit, and that in placing it in the hands of the presiding officer the Senate has ordered it otherwise than is provided for in the first clause of the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; that is not it. The rule says that we shall proceed by ballot unless otherwise ordered. The words "otherwise ordered" do not mean that the Senate shall abandon its power to make the selection to some other person or delegate that power. It means that the Senate shall proceed by ballot to discharge a duty imposed upon it, unless it sees fit to adopt some other means, namely, by a yea-and-nay vote, or by a resolution, or in some other form, to select the conferees. The duty imposed on us can not be delegated unless we see fit to abandon all canons for construction or unless we see fit, as we do ordinarily in unimportant matters, to let the Chair make the appointment.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ALLEN. I do.

Mr. MASON. If the motion is carried, made by the Senator from Minnesota, that the conferees be appointed by the Chair, is it not otherwise ordered in the language of the rules of the Senate?

Mr. ALLEN. Not in contradistinction to taking it by ballot. "Otherwise ordered" means in some other way than by ballot.

Mr. GRAY. That is some other way.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Delaware says it is in another way, but that does not cover up the fact that we have no power to delegate the selection of the conferees by the Chair. We have no power to take that out of our own hands; the words "otherwise ordered" do not go to that extent.

Mr. SPOONER. If that were true, then we would have to do it by ballot, and in no other way.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. We can do it by resolution. We can do it by a vive voce vote. We can do it in a variety of ways. That is what those words mean, if they mean anything.

Mr. President, I realize as fully, I trust, as any Senator here the necessity and desirability of concluding this important matter as speedily as possible. I trust I am not insensible of the surroundings or of the gravity of the situation or the importance of the question; and yet, Mr. President, I am not prepared to surrender my convictions or my vote unless I am compelled to do so. I am not in an attitude to surrender without being captured, and I am not in a frame of mind to be captured without resistance, regardless of what frame of mind some other Senators may be in.

Mr. President, if we were right last Thursday and Friday and Saturday and until 6 o'clock to-night, we are right now. If when the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] made his speech a day or two ago he was right, then he is right now. Right is right, and time and circumstances do not convert right into wrong or wrong into right. Has anything been offered by way of argument on this subject to change the minds of Senators? Have any new facts been presented? Not a thing.

Mr. GRAY. The disagreement of the House is a new fact.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. There has been an argument offered that has appealed to many gentlemen in this Chamber, men who have stood with you in all this contest.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry they do not stand with me now.

Mr. MASON. The proposition has been made to your colleagues in this fight that you shall not even have the privilege of carrying the food to the women and children and the starving people of Cuba unless you relinquish a certain political demand in your resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. And the Senator from Illinois surrenders to duress.

Mr. MASON. I do not surrender. I capitulate and serve notice that to-morrow the fight is open again. You can enjoy my right, if you are willing.

Mr. ALLEN. Some time ago we heard the Senator's argument—mañana, mañana, to-morrow, to-morrow.

Mr. MASON. We want what we can get to-day. We will make the fight for more to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; if the Senator from Illinois was right a week or two ago, he was right up to 6 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. MASON. I am right to-night, as I was then.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope so.

Mr. MASON. I am for the same proposition, but I do not refuse half a loaf because I can not get the full loaf. I will fight for the other half of the loaf to-morrow, and you will fight with me.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I will keep on fighting with the Senator as far as he is right, and against him when he is wrong.

No, Mr. President, there is no excuse. Every Senator here understands and the world understands that there is an ulterior motive underlying this contest. Does any man suppose for one moment that the President of the United States is standing on the question whether he or Congress has the constitutional right to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba? I do not characterize that too strongly when I say it is a subterfuge. There is no real contest on that question. If it were a mere question of propriety, the President would waive it.

It has been a contested question in the history of this Government from its organization down to the present time. In my humble judgment, which controls my action, there can be no doubt that Congress, in conjunction with the President of the United States, is charged with the duty and the responsibility of recognizing the existence of a foreign state. I am willing to take the judgment of great lawyers upon some questions, but I am not willing to be driven from that position by the most eminent gentlemen in this Chamber or outside of it.

What is it, then, that is hidden beneath this controversy or back of this controversy? Sir, it is nothing but an organized attempt on the part of certain American and European capitalists to saddle on the government that may be erected in the Island of Cuba an indebtedness amounting to over $500,000,000. Senators may pooh-pooh it and deny, it is nevertheless a living truth, and we will not have adjourned this session of Congress and gone to our homes two weeks until that fact will be made to appear to every citizen of this country.

Now, Mr. President, we are to have a surrender. One Senator said the changed circumstances were that the House had insisted. If the House is right, we ought to surrender. If the House is right, we ought never to have taken the position we have taken for the last week. If the House is wrong, is that any reason why we should be wrong or any excuse for our being wrong? That may satisfy the judgment and the consciences of some gentlemen. It does not satisfy mine.

We have had some experience here to-night. I speak and desire to speak in the most respectful language I am capable of coining or collecting in connection with the appointment of conferees. A conference committee presupposes the selection of gentlemen, if they can be found, who have not foreclosed the question to be submitted to them, who are in a judicial frame of mind, who are willing to take it up and consider it and debate it in all its different phases until they reach a conclusion such as a court ought to reach after considering evidence.

We were informed while we were debating that question that the House conferees were already out here somewhere waiting for the Senate conferees, standing no doubt out in the lobby of the Senate waiting for the Senate conferees to meet them; and, sir, in the nature of things the conferees could not have been in session when they did get together to exceed half an hour. The honorable Senator from Ohio says—I do not propose to quote his language, but simply give the substance of it—they had been together but a moment or two, or at least a few moments, until all attempt to sustain the Senate amendment recognizing the existence of the Cuban Republic was abandoned by the Senate conferees.

Two Senators, a majority of the Senate conferees, who had opposed the adoption of the amendment were placed in judgment on that amendment, to decide whether it should remain a part of the resolution or not. The honorable chairman of the committee was opposed to it. We know that. He did not pretend to secrete the fact that he was opposed to it. The distinguished Senator from Alabama was opposed to it and addressed the Senate against it. He did not secrete or attempt to secrete the fact. How do you expect to obtain a free and full conference from the House of Representatives when they know Senators are falling over one another to get an opportunity to surrender to them? Is the same farce to be put on the boards again within two hours from the time it first appeared?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ALLEN. I do.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator ought to state that the senior Senator from Alabama on that committee supported the views of the Senate to the end.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, the junior Senator from Alabama is altogether too sensitive. I am not saying anything at all derogatory to his colleague. He is a gentleman for whom I have the highest conceivable respect and about whom I expect to speak in language as polite as my poor vocabulary will permit me. But I submit, of course, to the interruption.

Are we to have this scene over again? Are we to go to the world and say seriously that we made an honest struggle to maintain this amendment? The world will not believe us. Why, sir, there is not a man, woman, or child so obtuse between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans who will believe we were in earnest if we carry on this farce any further. There is a clear majority in the Senate in favor of the amendment.

Why fritter away our opportunity and the force and effect of the amendment by permitting the appointment of conferees who are hostile to it? Is it a matter of delicacy with us? Am I to abandon my sense of right and my conviction of duty because some gentleman may say I had reflected upon the fairness of the presiding officer? No, sir; I will not do that. I will not abandon my sense of duty and my conviction because some man may elevate his nose at me at an angle of 45 degrees and sneeringly say I have reflected upon somebody. I can stand such reflections. But I never could stand my own consciousness of abandoning my duty at a critical moment, and I never would undertake to explain it.

Now, what is the condition here? We said here a little over an hour ago that we did not want any further conference with the House, and now we are asked to confer with them again, and I suppose we are to send out conferees again as we sent them out an hour or two ago. We carried that motion by simply 1 majority. Are we to repeat this farce? Are we to finally surrender to the dictates of the House and the power, whatever it may be, behind the House, or that surrounds it and influences it? Are we to submit to a majority held there in the hands of one man, who do not dare to carry out their honest convictions?

No, Mr. President, the Senate would stain itself with insincerity if it pursued a course of that kind any further. Why not say to the world, We stand for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, and if any other branch of this Government does not see fit to accept independence and recognize it, let that branch of the Government accept the responsibility to the people of the United States?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to amend the motion by striking out the words "by the Chair" and inserting instead thereof the words "by ballot."

Mr. ALLEN. On that question let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and therefore I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. He not being present I withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is unavoidably detained. Were he present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the negative). My colleague [Mr. MANTLE] was unexpectedly called from the Chamber a few moments ago and requested me before leaving to protect him in any vote that was cast during his absence. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I will stand paired with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Harris,	Martin,	Roach,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Mills,	Stewart,
Cannon,	Kenney,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Money,	Turley,
Clay,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Turner,
Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Pettus,	Turpie.

NAYS—40.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Allison,	Foraker,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Baker,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quay,
Berry,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gear,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mason,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Gray,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hale,	Morrill,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Wilson,
Davis,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Hawley,	Penrose,
Elkins,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Fairbanks,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.

NOT VOTING—12.

Bacon,	Murphy,	Tillman.	Wellington,
Carter,	Platt, N. Y.	Vest,	Wetmore,
Mantle,	Smith,	Walthall,	White.

So the amendment to the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints as the conferees the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

RECESS.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate take a recess for one hour.

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend by making the time thirty minutes.

Mr. MASON. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate take a recess for thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 11 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate take a further recess until 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 12 o'clock, midnight, at which hour it reassembled.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent No. 20694 to Mary J. Day, inventor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 175) for a survey of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wis., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 227) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CARTER presented a petition of Butte City Division, No. 294, Order of Railway Conductors, of South Butte, Mont., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of Division No. 369, Order of Railway Conductors, of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Third Presbyterian Church of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Third Presbyterian Church of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes when imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Third Congregational Church of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEWELL presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Prudential Insurance Company of America, of Newark, N. J., expressing their admiration for the exalted patriotism displayed by the President in regard to war with Spain, and, in the event of war, pledging their support to the Government both morally and financially; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Grand Lodge, Independent Order of Mechanics, of the State of New Jersey, praying that the Government grant belligerent rights to the Cuban patriots, and extending sympathy to the families of those who met their deaths by the explosion of the U. S. battle ship Maine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Jersey City, N. J., indorsing the action of the President and urging Congress to rigidly and thoroughly investigate the matter of the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine, and tendering a regiment of infantry to the Government in the event of war with Spain; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the committee on applied Christianity of the Northern New Jersey Congregational conference, of Nutley, N. J., praying for the ratification of the arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Pennington, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Pennington, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Pennington, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4110) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the location and satisfaction of outstanding military bounty land warrants and certificates of location, under section 3 of the act approved June 2, 1858," asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3963) to permit certain parties to intervene in the equity cause of the United States against Morris and others, pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4431) to define and prescribe the duties of the officers of the Inspector-General's Department of the Army, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. MASON (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m., Tuesday, April 19, 1898). I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

Several SENATORS. No! No!

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate can be considered in constructive recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MASON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock and 25 minutes a. m.

The motion was rejected.

After some little delay,

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock and 24 minutes a. m.

The motion was rejected.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., Tuesday, April 19, 1898). Mr. President, on behalf of the committee of conference I submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 283) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1, in line 1, striking out the words "are, and."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, in line 2, to strike out all after the word "independent" to and including the word "Island," in line 4; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the resolution omitting in line 2 thereof the words "and Republic;" and agree to the same.

C. K. DAVIS,
J. B. FORAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to disagree to the conference report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that we first have the resolution read as it would stand if amended by the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. DAVIS. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the chairman of the committee explain in the main to us what the agreement is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it not be better to have the joint resolution read as it would stand if the report were agreed to?

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read, and then afterwards, if it be necessary, I will explain the report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I insist upon my motion to disagree to the conference report and to further insist upon the disagreement of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are called. Is the call sustained?

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to raise the question of order that my motion on the adoption of the report is first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mine was certainly made first, beyond any question.

Mr. GEAR. A motion to agree takes precedence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair immaterial what the form of the motion is. One is that the conference report be agreed to, and the other that it be disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The motion is to bring the two Houses together. That is the first motion in order which is an agreement.

Mr. HOAR. That is perfectly well settled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Both motions are before the Senate. It seems to the Chair that the best way to take the vote will be on the adoption or rejection of the conference report.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. MASON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in order that the action of each Senator may be properly understood, I desire to state my understanding of the effect of the vote we are now about to take. It is simply to record the position of each Senator upon the particular amendment which is affected by the conference report, to wit, the amendment known as the Turpie amendment. In other words, while all of the resolution was read to-night, the vote to be cast has no reference whatever to any part of the resolution, except such parts as are in issue between the two Houses.

Mr. FORAKER. The vote, I suppose, will cover the proposition to restore the words "are, and."

Mr. BACON. Of course. I understand that, but the object I have in making the statement is that as the entire resolutions were read it might without suggestion appear that the vote which we cast is far-reaching enough to include the entire resolutions. I desired to make the suggestion in order that there might be no misunderstanding that the vote simply relates to the particular amendments which are in issue, or rather in difference between the two Houses.

Mr. GRAY. As I understand it, we are about to vote now upon the report made to the Senate by the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate. They have reported an agreement with the House conferees. Those who vote "yea" will vote to sustain the action of the conferees of the Senate in agreeing with the conferees of the House as to a proposition upon which both the Senate and the House may come together.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The joint resolution as passed by the Senate went from the Senate to the House. It was passed by the House in exactly the same terms that it passed the Senate, except that the two words "are and" and the provision recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba were stricken out. By the agreement of the conferees the words "are and" are agreed to be left exactly as they were in the joint resolution when it went from the Senate to the House.

The joint resolution has, therefore, passed both the Senate and the House, and no part of it is in controversy on the conference report before us except the one item as to whether we shall recede from our declaration in favor of the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

The sole question left is whether the Senate will agree to the conference agreement which proposes that the Senate shall agree to the action of the House in striking out the provision for the independence of the Republic of Cuba. Those of us who believe that we ought not to recognize the Republic of Cuba and that the House was right in striking that out ought to vote for the report of the conference committee. Those of us who believe that the Senate was right in providing for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, it seems to me, are compelled to vote "nay" on agreeing to the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the report be agreed to? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. By consent I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and vote "yea."

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. GORMAN'S name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is absent from the Senate this evening, asked me to state that he is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If the Senator from Maryland were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. And the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] would vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MURPHY]. I understand that he is detained at home by illness. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative.) I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is detained from the Senate by sickness. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will announce in this connection that if my colleague [Mr. WETMORE] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. I have a general pair with that Senator. I therefore withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Baker,	Foraker,	McBride,	Quay,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Gear,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Clark,	Gray,	Morrill,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hale,	Nelson,	Wilson,
Davis,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Elkins,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.

NAYS—26.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Roach,
Bate,	Harris,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Mitchell,	Turley,
Caffery,	Jones, Nev.	Money,	Turner,
Cannon,	Kenney,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	White.
Clay,	McEnery,	Pettus,

NOT VOTING—12.

Gorman,	Murphy,	Thurston,	Walthall,
Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	Tillman,	Wellington,
Mills,	Smith,	Vest,	Wetmore.

So the report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ELKINS. I move that the Senate adjourn until the day after to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw it for the reason that a message should be sent to the House before adjournment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I raise the question of no quorum. It is necessary to keep a quorum here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Davis,	McMillan,	Rawlins,
Allen,	Elkins,	Mallory,	Roach,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Martin,	Spooner,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Stewart,
Bate,	Gear,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Berry,	Gray,	Money,	Thurston,
Butler,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Turley,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Turner,
Cannon,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Carter,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Warren,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	White,
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,	Wilson,
Clay,	Kenney,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	McBride,	Pritchard,
Cullom,	McEnery,	Proctor,
Daniel,	McLaurin,	Quay,

The VICE-PRESID ENT. Sixty-five Senators ave answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PASCO. If the theory is that the House can not act after the adjournment of the Senate, in order to avoid the inconvenience of staying here two or three hours longer, why can we not simply take a recess?

Mr. CULLOM. The message has gone to the other House.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Iowa suggests to me that as soon as the message is delivered we can adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., Tuesday, April 19). I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, April 19, 1898.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 18, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CUBA.

A message from the Senate being announced,

Mr. COX, its Secretary, said: I am directed by the Senate to inform the House that the Senate has passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, with certain amendments; in which it requests the concurrence of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the House, House resolution No. 233, with the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

Whereas the Government of Spain for three years past has been waging war on the Island of Cuba against a revolution by the inhabitants thereof without making any substantial progress towards the suppression of said revolution, and has conducted the warfare in a manner contrary to the laws of nations by methods inhuman and uncivilized, causing the death by starvation of more than 200,000 innocent noncombatants, the victims being for the most part helpless women and children, inflicting intolerable injury to the commercial interests of the United States, involving the destruction of the lives and property of many of our citizens, entailing the expenditure of millions of money in patrolling our coasts and policing the high seas in order to maintain our neutrality; and

Whereas this long series of losses, injuries, and burdens for which Spain is responsible has culminated in the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine in the harbor of Havana and in the death of 260 of our seamen;

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba; and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 16, 1898.

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the House of Representatives (H. Res. 233) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein," do pass with the following AMENDMENTS:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent—and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

[Applause]—

[Applause.]

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

[Applause.]

Strike out the preamble and insert:

"Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore."

Amend the title so as to read:

"Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people and Republic of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect."

[Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments to the joint resolution, with the amendment which I send to the desk; and on that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to concur in the Senate amendments to House joint resolution No. 233 with an amendment striking out in the first paragraph the words "are, and," and also the words "and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island;" so that the first paragraph of said Senate amendment will read as follows:

"First. That the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free and independent."

[Applause.]

Also amend the title of said joint resolution by striking out the words "and Republic."

Mr. DINGLEY. On that I move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine demands the previous question. The Chair will hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the Chair whether, pending the motion to concur with an amendment, it is in order to make a motion simply to concur?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that motion would be in order, but the pending motion precedes it.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the vote must first——

The SPEAKER. The vote must first be upon the motion to concur in the Senate amendments with the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to inquire whether it would be in order at this time for me to ask unanimous consent of the House to submit some remarks in antagonism to this motion, and whether it would be according to the rules for the House to give its permission if it desired to do so?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROMWELL. The Speaker having decided that the motion to concur would be in order, but that the previous motion to concur with an amendment takes precedence, I now wish to offer a motion to concur in the Senate amendments. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts the House will restrain itself.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the motion of the gentleman from Maine should prevail, the House would then never be brought to a vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL]?

The SPEAKER. If the House should concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, that would end the matter.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the only way——

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair desires to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. After I state it, if the Chair declares it is not a proper parliamentary inquiry, I will make no further insistence on it. Is the Chair content that I state it?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the gentleman may make any parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BAILEY. My parliamentary inquiry is this: That unless the motion of the gentleman from Maine is defeated, the House will never be permitted to come to a vote——

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, is that a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a proper form in which to put a parliamentary inquiry. The House must understand that the answer to a parliamentary inquiry is entirely optional with the presiding officer; that the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry or of answering it is to guide the House; and therefore the presiding officer must state the proposition as he understands it.

Mr. BAILEY. It was for the very purpose——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that if the motion of the gentleman from Maine should be agreed to, the matter will then go back to the Senate, the House having finished its part of the work.

Mr. BAILEY. But unless this is agreed to it will not preclude the House from taking a vote on the other proposition submitted by the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered the question as he understands it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Chair will permit me, I think the Chair has answered only a part of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has answered the question so that every member of the House can understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Chair has fairly and fully answered one part of the inquiry; but I simply desired, if possible, an answer to the other portion of it in order that the House might clearly understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered the parliamentary question submitted by the gentleman, and fully; and the Chair thinks that every member on the floor understands it.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio, on his motion to concur in the Senate amendment, had also demanded the previous question, would not that motion to concur then have taken precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Maine?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. SULZER. Then, if the Chair will permit me, I desire to call attention to page 354 of the Manual, holding to the contrary——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already answered the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. I wish to inquire, if the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is voted down, if it will not then be in order to move to concur in the Senate amendment and thereby bring the two Houses to an immediate agreement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that parliamentary inquiry has already been answered. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks the previous question——

Mr. LACEY. Before that, Mr. Speaker, permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. This proposition is to concur with an amendment, but does not deal with the preamble to the resolution. Now, I wish to know whether the adoption of that resolution would preclude us from making necessary corrections in the preamble of the resolution itself; for instance, whether there were 260 or 266 of our seamen lost by the destruction of the Maine? If we are to adopt this, we ought not be precluded from making the preamble state exact facts.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine demands the previous question and the gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays——

Mr. BAILEY. I did not desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask the yeas and nays on the motion for the previous question. I am entirely willing that that shall be ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not demand the yeas and nays.

The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Maine for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. There will be twenty minutes for debate under the rule on each side. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Maine to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and the House proceeded to divide.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 156, answered "present" 2, not voting 19; as follows:

YEAS—178.

Acheson,	Davidson, Wis.	Joy,	Quigg,
Adams,	Davison, Ky.	Kerr,	Ray,
Aldrich,	Dayton,	Ketcham,	Reeves,
Alexander,	Dingley,	Kirkpatrick,	Robbins,
Arnold,	Dolliver,	Knox,	Royse,
Babcock,	Dovener,	Kulp,	Russell,
Baker, Md.	Eddy,	Lacey,	Shannon,
Barham,	Ellis,	Landis,	Shattuc,
Barney,	Evans,	Lawrence,	Shelden,
Barrett,	Faris,	Linney,	Sherman,
Barrows,	Fischer,	Littauer,	Showalter,
Bartholdt,	Fletcher,	Loudenslager,	Smith, Ill.
Beach,	Foote,	Lovering,	Smith, S. W.
Belden,	Foss,	Low,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belford,	Fowler, N. J.	Lybrand,	Snover,
Belknap,	Gardner,	McCall,	Southard,
Bennett,	Gibson,	McCleary,	Southwick,
Bishop,	Gillet, N. Y.	McDonald,	Spalding,
Booze,	Gillett, Mass.	McEwan,	Sperry,
Boutell, Ill.	Graff,	McIntire,	Sprague,
Brewster,	Griffin,	Mahon,	Steele,
Broderick,	Grosvenor,	Marsh,	Stevens, Minn.
Brownlow,	Grout,	Mercer,	Stewart, N. J.
Brumm,	Grow,	Mesick,	Stewart, Wis.
Bull,	Hager,	Miller,	Stone, C. W.
Burleigh,	Hamilton,	Mills,	Stone, W. A.
Burton,	Harmer,	Minor,	Strode, Nebr.
Butler,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Sturtevant,
Cannon,	Heatwole,	Moody,	Tawney,
Capron,	Hemenway,	Morris,	Tayler, Ohio
Chickering,	Henderson,	Mudd,	Thorp,
Clark, Iowa	Henry, Conn.	Northway,	Tongue,
Clarke, N. H.	Henry, Ind.	Odell,	Updegraff,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hepburn,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Codding,	Hicks,	Otjen,	Walker, Mass.
Connell,	Hilborn,	Overstreet,	Walker, Va.
Connolly,	Hill,	Packer, Pa.	Wanger,
Corliss,	Hooker,	Parker, N. J.	Ward,
Cousins,	Hopkins,	Payne,	Weaver,
Crump,	Howard, Ala.	Pearce, Mo.	Weymouth,
Crumpacker,	Howe,	Pearson,	Williams, Pa.
Curtis, Kans.	Howell,	Perkins,	Yost,
Dalzell,	Hull,	Pitney,	Young, Pa.
Danford,	Hurley,	Prince,
Davenport,	Jenkins,	Pugh,

NAYS—156.

Adamson,	Davey,	Lanham,	Rixey,
Allen,	Davis,	Latimer,	Robb,
Bailey,	De Armond,	Lentz,	Robertson, La.
Baird,	De Graffenreid,	Lester,	Robinson, Ind.
Baker, Ill.	De Vries,	Lewis, Ga.	Sayers,
Ball,	Dinsmore,	Lewis, Wash.	Settle,
Bankhead,	Dockery,	Little,	Shafroth,
Barlow,	Dorr,	Livingston,	Shuford,
Bartlett,	Driggs,	Lloyd,	Simpson,
Bell,	Elliott,	Lorimer,	Sims,
Benner, Pa.	Ermentrout,	Loud,	Slayden,
Benton,	Fitzgerald,	Love,	Smith, Ky.
Bland,	Fitzpatrick,	McClellan,	Sparkman,
Bodine,	Fleming,	McCormick,	Stallings,
Botkin,	Fowler, N. C.	McCulloch,	Stark,
Bradley,	Fox,	McDowell,	Stephens, Tex.
Brantley,	Gaines,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Brenner, Ohio	Greene,	McRae,	Strowd, N. C.
Bromwell,	Griffith,	Maddox,	Sullivan,
Broussard,	Griggs,	Maguire,	Sulloway,
Brown,	Gunn,	Mahany,	Sulzer,
Brucker,	Handy,	Mann,	Sutherland,
Brundidge,	Hartman,	Marshall,	Swanson,
Burke,	Hay,	Martin,	Talbert,
Campbell,	Henry, Miss.	Maxwell,	Tate,
Carmack,	Henry, Tex.	Meekison,	Taylor, Ala.
Castle,	Hinrichsen,	Meyer, La.	Terry,
Catchings,	Howard, Ga.	Miers, Ind.	Todd,
Clardy,	Hunter,	Moon,	Underwood,
Clark, Mo.	Jett,	Newlands,	Vandiver,
Clayton,	Johnson, Ind.	Norton, Ohio	Vincent,
Cochran, Mo.	Johnson, N. Dak.	Norton, S. C.	Warner,
Colson,	Jones, Va.	Ogden,	Wheeler, Ala.
Cooney,	Jones, Wash.	Otey,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cooper, Tex.	Kelley,	Peters,	White, Ill.
Cooper, Wis.	King,	Pierce, Tenn.	Williams, Miss.
Cowherd,	Kleberg,	Rhea,	Wilson,
Cox,	Knowles,	Richardson,	Young, Va.
Cummings,	Lamb,	Ridgely,	Zenor.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Berry, Boutelle, Me.

NOT VOTING—12.

Barber,	Curtis, Iowa	Osborne,	Vehslage,
Bingham,	Fenton,	Powers,	Wadsworth,
Brewer,	Hitt,	Sauerhering,	White, N. C.
Brosius,	Kitchin,	Skinner,	Wilber.
Cranford.	McAleer,	Strait,

So the motion to concur with an amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague [Mr. STRAIT]; he is very ill in bed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the pairs.

Mr. BERRY. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]. I voted, and desire to withdraw my vote, and to vote "present." I desire to have the RECORD indicate that I would have voted in the negative had the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] been present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be withdrawn and his statement will appear in the RECORD.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. MCALEER.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa with Mr. STRAIT

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. HITT with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. POWERS with Mr. BARTLETT.

For this day:

Mr. WILBER with Mr. CRANFORD.

Mr. FENTON with Mr. BREWER.

Mr. BARBER with Mr. VEHSLAGE.

Mr. SAUERHERING with Mr. SKINNER.

Mr. BARTLETT. As announced, I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS]. On yesterday, after the passage of the resolution by the Senate, I saw the gentleman from Vermont, and got his permission to vote as I saw fit upon this resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," because I was in favor of the amendment of my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY], striking out the recognition of the existence of the so-called Republic of Cuba. As that amendment has prevailed by a majority that is not dependent upon my vote, and as I am strongly opposed to the remaining resolutions, but could not defeat them by voting with the Democrats, I withdraw my vote. I desire to be recorded "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his vote.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I request, in view of the importance of this vote, that it be recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order a recapitulation.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. SAUERHERING] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I desire to announce that if present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My colleague [Mr. FENTON] was suddenly called away on Saturday. He is probably on his way back. If he were here, he would vote "aye" upon this resolution.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. VEHSLAGE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say for the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. OSBORNE] that he was called to his home last Saturday. If he were present, he would vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was received with applause on the Republican side.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there has not been any opportunity for debate on the various concrete propositions which have been before the House recently on this Cuban matter, and inasmuch as the moving of the previous question by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] a few minutes ago and the action of the House in sustaining it prevented any individual expression of opinion on the matter, I ask, as one who believes that war with Spain is entirely unnecessary, and who antagonizes in toto all the propositions which have been before this House leading to such an event, that I be given time, not to exceed an hour, in which to submit some remarks to the House in support of my opinions.

Mr. ARNOLD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ARNOLD] objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to have the question put to the House, Mr. Speaker, when the House is quiet. I can hardly believe it possible when I desire to express myself in temperate language upon this subject, that any gentleman will object to my having an opportunity to do so.

Mr. PEARSON. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON] calls for the regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the demand for the regular order equivalent to an objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the gentleman will continue to notice he will gradually learn parliamentary procedure. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The CLERK. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if it is in order for the Speaker, in response to a respectful inquiry of a member of this House, to make such a reply as that?

The SPEAKER. Not to a respectful inquiry; no. [Great applause on the Republican side.] The House will be in order; and the Clerk will proceed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the Speaker intends to say that the inquiry——

A MEMBER. Regular order!

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). Which I made was not respectful?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker simply desires to rest his statement in the knowledge which the House has as to this fact.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BAILEY. Deliberately I desire to say if the Speaker intended to say——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BAILEY. I am in order. I denounce that statement of the Chair as false. If the Chair intended to make that statement—— [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. There is no difficulty about a question of fact before witnesses. The Clerk will proceed. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CLERK. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVILEGED QUESTION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before calling up anything from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I desire to rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It interests the whole House, so I trust I may have order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, upon Wednesday last, following the submission to the House of the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the Cuban resolutions, and while there was excitement and some confusion upon the floor, Mr. BRUMM of Pennsylvania, addressing Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, said——

Several MEMBERS. Order!

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been asking for order for some time, and hopes the House will grant order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. BRUMM of Pennsylvania, addressing Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, said:

If you say what I state is untrue, you lie.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We can not hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad to have order, but he can not compel order when disorder is participated in by a majority of the House. Will the House have the kindness to remain in order until this question of privilege is disposed of?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, as this question concerns not me, but every member of the House, I will begin anew; and inasmuch as I am submitting a question which has already been prepared, I read from the manuscript, so that there can be no misunderstanding.

Upon Wednesday last, following the submission to the House of the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the Cuban resolutions, and while there was excitement and some confusion upon the floor, Mr. BRUMM of Pennsylvania, addressing Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, said:

If you say what I state is untrue, you lie.

A personal encounter between these gentlemen immediately thereafter was prevented by the interference of other members and of the Sergeant-at-Arms. A meeting of a friend of each gentleman and a third member, called into conference with them, has since been held and the understanding and position of each explained. This discloses the fact that the use of the epithet by

Mr. BRUMM was based upon the supposition that Mr. BARTLETT had previously stated that a remark made by Mr. BRUMM was untrue; that Mr. BARTLETT was not aware that Mr. BRUMM had made such a remark, and was not addressing himself to Mr. BRUMM. With this understanding Mr. BRUMM desires to withdraw the epithet applied to Mr. BARTLETT, and each gentleman desires to apologize to the House for a breach of its rules. [Loud general applause.]

Mr. BRUMM addressed the Chair.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. BRUMM). Let it go.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, at the request of gentlemen around me to let the matter drop where it is, I am perfectly willing. I did not rise for the purpose of contradicting anything in the statement. I was going to repeat what had transpired. But it does seem to me, in the interest of all parties, not myself, that something should be said regarding the newspaper reports of the controversy.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. BRUMM). Let it drop.

Mr. BRUMM. I simply want to say, of course, I am willing——

Several MEMBERS. Let it drop.

Mr. BRUMM. I will let it drop where it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed. The gentleman from New York is recognized, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RAILROAD COMPANIES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present for consideration House bill 8349, granting additional powers to railroad companies created by laws of the United States and operating lines in the Indian Territory.

Mr. MCEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the best method of obtaining order is to facilitate the departure of members who have no interest in the pending matters. The Chair will therefore wait until members retire to the cloak room. [After a pause.] The Clerk will now report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall and may be lawful for any company created by or existing under the laws of the United States and operating a line of railroad, either wholly or partially, in the Indian Territory to enter into contracts for the use or lease of the railroad and other property of any railroad company whose line may now or hereafter connect with its line upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the respective companies, and to use and operate such road or roads in accordance with the terms of such contract or lease, but subject to the obligations imposed upon the respective companies by their charters or by the laws of the United States or of the State or Territory in which such leased road may be situate.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. SHERMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8349) granting additional powers to railroad companies created by laws of the United States and operating lines in the Indian Territory, respectfully report:

The provisions of this bill authorize railroad companies created by or existing under the laws of the United States and operating lines of railroad either wholly or partially in the Indian Territory to lease the railroad and other property of any railroad company whose line may now or hereafter connect with the line of such company, subject to the condition that the obligations imposed upon the respective companies by their charters, or by the laws of the United States or any State or Territory applicable thereto, shall govern in the use and operation of any such leased roads. It is further provided that the act shall not apply to companies whose lines are parallel or competing.

The authority thus proposed to be conferred is one that is almost universally exercisable throughout the United States, under the laws of the different States. The right has already been conferred by special acts of Congress to different railroad companies named in the acts, and its extension to companies created by an act of Congress would seem to be advisable and judicious, having in view the better results, both as to the service rendered to the public and the lowering of rates that generally follows the consolidation of one or more short lines into a larger system.

The committee therefore recommend passage of the bill.

Mr. MCEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like two or three minutes to speak on this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill will make some explanation of it.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ask if we are proceeding under unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The House is proceeding under a call of the committees, and the matter is legitimately before the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman from Kansas had followed the reading of the report, which is quite short, but comprehensive, it would need no explanation. It is a bill to permit railroad companies in the Indian Territory to enter into a lease with other roads where they are not parallel lines.

Mr. MCEWAN. I would like to ask what member of the committee made the report? I have not the report before me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I made the report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MCEWAN. May I inquire if the statement contained in this report, to wit: That the consolidation of railroads has heretofore resulted in cheapening the rates, is made on facts within his own knowledge? Does he state that as a fact within his own knowledge?

Mr. SHERMAN. If I state it in the report, I do.

Mr. MCEWAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to take issue on that. I say it has been my observation that the consolidation of roads, or the putting of several roads under one management, does not result in the lowering of rates at all, as a general proposition. We know as a matter of fact in the history of railroads that consolidating them, in the past ten years, has resulted in putting up rates. It does away with all elements of competition. One road tries to get the freight at a lower rate than another. This is not so when all roads are owned or managed by the same company. When under one management it enables that management to put up rates. For one, I want to express my opposition to any bill that enables roads to consolidate. I do not think it has been proven best for the interests of the country heretofore.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TODD) there were—ayes 68, noes 21.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. It is apparent to the Chair that there is no quorum present; therefore the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll. The doors will be closed and the Sergeant-at-Arms will send for members.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, what is this roll call on?

The SPEAKER. On the passage of the bill. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 76, answered "present" 15, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—102.

Acheson,	Davenport,	King,	Royse,
Adamson,	Davey,	Kirkpatrick,	Russell,
Aldrich,	Davison, Ky.	Kulp,	Settle,
Allen,	Dayton,	Lacey,	Shattuc,
Arnold,	Dingley,	Landis,	Shelden,
Babcock,	Dolliver,	Lawrence,	Sherman,
Barham,	Dorr,	Lewis, Ga.	Showalter,
Barrett,	Driggs,	Lewis, Wash.	Smith, Ill.
Barrows,	Eddy,	Linney,	Smith, S. W.
Bartholdt,	Ellis,	Littauer,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bartlett,	Ermentrout,	Little,	Snover,
Belden,	Evans,	Lorimer,	Southwick,
Belford,	Fischer,	Loud,	Spalding,
Belknap,	Foote,	Loudenslager,	Sperry,
Bell,	Gardner,	Low,	Sprague,
Bennett,	Gibson,	Lybrand,	Steele,
Bishop,	Gillet, N. Y.	McClellan,	Stevens, Minn.
Booze,	Gillett, Mass.	McDonald,	Stewart, N. J.
Bradley,	Griffin,	Maddox,	Stone, C. W.
Brenner, Ohio	Grosvenor,	Mahon,	Stone, W. A.
Broderick,	Grow,	Mann.	Strode, Nebr.
Brown,	Hager,	Marshall,	Sturtevant,
Brownlow,	Hamilton,	Mercer,	Sulloway,
Brucker,	Harmer,	Meyer, La.	Swanson,
Brumm,	Hay,	Miers, Ind.	Tawney,
Bull,	Heatwole,	Minor,	Tayler, Ohio
Burleigh,	Henderson,	Mudd,	Thorp,
Burton,	Henry, Conn.	Northway,	Tongue,
Butler,	Henry, Ind.	Odell,	Updegraff,
Campbell,	Hepburn,	Packer, Pa.	Van Voorhis,
Cannon,	Hicks,	Parker, N. J.	Ward,
Capron,	Hilborn,	Payne,	Warner,
Carmack,	Hill,	Pearce, Mo.	Weaver,
Chickering,	Hooker,	Pearson,	Weymouth,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hopkins,	Perkins,	Wheeler, Ala.
Connolly,	Howell,	Pitney,	Williams, Pa.
Corliss,	Hull,	Pugh,	Yost,
Cousins,	Hurley,	Quigg,	Young, Pa.
Crump,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Ray,	Young, Va.
Curtis, Kans.	Kerr,	Richardson,
Dalzell,	Ketcham,	Robbins,

NAYS—76.

Bailey,	Davis,	Lanham,	Robertson, La.
Baker, Ill.	De Armond,	Lents,	Robinson, Ind.
Ball,	De Graffenreid,	Lester,	Shafroth,
Bankhead,	De Vries,	McCulloch,	Shuford,
Berry,	Dockery,	McDowell,	Slayden,
Bland,	Fitzgerald,	McEwan,	Sparkman,
Bodine,	Fitzpatrick,	McRae,	Stark,
Botkin,	Fleming,	Maguire,	Stephens, Tex.
Brewer,	Gaines,	Maxwell,	Strowd, N. C.
Brundidge,	Greene,	Meekison,	Sullivan,
Burke,	Griffith,	Moon,	Sulzer,
Castle,	Handy,	Norton, Ohio	Sutherland,
Clark, Mo.	Henry, Miss.	Ogden,	Talbert,
Clayton,	Henry, Tex.	Olmsted,	Tate,
Cochran, Mo.	Hunter,	Otey,	Terry,
Cowherd,	Jett,	Pierce, Tenn.	Todd,
Cox,	Jones, Va.	Rhea,	Vincent,
Danford,	Kleberg,	Ridgely,	Wanger,
Davidson, Wis.	Lamb,	Robb,	Williams, Miss.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—15.

Benner, Pa.	Elliott,	Johnson, Ind.	Stallings,
Cooper, Tex.	Faris,	Moody,	Taylor, Ala.
Cooper, Wis.	Graff,	Simpson,	Underwood.
Dinsmore,	Griggs,	Sims,

NOT VOTING—102.

Adams,	Crumpacker,	Knox,	Powers,
Alexander,	Cummings,	Latimer,	Prince,
Baird,	Curtis, Iowa	Livingston,	Reeves,
Baker, Md.	Dovener,	Lloyd,	Rixey,
Barber,	Fenton,	Love,	Sauerhering,
Barlow,	Fletcher,	Lovering,	Sayers,
Barney,	Foss,	McAleer,	Shannon,
Beach,	Fowler, N. C.	McCall,	Skinner,
Benton,	Fowler, N. J.	McCleary,	Smith, Ky.
Bingham,	Fox,	McCormick,	Southard,
Boutell, Ill.	Grout,	McIntire,	Stewart, Wis.
Boutelle, Me.	Gunn,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Brantley,	Hartman,	Mahany,	Strait,
Brewster,	Hawley,	Marsh,	Vandiver,
Bromwell,	Hemenway,	Martin,	Vehslage,
Brosius,	Hinrichsen,	Mesick,	Wadsworth,
Broussard,	Hitt,	Miller,	Walker, Mass.
Catchings,	Howard, Ala.	Mills,	Walker, Va.
Clardy,	Howard, Ga.	Mitchell,	Wheeler, Ky.
Clark, Iowa	Howe,	Morris,	White, Ill.
Clarke, N. H.	Jenkins,	Newlands,	White, N. C.
Codding,	Jones, Wash.	Norton, S. C.	Wilber,
Colson,	Joy,	Osborne,	Wilson,
Connell,	Kelley,	Otjen,	Zenor.
Cooney,	Kitchin,	Overstreet,
Cranford,	Knowles,	Peters,

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts with Mr. CUMMINGS.

Mr. MOODY with Mr. MCMILLIN.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. TODD. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to insert the following amendment:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to parallel or competing lines.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make that motion. The bill has passed.

Mr. TODD. Then I ask unanimous consent to explain certain things in regard to this bill which are deceptive, by reason of which members have voted contrary to what would have been their judgment if the facts had been understood. The official report of the committee, which was just read to the House, states explicitly:

It is further provided [in the bill] that the act shall not apply to companies whose lines are parallel or competing.

Many members being unable to procure copies of the bill, and, assuming that the statement in the committee report was true, voted for the bill. I showed a copy to the chairman of the committee, and he expressed surprise that it had been omitted. If the bill is allowed to pass without this provision, it will be the most stupendous outrage ever perpetrated upon the people of this country, as it will lead to indiscriminate pooling and consolidating.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks consent to address the House with regard to the bill just passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to object, but I think we can by unanimous consent get at what the gentleman desires. I believe the difficulty which he desires to point out is that the wording of the bill does not prohibit the leasing of parallel lines. Now, if it may be done by unanimous consent, I ask unanimous consent that there be added to the bill this proviso:

Provided, That this shall not apply to lines which parallel each other.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think that amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The phraseology ought to be "competing lines."

Mr. SHERMAN. Parallel and competing lines are the same thing.

Mr. TODD. What is the objection to making the phraseology "competing and parallel?" The committee report states that it is already in the bill, and upon this untrue statement to the House it received a favorable vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, I will not consent to that. I will ask unanimous consent for inserting the language I have stated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is no such thing literally as one road paralleling another. Occasionally roads are substantially parallel, but the question is as to whether the roads are competing.

Mr. TODD. The matter to which I referred was this: In the report of the committee there is this statement:

It is further provided that the act shall not apply to companies whose lines are parallel or competing.

Now, various members have told me that they voted for the bill because the report stated that this provision was in it. The chairman of the committee now admits that it is not in the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there is an amendment to be submitted by unanimous consent, the Chair would like to have it submitted in proper form—in writing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the terms of this bill shall not apply to paralleling lines.

Mr. TODD. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after "paralleling" the words "and competing."

It is the evident purpose of this bill and its main object to legalize railroad consolidation, and a careful examination discloses that the bill is more dangerous and far-reaching than appears on the surface. By its provisions any railroad owning any track in the Indian Territory can consolidate with other roads outside, which includes all the country.

It is not required in the bill that the consolidation shall all be confined to the Indian Territory, but any road that enters the Territory can consolidate with any line that touches its own line at any point in the United States. The exact wording of the bill is:

It shall and may be lawful for any company created by or existing under the laws of the United States, and operating a line of railroad either wholly or partially in the Indian Territory, to enter into contracts for the use or lease of the railroad and other property of any railroad company whose line may now or hereafter connect with its line upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the respective companies, etc.

Under this act, if the New York Central or Pennsylvania or any system wish to make a consolidation of the railroads of the country, all they need to do is to buy or lay a few miles of track in the Indian Territory; or some great line which already has entered the Territory, like the Santa Fe, could make the consolidation. This dangerous power given the railroads, combined with the fraudulent methods by which it has been passed, should secure its prompt repeal or amendment.

Mr. ARNOLD. I object to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD]. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CARMACK. I will ask what objection there can be——

Mr. SHERMAN. I have stated my request. Let gentlemen object to it if they wish.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point of order that in order to amend the bill the vote on its passage must first be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. This can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAY. I object.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. TODD. I now ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment that the words "and competing" shall be added.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HAY. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question to the House. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the bill just passed the amendment which will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the terms of this act shall not apply to paralleling lines.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I hope the bill will not leave the House in its present form. The report states explicitly that the bill contains such a provision, while in fact it does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, my amendment was just inserted by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It was not. Objection was made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought my request was allowed.

Mr. SHATTUC. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question again and would like the House to give attention. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to add to the bill just passed the proviso which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the terms of this act shall not apply to paralleling lines.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the request for unanimous consent should be for the reconsideration of the action by which the bill was passed and of the action by which it was engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, if it be permissible to ask unanimous consent, rather than to go through all of that formula, I will say to the gentleman who makes objection to the bill in its present form that I will myself appear before the Senate committee and request this proviso to be put in the bill.

Mr. TODD. But, Mr. Speaker, I think this is the proper time to do it, while the matter is before the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a question of considerable importance, and I think we had better dispose of it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no possible objection. I am willing that gentlemen, if they can get it in shape to meet their views, shall do so by unanimous consent. I do not wish to give authority to competing railroads to consolidate. That is not my intention at all in drawing the bill. If they can put the language in proper shape to meet that point, I will accept their suggestion.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not only parallel lines, but competing lines.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would suggest to write after the word "parallel," in the bill, the words "and competing" lines.

Mr. TODD. That is the amendment which I have already proposed.

Mr. McMILLIN. That would meet the point, I think.

Mr. EVANS. Before the gentleman from New York agrees to that, I would ask him if all of the railroads in the Indian Territory are not practically competing lines?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I think not.

Mr. EVANS. It seems to me that the amendment now suggested would nullify the purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the proceedings so far, with reference to the bill, be vacated?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the action by which the bill was passed, by which it was ordered to a third reading and was accordingly read the third time, will be considered as vacated.

Now the question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the gentleman from New York in its present form, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "parallel" the words "and competing;" so as to read "parallel and competing lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9477) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1896, granting a right of way to the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1896, granting a right of way to the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That said railway company shall build and complete its said railway on or before December 31, 1900, or this grant shall be forfeited; that said railway company shall construct and maintain, continually, all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway whenever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same."

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The report (by Mr. LITTLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 9477, having had the same under consideration, return the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The charter of this company will expire in March, 1899, and, the company having expended a considerable sum of money in surveying its route and in the preliminary work looking to the construction of this road, your committee believe that the time for the completion of this road granted by the bill should be allowed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. What road is this, I would ask the gentleman?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company.

But I will refer the gentleman from Kansas to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] who made the report, and who can answer any questions with reference to it.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then I would ask the gentleman what road is referred to here, and what is the length of it?

Mr. LITTLE. This is a contemplated line running from Fort Smith westward to connect with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad in the Indian Territory.

Mr. RIDGELY. How long is it?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, some 75 miles, I should think.

Mr. RIDGELY. And this is a proposition to extend the right or charter of the company?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; until 1900.

Mr. TALBERT. Is that all the change in the bill?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir; and it has all of the safeguards usually embodied in these bills.

Mr. SIMPSON. Has any work been done upon the road?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, they have spent a considerable sum of money.

Mr. SIMPSON. In construction, or simply laying out the road?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, surveying and plotting.

Mr. SIMPSON. And no construction has been done?

Mr. LITTLE. The act of construction has not actually begun, but everything is ready for it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then, in other words, they want to hold the charter until 1900 with a view to a possible purchaser?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no; they have no desire to sell the road. They propose in good faith to construct it.

Mr. SIMPSON. But if a purchaser offers a fair sum for the charter, no doubt they would accept?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not believe it. I think it is not likely. They expect to build the road themselves with their own money, and all they ask is this extension of time for a very brief period to enable them to complete the plans now in view.

Mr. RIDGELY. You state that this is intended to give a connection between the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad and Fort Smith?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, that is the purpose of the bill and the only purpose, except local business.

Mr. RIDGELY. Are the people who manage this enterprise Fort Smith people?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, principally.

Mr. RIDGELY. All right. I am for Fort Smith.

Mr. SIMPSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] another question. Is it not a fact that there are so many rights of way granted through the Indian Territory that practically the whole Territory is absorbed and taken up with these railroad rights of way?

Mr. LITTLE. I will say to the gentleman that there is no other right of way granted which leads in the direction in which this right of way does, from Fort Smith intersecting the Missouri, Kansas and Texas. It crosses a large tract of country which is without railroad connection at present. When it comes to lines running north and south, a large number of rights of way have been granted.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas if there is any guaranty that if this extension of time is granted, no further extension will be asked?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think any further extension will be necessary.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is there any provision in this bill to prevent them selling the right of way?

Mr. LITTLE. There is no provision authorizing it that I remember of. The charter was granted two years ago. They do not want to sell it. You can not buy it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all which the Indian Committee desire to present, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL REUNION MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate resolution 110, a joint resolution authorizing the National Reunion Monument Association to erect a monument in the city of Washington to the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of the rebellion.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National Reunion Monument Association, an organization chartered and incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia for the purpose of erecting a monument in the city of Washington to the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of the rebellion, be, and hereby is, authorized to erect said monument on such Government reservation in said city as may de designated by the Secretary of War; the design of said memorial to receive his approval.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report upon this bill be printed in the RECORD and not read at the desk. It is not necessary that it should be read, I think.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. MERCER) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred Senate joint resolution No. 110, having fully considered the same, report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution simply asks for authority from Congress by the National Reunion Monument Association to erect on ground belonging to the United States within the limits of the city of Washington a suitable monument to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who served the nation during the war of the rebellion. It asks for no appropriation of money, but simply asks the authority to erect the monument proposed on a site to be selected by the Secretary of War. The organization is incorporated under section 545 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and was perfected July 13, 1898. A copy of the certificate of incorporation and record of same is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A."

The organization has been holding preliminary meetings with a view to active work in carrying out its object ever since its incorporation, and has so far progressed as to be ready to enter upon its legitimate work as soon as a location has been secured for the monument. The object and purpose of the organization has been indorsed by the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, by the National Encampment of the Union Veteran Legion, and by other soldier organizations. A copy of the resolution of the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit B." A copy of the resolution of the Union Veteran

Legion is also attached, marked "Exhibit C." The indorsement of the Department of the Potomac is also attached hereto and made a part of this report, and marked "Exhibit D."

The organization does not ask of Congress that any particular location shall be selected, but simply petitions that the Secretary of War be given authority to select an eligible site for the monument on grounds within the city of Washington belonging to the Government of the United States. The committee is firmly of the opinion that the request is a most reasonable one. Sites have been granted and set apart for monuments to army and naval heroes, generals and admirals, and it seems but fitting that the Congress of the United States should authorize the designation and setting apart of a desirable location for the erection of a monument to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Union Army and Navy during the war for the Union. This is a project in which the soldiers, sailors, and marines throughout the United States are deeply interested, and awaiting our action in the premises before responding to the call for funds to carry out this grand object.

EXHIBIT A.

Certificate of incorporation of the National Reunion Monument Association.

[Received for record July 13, 1898, 10.50 a. m.]

To all whom it may concern:

This is to certify that we whose names are hereunto signed, citizens of the United States, a majority of whom are residents of the District of Columbia, are desirous of forming an organization under section 545 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, as follows:

First. The name of this society shall be The National Reunion Monument Association.

Second. This association to continue as an incorporate body for twenty years.

Third. Its objects are: (1) The erection on Grand Army place, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a suitable monument to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who served the nation during the war of the rebellion; (2) to secure the proper marking of the spots on said Grand Army place where the various military and naval organizations held their reunions during the twenty-sixth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Fourth. The number of directors for the first year shall consist of nine persons, selected from the incorporators here named.

JOHN McELROY.	[SEAL.]	D. W. HOUGHTON.	[SEAL.]
A. H. G. RICHARDSON.	[SEAL.]	HOWARD M. GILLMAN.	[SEAL.]
JOHN C. S. BURGER.	[SEAL.]	GILBERT THOMPSON.	[SEAL.]
A. B. JAMESON.	[SEAL.]	GILBERT M. HUSTED.	[SEAL.]
RICHARD HENDERSON.	[SEAL.]	E. R. CAMPBELL.	[SEAL.]
DAN. A. GROSVENOR.	[SEAL.]	WILLIAM H. MICHAEL.	[SEAL.]
WM. S. ODELL.	[SEAL.]	M. A. DILLON.	[SEAL.]
L. P. WILLIAMS.	[SEAL.]	MARION T. ANDERSON.	[SEAL.]
E. S. GODFREY.	[SEAL.]	WM. H. WEBSTER.	[SEAL.]
A. VON HAAKE.	[SEAL.]	THEODORE F. LANG.	[SEAL.]
W. H. LOWDERMILK.	[SEAL.]	D. F. McGOWAN.	[SEAL.]
E. W. WHITAKER.	[SEAL.]	GEO. REDWAY.	[SEAL.]
G. W. WILSON.	[SEAL.]	A. J. GUNNING.	[SEAL.]
CYRUS BUSSEY.	[SEAL.]	G. W. CLARK.	[SEAL.]
F. C. REVELLS.	[SEAL.]	B. F. CHASE.	[SEAL.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Personally appeared before me, E. F. Bingham, chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the persons whose names are subscribed to the foregoing certificate, and acknowledged signing the same for the purpose therein named.

Witness my hand and seal this 12th day of May, A. D. 1898.

[SEAL.] E. F. BINGHAM,
Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

OFFICE OF RECORDER OF DEEDS,
Washington, D. C., August 29, 1898.

This is to certify that the within is a true and verified copy of a certificate of incorporation, and of the whole of such certificate, as received for record on the 15th day of July, 1898, 10.50 a m.

[SEAL.] GEO. F. SCHAYER,
Deputy Recorder of Deeds.

EXHIBIT B.

Copy of resolution unanimously adopted at the Twenty-seventh National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Indianapolis, Ind., September 7, 1893.

Resolved, That the national encampment approve the plan of the National Reunion Monument Association, of Washington, D. C., for the erection in the national capital of a memorial to the rank and file of the Union armies, Navy, and Marine Corps who fought for the suppression of the rebellion from 1861 to 1865. (See page 211, Proceedings National Encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, Indianapolis, Ind., September 7, 1893.)

EXHIBIT C.

Copy of resolution unanimously adopted at the Twelfth National Encampment of the Union Veteran Legion at Columbus, Ohio, September 23-25, 1897.

Resolved, That the Twelfth National Encampment of the Union Veteran Legion heartily approve the plan of the National Reunion Monument Association, of Washington, D. C., for the erection in the national capital on Grand Army Place of a memorial to the rank and file of the Union armies, Navy, and Marine Corps who fought to uphold the nation's honor from 1861 to 1865, and this encampment commends the patriotic spirit that prompted this association to render justice to those who on land and sea bore the brunt of battle.

EXHIBIT D.

[General Orders, No. 8.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1897.

* * * * * * *

V. The department commander takes this occasion to commend to the favorable consideration of his comrades the organization known as the National Reunion Monument Association.

It was formed in 1892, at the time of the assembly of the national encampment of our order in this city, its object being "to erect in the national capital a memorial to the rank and file of the Union armies, Navy, and Marine Corps who fought for the suppression of the rebellion from 1861 to 1865."

It is the purpose of this association to locate the monument upon the ground known as Grand Army Place, south of the Executive Mansion. The Twenty-seventh National Encampment indorsed the movement and it was highly commended by Commander in Chief John G. B. Adams in General Orders, No. 5, March 8, 1894.

The undertaking is a worthy one and appeals strongly to all Union ex soldiers, sailors, and marines and to all patriotic citizens as an effort to recognize in part the services of the rank and file in preserving the Union.

This is the only organization of the kind which has the official sanction of the Grand Army of the Republic. It was incorporated May 12, 1893. Its plan of operations has been mapped out, chairmen of committees have been appointed, and the association will enter upon the collection of funds for the purpose above named early in the new year.

All posts and comrades in this department are earnestly requested to give their cordial support to this patriotic enterprise.

By command of Thomas S. Hopkins, department commander.

ARTHUR HENDRICKS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. MERCER. It is a Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will again report to the House.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire to object to this, but it is not in order under this call. I shall not make the point of order on it.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MINING-TUNNEL RIGHTS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7442) to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tunnel rights.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That only 750 feet on each side of the center line of a tunnel site (described in section 2323, Revised Statutes of the United States) shall be reserved for tunnel locations: Provided, That any location made in a tunnel may take any part of 1,500 linear feet on one side and the remainder on the other; or the owner of said tunnel site may take a full claim of 1,500 feet on one side and 1,500 feet on the other side, if that part of said claims, extended beyond 750 feet of the center line in said tunnel, does not conflict with any prior location.

SEC. 2. That any vein or lode cut in said tunnel shall be staked on the surface and recorded within sixty days from the time the same is cut in the tunnel, in the manner provided for locations at the surface, as far as practicable, otherwise the same shall be subject to discovery and location outside of the unabandoned workings of said tunnel claim by any other qualified person.

SEC. 3. That the owner of said claim shall be entitled to all ore to the apex of what are called by miners generally vertical lodes, though such apex may not be included in the boundaries as staked on the surface.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be read.

Mr. HUNTER. An explanation will be sufficient.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the report will convey a clearer and better idea of it.

The report (by Mr. GROSVENOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7442) to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, submitted the following report:

The bill (H. R. 7442) seeks to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which read as follows:

"Where a tunnel is run for the development of a vein or lode, or for the discovery of mines, the owners of such tunnel shall have the right of possession of all veins or lodes within 3,000 feet from the face of such tunnel on the line thereof not previously known to exist, discovered in such tunnel, to the same extent as if discovered from the surface; and locations on the line of such tunnel of veins or lodes not appearing on the surface, made by other parties, after the commencement of the tunnel and while the same is being prosecuted with reasonable diligence, shall be valid."

A discovery from the surface entitles the miner to 1,500 feet in length and 600 feet in width, and also the same area when the discovery is made in a tunnel. Tunnels are usually run at right angles to the general course of the veins. The Supreme Court has held that the tunnel claimant may take his whole claim on either side of the tunnel that he may desire after he cuts the vein, and he is required to give no notice nor to protest against anyone applying for a patent on any ground within 1,500 feet of the line of the tunnel. Yet when he cuts a vein in the tunnel he may take his claim all on one side, though it covers ground actually purchased of the Government by others within the 1,500-foot limit.

The evil that section 1 of this bill seeks to cure is to confine the right of the tunnel claimant to 750 feet on each side of the line of the tunnel should the extension of the claim beyond 750 feet from the line of the tunnel conflict with the rights of any prior locator. If the tunnel claimant does not conflict with any other locator, he may, under section 1 of this bill, take a full claim on one or both sides of the line of the tunnel.

As the law now stands, the claimant is entitled to only 1,500 feet of the vein, but not being confined to either side or to any portion on one side and the remainder on the other, and having the right to choose his whole claim on either side or a part on one side and the remainder on the other, renders anyone locating a claim within 1,500 feet of the line on either side of the tunnel subject to the will of the tunnel claimant if he cuts the same vein, or in effect severs; and there are 3,000 feet in width out of which he can only extend his lines 1,500 feet.

Section 2 simply requires a tunnel claimant to stake his claim at the surface and record the claim within sixty days from the time the vein is cut, otherwise it will be deemed that he has abandoned the same should any other locator discover the same claim outside of the tunnel and locate the same. These lands are sold by the Government to the claimants for $5 per acre, and the interest of the Government, as well as those of prospectors, requires that there should be no ambiguity about the intention of claimants or as to the specific ground desired.

Section 3 of the bill gives the claimant all ore from the point touched to the surface, even though the apex of the vein may depart from the side lines.

Mineral veins rarely extend vertically. These veins vary irregularly from a vertical position. Tunnel locations are on what miners call blind lodes, or lodes the top or apex of which is covered up with earth or débris, and the location of the apex can only be estimated until more thoroughly developed than is possible before the sixty days for staking and recording.

We append hereto letters from the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, favorably recommending this measure.

We therefore report the bill (H. R. 7442) back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 5, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on H. R. 7442, entitled "A bill to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tunnel rights."

For reasons stated in his report the Commissioner concurs in the amendments proposed and recommends the passage of the bill.

I concur in the Commissioner's recommendation.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN C. BELL,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1898.

SIR: Under your instructions, I have the honor to submit herewith my report, in duplicate, on House of Representatives bill No. 7442, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tunnel rights."

In order to render the somewhat uncertain provisions of existing law relative to mining tunnels, and the rights incident thereto, more definite, I think the section of the United States Revised Statutes named in the bill should be carefully amended.

Rights to tunnels per se are not adjudicated by this Department, but in determining rights to mining claims it sometimes occurs that the rights provided for in said section 2323 are necessarily carefully considered.

I have considered the amendments proposed in this bill and concur in them, and therefore return the bill with my favorable recommendation.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] who is not present. The necessity for this legislation seems to have grown out of a change by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in what had been the accepted law of the mining country. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who understands the matter. I will say that the report was drawn by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL], the author of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my colleague [Mr. BELL] is not in the House at this time, because he is somewhat more familiar than I with the proposed legislation. The necessity for this bill has arisen by reason of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was understood and generally accepted by people that whenever they located a tunnel site they were entitled to claim on all veins or lodes that intersected the tunnel an equal distance on each side of the tunnel to the extent of 750 feet. The Supreme Court, however, has decided that upon striking a vein the tunnel owner has a right to take all of the distance given to him by law, to wit, 1,500 feet on the vein from either side of the tunnel.

That, of course, gives the tunnel-site owner a considerable advantage over what the miners thought he possessed; and inasmuch as it is found to work a hardship, as the distance allowed is considerable from the tunnel, it has been deemed best by the miners in our section of the country that the distance should be limited. This bill attempts to limit it by requiring that the tunnel-site owner shall claim a distance of no more than 1,500 feet along the vein, half of which shall be on each side of the tunnel, instead of allowing him 1,500 feet on either side of the tunnel, as the law now provides, which practically gives him control of a width of 3,000 feet. It really cuts down the right of the tunnel-site owner to one-half what it is at the present time, except where there is no conflict.

Mr. TALBERT. Do I understand the bill to mean that he was only confined to 1,500 feet on each side, still having a right to 3,000 feet? Do I understand this reduces the amount one-half?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It reduces the amount one-half.

Mr. TALBERT. And requires him to confine himself to 750 feet on each side.

Mr. LOUD. Instead of 1,500 on one side.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Instead of 1,500 on one side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It simply now defines what has been the accepted law of Colorado and mining States always.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what it practically does.

Mr. TALBERT. It cuts them down one-half?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It cuts them down one-half, from claiming all on one side of the tunnel.

Mr. TALBERT. And does not let them get all on one side.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. This bill provides that if he has taken 750 feet it shall not apply, except to extend beyond the 750 feet would conflict with claims already established.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not get your question. Repeat it, please.

Mr. RIDGELY. The bill, as I understand it, only applies within the limit of 750 feet where to go beyond that, going to 1,500 feet, would not conflict?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is right.

Mr. RIDGELY. He has still the privilege of going 1,500 feet, providing it does not conflict?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Providing it does not conflict with any location of a mining claim; that is right.

Mr. LOUD. He could not go any distance if he conflicts with anybody's rights.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true as to known veins; but it attempts to limit him to 750 feet on each side of the tunnel on blind lodes that may have been discovered after the tunnel site has been located.

Mr. LOUD. Why do you want to do that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was generally accepted by the miners as the law, and they acted upon it for years. That has been the understanding, and the decision of the Supreme Court that a man could go to the extent of 1,500 feet on either side of the tunnel was something that the miners did not contemplate.

Mr. LOUD. Why should not the tunnel men have the same right as the surface men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, in the first place, the law now gives them a much greater right, and for that reason it seems to me that it ought to be limited.

Mr. LOUD. The surface miner has 1,500 feet and 300 feet on each side.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He has 1,500 feet in one direction and 300 feet on each side in some States, and in others only 150 feet on each side of the vein. The tunnel-site claimant, however, now has the right to follow the veins he intersects 1,500 feet in either direction from the tunnel.

Mr. TALBERT. It does not affect the surface man?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not affect the surface man on any lode that outcrops, but it does as to any blind lode. If the tunnel is located before the mining claim and the assessment work is done each year, the tunnel-site claimant can hold 1,500 feet on either side of the tunnel of all the blind lodes intersected, even if he intersects them after they have been discovered by the lode claimant. Now it is thought best to limit that right to 750 feet, so that the lode claimant can at least have some part of the blind lodes discovered by him.

The lode claimant thinks he ought to have the right to the blind lodes he has discovered, although the tunnel had been commenced a long distance from him, leading toward his claim. Of course the tunnel-site men believe that they ought to have the right to take the full 1,500 feet of the blind lodes. Now, then, as there is always a conflict, something in the nature of a compromise is provided. Instead of allowing 1,500 feet on the vein from either side of the tunnel, a tunnel-site claimant shall have only 750 feet; but where there is no conflict, then he can go the full 1,500 feet on either side of his tunnel.

Mr. LOUD. By this bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion, in response to an interrogatory made by the gentleman from New Jersey or the gentleman from California?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARTMAN. I want to say that instead of reducing the area that the tunnel-site man can have down below what the surface man has, it does nothing of the kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. HARTMAN. On the contrary, it reduces it down to the same amount that the surface man has. Under the law as it now stands, the tunnel man has 3,000 feet while the surface man has but 1,500 feet. It puts them on an equality as far as the actual width is concerned. It does something better, and that is, it makes it impossible for an irresponsible fellow, who finds out that somebody has discovered a surface claim on the side of a slope or mountain which is valuable, from going down and commencing his tunnel for the purpose of levying toll or blackmail against the man who has a valuable claim on the slope of a mountain. Personally I am frank to say that I think the bill affects my State but very little, but I think the equity and justice of the thing is in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do I understand the gentleman to state that a person who has located upon and discovered a vein on the surface can be interfered with by a tunnel man still further down the mountain running under his claim and take that right away from him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not on a discovered vein that outcrops, but within the side lines of that claim there may be other veins, called blind lodes, and within those side lines as to veins not discovered, if the tunnel strikes one, they may go 750 feet on each side. The old law was 1,500 feet on either side.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is it not a fact that in different districts they have different rules?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; there are several districts in our State——

Mr. BELL. They do not now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Gilpin County mines have all been located 75 feet on each side of the vein.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The laws or rules, as I understand, differ in different districts. Does this bill attempt to disturb those in any way?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, it does not; all it attempts to do is to obviate the decision which was rendered by the Supreme Court, and which did away with what we supposed were the rights of the locators of lode mines as against the locators of tunnel sites. It really makes the law as we have always understood it, and as the miners have acted upon it.

Mr. SHANNON. Is this a general law that applies to all the States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a general law that applies to all the States.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I drew this bill. I will make a short statement in regard to it. Congress passed an act saying that any man that located a tunnel for the discovery of blind lodes and developed the tunnel right with reasonable diligence, that is, did a reasonable amount of work on the tunnel site every six months, should hold all blind veins or lodes cut in the tunnel to the same extent as if he had discovered them at the surface.

The Department of the Government held that the line of the tunnel was simply the width of excavation, and any man might go on and prospect and explore the surface so he did not get on the line of the tunnel. The line of the tunnel is 3,000 feet in length. One thousand five hundred feet of any vein cut in a tunnel can be located the same as on veins located at the surface. The Supreme Court at an early day held that the location at the surface where a locator sunk a discovery shaft, if he did not say how much he claimed on one side and how much on the other, then he should be deemed to take only 750 feet one way and 750 feet the other way from the discovery shaft as against any subsequent locator.

Following the analogy of that, the people generally in mining countries thought that when they prospected with a tunnel and cut a vein therein they would be required to take 750 feet on the one side and 750 feet on the other side of the tunnel.

Now, here is the case overruling these understandings. The Rico-Aspen case, decided recently by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Jumbo No. 2 lode was located and patented before the same was cut in the Group tunnel. The first discoverers had one about 800 feet from the line of the tunnel. The tunnel claimants were not in the neighborhood of the Jumbo No. 2 claim when it was discovered at the surface.

Tunnel claimants can do a reasonable amount of work every six months and hold a tunnel. Fifty dollars' worth of work every six months would probably be held as sufficient. This would excavate about 5 feet, and it would take them thirty years to go from end to end of tunnel site. Now, these men had discovered on the surface this Jumbo lode some 800 feet from line of tunnel. When this tunnel got up to the Jumbo vein, instead of taking 750 feet on each side of their tunnel line, they concluded to take the whole or most of the 1,500 feet on one side of the tunnel and takes in everything that the Jumbo No. 2 had done.

Now, our local courts have heretofore invariably held to the contrary. The local courts, which are generally better versed in mining laws even than the Supreme Court, had held that they were entitled to only 750 feet on each side, but the United States Supreme Court held that they might take 1,500 feet on either side; and it made no difference that the Jumbo claimants had patented and paid for the ground. No protest was ever made. The court said to the tunnel claimant that he might locate his tunnel and keep it alive and secure an inchoate right to any lode within a radius of 3,000 feet.

The claim of the Group tunnel was held to be good, because they first located the tunnel and had done a reasonable amount of work on it every six months. The Supreme Court holds that the man who comes up here [illustrating] in advance is not required to protest—not required to say a word; that he may go on and get his patent from the Government. But if the man locating a tunnel here [illustrating] comes up afterwards and finds a lode in this tunnel—twenty years afterwards or at any time—he may take the ground away from the other man, by virtue of his having started down here [illustrating] on a tunnel previous to such discovery.

Mr. TALBERT. Provided the discovery of the mineral was made prior to that time?

Mr. BELL. Yes; if it were made prior to the time that he began this work. The only point is that the man starting his tunnel is liable to occupy twenty years getting up to the other end.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the gentleman that, instead of using the word "here" on map in stating this matter, he use language which will make the statement intelligible when printed.

Mr. BELL. Now let me show the point in this matter. The Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the Land Office, and all parties interested ask that this bill be passed because it simply complies with the construction of the original act and what we thought it ought to be and what we thought it was from the passage of the act down to 1896.

Now, all we seek to do is this: When this man starts in here [illustrating from map]——

A MEMBER. Going in from the tunnel.

Mr. BELL. Yes; going in from the tunnel—the law provides that the claimant shall have 1,500 feet on the lodes that he discovers. Now, you do not know when you get out here [illustrating] to locate whether you are going to take 1,500 feet on this side or 1,500 feet on the other; therefore it severs 3,000 feet in width instead of 1,500 feet. We always understood that the quantity reserved was 1,500 feet in the aggregate—750 feet on one side and 750 feet on the other. The whole purpose of this bill is to confine a locator to 750 feet on each side, making the location definite; otherwise every location of a tunnel amounts to a reservation of 3,000 by 3,000 feet instead of 1,500 by 3,000 feet as Congress intended.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Under the present construction, as I understand, the tunnel man can hold a club over the other man.

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir; as it is now, he holds dominion over 3,000 by 3,000 feet.

Mr. RIDGELY. Suppose the tunnel man starts in prior to the surface man, not knowing whether he may find any mineral or not, and the surface man afterwards develops a vein of mineral. Can the tunnel man change the direction of his tunnel at will?

Mr. BELL. No; the line of the tunnel must be staked. The only question about the matter is whether he shall stake the location all on one side or all on the other side, or whether there shall be a definite understanding that he shall stake 750 feet on one side and 750 feet on the other side of the actual excavation.

Mr. RIDGELY. It seems to me that the bill is very fair and ought to be passed.

Mr. BELL. It simply makes the law what we for years thought it was.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We always thought that to be the law. Under the present construction it would be impossible to locate more than one mining claim under a tunnel location.

Mr. BELL. Under the old tunnel location?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I mean the tunnel that you start in with. In other words, when you discover mineral, you can, under a tunnel location, locate only one mining claim, whereas the surface man can locate a dozen.

Mr. BELL. This bill provides that one may stake two claims, provided nobody else has taken the ground before he gets it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know such was the old construction of the law before the decision which has been referred to.

Mr. BELL. There is another point in this case. The Supreme Court of the United States also held that if this man [illustrating] cuts the vein down in the tunnel, he need not mark it out at the location up here [illustrating]; he need not give anybody any notice whatever, except to set up a stake at the mouth of the tunnel, telling people that he has a lode away up here somewhere. This bill provides that he must stake it at the surface, so that a man walking over the ground will know that it is located.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Does not this bill make a change in letting the miner take the ore to the surface?

Mr. BELL. The bill so provides, but I think there is really no change.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is a change, is it not?

Mr. BELL. It is not, properly speaking, a change. It simply makes definite something which otherwise might be indefinite. The existing law provides that on a surface location, if you have the ground, say a parallelogram, 300 feet by 1,500 feet, you must find the apex here [illustrating], and having the apex of a lode inside of the boundaries entitles the claimant to all ore to the center of the earth, though it departs from the vertical so as to go outside of the boundaries in its downward course. By cutting a blind lode below the surface we may assume that it has two apexes, one to that part of the vein above and one to that part below the tunnel.

Now, the apex gives the ore in the mine located at the surface to the center of the earth; but if it crosses the side lines, then a different condition is presented. If the apex comes down here and departs from the side lines, the claimant loses all of the claim from the place of departure.

Now, in tunnel locations you do not find the apex, as it is below the surface of the earth.

I provide in my bill that the man must mark his location at the surface, so that it will be visible to anybody, and that he may have all ore from tunnel to surface, though the vein departs from side lines from tunnel upward.

Mr. KING. After the discovery of the vein?

Mr. BELL. After the cutting of the vein in the tunnel.

Mr. TALBERT. As the law stands, if I understand it correctly, it provides that a man must do a little work each six months?

Mr. BELL. That is correct.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, what is meant by a "little" work?

Mr. BELL. Well, the law says it shall be a "reasonable amount" every six months.

Mr. TALBERT. What is a "reasonable amount"?

Mr. BELL. Fifty dollars each six months is considered by miners to be a reasonable amount in the meaning of the law.

Mr. TALBERT. And what is the limit of time?

Mr. BELL. Well, you can figure for yourself. If you will take a tunnel say 3,000 feet long, it is considered sufficient work if he puts in $50 each six months, or a hundred dollars' worth of work each year; and it will take him about thirty years to go from end to end, if the ground is worth $10 per foot.

Mr. SULLIVAN. As I understand it, there is no limitation of time in the sense of the loss of his rights over the mine, provided he does his work. All he has to do is to do a certain amount of work each year which is by the law considered a reasonable amount, and that continues his title indefinitely.

Mr. BELL. Referring again to the tunnel, a man will start a tunnel in the side of a hill with the expectation of being able to strike paying ore at some distance farther in—say within 500 feet. He may make a strike before going very far. But these tunnels, as a rule, are in mining countries which show no surface indications—in other words, there is no outcrop of the ore.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will allow an interruption: Suppose a man commences the construction of a tunnel anticipating the striking of pay ore at 500 feet from the surface. Some other person in the meantime, after the work on the tunnel has been pursued for a distance, say, of 1,000 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, finds a paying vein and takes possession of it on the surface, in the direction of the line of the tunnel. The man who starts the tunnel fails to find a vein at the 500 feet distance, as he anticipated, but believes that he can strike the vein found by the man on the surface at 1,000 farther, and continues the tunnel anticipating the striking of that vein below the surface. What other rules, if any, do you apply to the man who made the surface location?

Mr. BELL. If it is a surface claim, the tunnel would not have any effect upon it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. You mean that there is no change of existing law?

Mr. BELL. No. The tunnel claim is simply a blind claim that does not appear on the surface. If the ore vein appears at the surface, it presents a different question and is dealt with under another mining law.

A MEMBER. Well, if a man strikes some other kind of vein in the tunnel, he would probably take advantage of it.

Mr. BELL. That is generally the case.

Mr. KING. Then I understand the gentleman that this bill does not change the tunnel law at all?

Mr. BELL. Not at all as to taking out ore from where cut to the surface. I require a record and put in this provision as a safeguard. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to gentlemen that the House desires to hear the colloquy now going on and asks gentlemen to be in order.

Mr. BELL. The only point here is that it permits the owner to take the ore to the top or apex of the vein, though it depart from the side lines, in its trend upward, the same as downward. I think this is but declaratory of the present law, put in as a precaution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Colorado, who is speaking in my time, if he does not think the House is now ready to vote on this?

Mr. BELL. I think so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Committee on Labor was called.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Labor are prepared and desire, when reached on this call, to bring up the bill known as the eight-hour bill, but considering the thinness of the House and the state of the minds of members I ask that the committee be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the Committee on Labor may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, I hope not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw it, if the gentleman wants to do anything.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions was called.

PENSION TO DESERTED WIFE OR MINOR CHILD OF A SOLDIER.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4766, Title LVII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following additional proviso, namely: "Provided further, That in case any resident pensioner of the United States being insolvent and having deserted his lawful wife or minor children (the wife being a woman of good moral character), and a court of competent jurisdiction in any State having duly adjudged the pensioner guilty of desertion, the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed, upon a certified copy of the judgment of said court being filed in his office, to cause one-half the pension due and coming due to said pensioner to be paid to the deserted wife, or in case there is no wife, to the guardian or legal custodian of the minor children during their minority."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "and having deserted" and insert in lieu thereof the word "deserts."

From lines 9, 10, and 11 strike out the following: "and a court of competent jurisdiction in any State having duly adjudged the pensioner guilty of desertion."

From lines 12 and 13 strike out the following: "upon a certified copy of the judgment of said court being filed in his office" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "upon being satisfied by competent evidence of such desertion."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, instead of having the report read, I ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD. Then I will make a brief explanation, so that you will all understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report of the committee upon the bill now before the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. KERR) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1055) giving to the deserted wife or minor child of a soldier one-half his pension in cases of desertion of the wife or child, submit the following report:

The object of this bill is to so amend section 4766, Title LVII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to give the deserted wife and minor child or children of a soldier, or the minor child or children, in case there is no wife, one-half of such soldier's pension.

As the law now stands a soldier husband drawing a pension may, without cause, desert his wife and child, or his minor children, leaving them in destitute and necessitous circumstances while he draws the full pension allowed by the Government.

The duty of a husband to support his wife and children is enforced by this bill to the extent of one-half the pension of a soldier who abandons that duty by deserting his wife and minor children, or his minor children in case there is no wife, provided the deserted wife is a woman of good character. The plainest dictates of justice require of the husband the discharge of this duty to the extent of his ability, and it is also the duty of the Government to compel him to discharge this duty to the extent of its ability. It must be conceded that it is wise and just to compel a man who willfully deserts his wife and child or children without just cause to surrender at least one-half his pension to their support.

Your committee is of the opinion that the wife should not be obliged to procure the decision of a court adjudicating the question of desertion before having the benefit of the law, but think that it is sufficient to leave that question to the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions, who will be able to speedily ascertain the facts and withhold one-half the pension in the meantime.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the whole effect of this bill is to add a provision by way of amendment to the Revised Statutes giving one-half of the pension of a soldier to his wife or minor children in case the soldier drawing that pension abandons his wife or minor children without just cause. That is all there is of it. It says to the Commissioner of Pensions that he is to retain one-half the pension and pay it to the wife or children, as the case may be, under those circumstances.

Mr. SULLIVAN. One half to go to the soldier and the other half to them?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes. Now he gets the whole of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who is to decide the question of desertion?

Mr. RAY of New York. On due proof made to the Commissioner of Pensions. Of course, he can stop payment of one-half the pension if complaint is made, and then he investigates, and if he finds that the soldier has deserted his wife, she being of good character, and minor children, he may then pay one-half to the widow or to the children, as the case may be.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. KING. Who is to determine whether the man deserts? That is, perhaps, a mixed question of law and fact, and it is a question which frequently arises in court.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is to be decided by the Commissioner of Pensions, on proof made before him. If complaint is made to the Commissioner by the wife or the minor children, or by the guardian in their behalf, that the soldier has, without cause, deserted the wife and children, and they make proof of the desertion, and the wife makes proof that she is a woman of good character, then the Commissioner may retain and pay one-half of the pension to the wife or to the minor children.

Mr. KING. He is to exercise that quasi-judicial function?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the bill go far enough to provide that if the father should desert the children, if there is no mother, that then the children may be considered?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; if there is no wife, then it goes to the minor children, and it goes to the wife for her and the minor children in case there are both.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My only question is whether the wording of the bill is sufficient to carry that into effect.

Mr. RAY of New York. The amendment carries it into effect. It has been very carefully worded.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; but if my colleague on the committee will wait a moment, I will answer the other gentleman first.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Where a decree of divorce has been granted by a court of competent jurisdiction, why not make that conclusive evidence?

Mr. RAY of New York. It was written in the bill in the first instance that the wife or the children must go to the court and get a decree of some kind, showing that he had deserted. We concluded that that would be too cumbersome, and take too long and be too expensive. It is perfectly safe to leave it with the Commissioner of Pensions. Now, if the fact has been adjudicated by any court that the husband has deserted the wife or children, then the production of the decree of the court would be conclusive evidence with the Commissioner. In such case there will be no necessity for further proof. The bill requires proof to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, and it is presumed that he will accept the judgment and decree of a court of competent jurisdiction on the question of desertion. The report explains the object of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is that provided for in the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is provided in the bill that if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions that a soldier has left, deserted his wife and minor children, or a wife or minor children, in case there are not both, he may then suspend the payment of one-half of the pension and pay such one-half to the wife or to the minor children.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Unless you have a provision in the bill that that shall be res adjudicata, can not the Commissioner of Pensions open the case and hear testimony on both sides and determine it?

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. I suppose if he returns to his wife there would be no longer any reason for them to pay it to both.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. You did not catch the point of my question. Unless the decree of divorce shall be conclusive, I say that would not debar the hearing of testimony to determine the question and to decide whether the wife or the husband was at fault.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why neither party should be debarred?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. In the event of a judicial decree?

Mr. RAY of New York. A judicial decree will be conclusive evidence.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. RAY of New York. If a proper court has decreed that the soldier has deserted the wife, that will be taken as conclusive evidence.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That ought to be.

Mr. RAY of New York. And would be conclusive until it was set aside.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to ask the gentleman if the Commissioner of Pensions has recommended this legislation?

Mr. RAY of New York. He approves it, and certainly there is not a citizen of the United States of good moral character that does not approve it.

Mr. TALBERT. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. There is one suggestion I desire to make to the chairman of the committee. I am heartily in favor of the bill, but a thought has struck me of an amendment that I hope the chairman will agree to. Suppose the mother shall desert the children of the soldier—and a case has come to mind just now—ought not the bill to be so amended as to give the amount to the children in that case?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, you might provide for every possible contingency; but it is very clear in case a father deserted a wife and children, and then the mother deserted the minor children, that the Commissioner of Pensions would not pay any pension to the mother who was not taking care of the children. He would give it to the minor children——

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. But pay it all to the father when he had deserted them?

Mr. RAY of New York. Because it is only paid to the mother to enable her to take care of the children, and it gives it to the children equally with the mother; so that if it should appear the mother had deserted her children the Commissioner of Pensions would not pay it to her, but to the minor children.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In view of the usual affection between mother and children, is it not an almost impossible case that is stated?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is a perfect safeguard. No good mother will desert her minor child.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the present law, when a pensioner dies his pension ceases.

Mr. RAY of New York. How is that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the present law, if the pensioner dies his pension ceases. Then a new pension is granted to the widow. Now, I want to know, if, under this law, all the pension is given to the widow and minor children, whether that will be an extension of the pension after the death of the original pensioner?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, certainly not. It does not extend the pension. It simply provides that the pension drawn by the soldier, during the time that he draws it, shall go to the wife or minor children, or to both, in case he deserts them. Now, when he dies, he ceases to draw pension, or to be entitled to it. Then, of course, nobody draws the pension. The widow would apply then, and if she got a pension of course it would go to herself and her children. This bill only applies to the pension of the soldier during the time he draws it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is nothing in the law to extend the original pension?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not a word.

Mr. RIDGELY. Suppose a soldier should desert his wife and children and die without the knowledge of the Commissioner. How do you provide that the pension may not go on being paid to the widow?

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I supposed the gentleman knew that a pension can not be drawn by the soldier unless at the end of every three months he executes his voucher and affidavits showing that he is living and entitled to receive it. If he goes away and dies, he can not do that; so the pension stops; and then the widow, on proving the death, would apply and get a pension for herself and children.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understood that to be the law, but I heard some gentlemen around me asking the question.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman what would be the effect in case the Commissioner of Pensions did ascertain there was a desertion and he had paid the pension to the wife or husband as the bill provides, and there should be thereafter a divorce granted to either one of the parties?

Mr. RAY of New York. A divorce granted?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Subsequent to the payment, under the provisions of this bill, to the respective parties?

Mr. RAY of New York. What the effect of that would be would depend altogether upon which party obtained the divorce. If the soldier himself should apply and get a divorce from the wife on the ground of infidelity, that would be pretty conclusive proof that she was not a woman of good character, and in that case, of course, she would not be entitled to any part of the pension, and the children would be if the father deserted them. The bill authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions to investigate the matter, and if he finds that, without cause, the soldier has deserted the wife, or the wife and children, or the children, that then, if she is a woman of good character, during the continuance of that desertion he may pay one-half of the pension to the wife, or to the wife and children, or to the children if there is no wife.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Would it be paid to the wife subsequent to the divorce of one of the parties in any case?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, certainly not, under this bill.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio for an amendment?

Mr. RAY of New York. No, I do not; the gentleman was present and voted for the bill as it was amended, and the amendment suggested will only tend to confuse the bill.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I think not.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me look at it.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I will read it. It is to strike out the words "one-half" and insert the word "all."

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, that would never do.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CONNOLLY. How would your bill affect a case of this kind: Suppose a husband abandons the wife and she obtains a divorce for abandonment. Under your bill would one-half of the pension of the husband be paid to the wife after the divorce?

Mr. RAY of New York. If the husband deserted the wife and left her without means of support——

Mr. CONNOLLY. And she obtained a decree of divorce.

Mr. RAY of New York. And then she goes to work and gets a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion, I think it would. It would in some States.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Suppose she married somebody else——

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not know that I understand the gentleman clearly.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I understand the bill provides in case the husband deserts the wife——

Mr. RAY of New York. If the wife should get a divorce from the husband on account of desertion, and the law of the State permitted an absolute divorce, dissolving the bonds of matrimony, for that cause she would no longer be his wife and therefore would take no benefit under this bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Does your bill provide for a case of that kind?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly, the way it is worded; but take it in New York State, where desertion is not a ground for absolute divorce, but is a ground for separation from bed and board; then they are still man and wife, and the wife might get the liberty that such a decree would give her and still be entitled to one-half of the pension, and in that case she ought to have it. But where the matrimonial relation is absolutely dissolved, where there is an absolute divorce, then they are no longer husband and wife, and she would have no part of the pension.

Mr. CONNOLLY. My question was whether your bill met a case of that kind.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly it does.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to put a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the pensioner deserts the wife and takes the children with him, who gets the pension?

Mr. RAY of New York. I think the wife would get one-half of it and he would have the other half. But mind you, under this bill she must be a woman of good character; and if she is a woman of good character, she will never desert her children under 16 years of age.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENLISTMENT BY VETERANS OF THE LATE WAR, ETC.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 9598, to encourage enlistment by veterans of the late war during the coming war with Spain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act (in the event of war) no person now on the pension rolls of this Government, or who may hereafter be placed thereon for service rendered prior to the passage of this act, who may enlist in either the Army or the Navy of the United States, shall by such enlistment be deprived of said pension, but the same shall continue during his term of enlistment and thereafter.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to encourage enlistments by veterans of the late war during the anticipated war with Spain."

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print the report in the RECORD without reading it.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. RAY of New York) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9598) entitled "A bill to encourage enlistments by veterans of the late war during the anticipated war with Spain," have fully considered the same and respectfully report:

The object of this bill is to secure early enlistments in the Army and Navy of the United States, in case enlistments are invited by the Government, by those who are able-bodied and bore arms on either side of the conflict in the late civil war.

In case of war the services of capable and experienced men are much more valuable than those of equal patriotism and valor who have not been baptized in the fire of battle. Recent events make it more than probable that considerable additions to our land and naval forces will soon become necessary.

Within 70 miles of our shores lies a beautiful and fruitful island with a population composed of intelligent and liberty-loving human beings, entitled to be treated as such. This island is ruled by Spain and has been since the discovery of the Western Continent by Christopher Columbus. Whenever the attention of Spain has been diverted from this colony, the people have prospered and made rapid advancement; but no sooner has considerable progress been made in civilization and the accumulation of wealth than the oppressive hand of the mother country has been placed on this people and oppression of the men and brutal and bestial outrage of the women has followed, while every form of taxation has been resorted to to rob the people of the fruits of their toil and keep them in a condition of abject servitude.

This oppressed people has struggled for a good government, which has been repeatedly promised but never given. A few years ago a Cuban rebellion promising success was only subdued by pledges of reform, but no sooner had the rebels laid down their arms than every promise was broken, every assurance disregarded, and every form of outrage resorted to.

In the struggle for liberty now in progress the people has been subjected to almost every form of barbarity. The men have been treacherously murdered, the fair women and beautiful girls have been the victims of the lust of brutal Spanish soldiers, and finally the old men, the women, and children have been herded like cattle and then starved. It is stated to-day that Spain now promises to turn these weak people into the barren and desolate fields to secure food if they can. If they go now, it is to die in the open woods and swamps, for food is not to be had.

Those whose words are not doubted, and recently from the island, tell us that haggard, starving mothers sit with their starved and dead babies in their arms, waiting for liberty or death, while Spanish fiends gloat over their misery. Mere boys, who shout for liberty, are shot by Spanish soldiers. This is but an incident in Spain's mode of exterminating a people she can not conquer. The United States will permit no interference by any European power. The time is at hand when she herself must interfere, for true Americanism can tolerate no more of this barbarity. But a few weeks since a magnificent warship of the American Navy made a friendly visit to the harbor of Havana. She was taken in charge by a Spanish pilot, an officer of Spain, conducted to an anchorage but little used, and placed directly over a submarine mine planted by Spanish officials, and the exact location of which must have been known to the Spanish Government.

The representative of the Spanish nation in Washington, while beguiling our Executive with smiles of pretended friendship and promises of immediate measures to end the horrible condition of affairs in Cuba, was writing and sending to Spain letters abusing the loved and respected Chief Magistrate of this Republic. Caught in the act, he was requested to quit our shores, but while he yet lingered there came the appalling news that "the Maine is blown up and hundreds of brave and patriotic seamen have been sent to the presence of their Maker without a moment's warning." Spain not only denies complicity in this crime that has no parallel in modern history, but denies the crime itself. She makes no effort to discover or punish the criminal, for she knows such effort, honestly made, will demonstrate to the world her own cowardly criminality and responsibility. Spanish officials alone had the means or knowledge necessary to secure the explosion of that mine beneath the Maine. Mines and powerful torpedoes do not float about Havana Harbor like bullheads in a pond.

It is true that the destruction of the Maine is but an incident of the whole transaction, but it is an incident of such magnitude and horror that the civilized world shudders at its mention. American blood has been shed and our American homes desolated. The feeling is widespread and universal that the hand of Spain must be taken from the throat of the Cubans. We are fully aware that the foot of that cruel, crafty, degenerate, and bigoted nation has never been planted on a foot of God's green earth but murder, misrule, outrage, and desolation have followed. The United States is the proper guardian of the rights of all the people of the Western Hemisphere, and is able and willing to insure a decent regard for the rights of mankind.

In this struggle Cuba has really won her independence. In open civilized warfare she has triumphed. War is terrible and to be avoided, if possible, without sacrificing national honor. It was once said, "War, pestilence, and famine are the three greatest calamities that can befall mankind." May it not be truly said that Spanish rule, war, pestilence, and famine are the four greatest calamities that can befall mankind, and that Spanish rule is the greatest of all wherever tolerated? Spanish rule is misrule. Can this nation tolerate these things? Our President insulted, our Navy blown up, our marines murdered by Spanish officials, our neighbors murdered, starved, outraged, and still no just cause for armed interference? A Spanish war fleet on its way here, and still no cause for action?

The verdict of the people of this nation has been rendered. It is approved by all thinking, reasoning, civilized human beings. Cubans murdered and starved on the land, and American seamen and sailors and marines murdered on the high seas!

Can we wonder that the men who "wore the blue" and those who "wore the gray" in 1861-1865, and who know what war is, long to avenge these wrongs and make Cuba free?

This bill says that they may, when the time comes, without losing any right they now possess. All patiently wait the action of the Executive—our trusted President—hoping with him that diplomacy may win without a resort to arms, but in the meantime it is well to prepare for what may be inevitable, for Cuba must be free.

But very few will be benefited by the provisions of this bill, but every patriotic citizen and every veteran, South and North, will hail its passage with patriotic fervor as a measure of justice. If war comes, it will cost blood and many precious lives will be sacrificed, but far better that men die in a struggle for liberty, to advance civilization, to overthrow tyranny, to save the lives of others, than that the extermination of a people be permitted by the slow and horrible process of starvation.

War will cost money, but those who pay the taxes where the flag of our Union floats will gladly toil both day and night to furnish the means to enable our Government to maintain its honor abroad, its self-respect at home, and guarantee life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to the people of oppressed and downtrodden Cuba.

The bill is reported back by a unanimous vote and with the recommendation that it pass. Amend the title as indicated.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this applies to all classes of persons drawing pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If I understood the bill, it is to allow veterans of the late war to serve in the event of a war with Spain regardless of the fact that they may be on the pension rolls.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; the gentleman does not quite get the scope of the bill. The scope of the bill is this: If any veteran of the late war now drawing a pension is in such a shape physically that he shall be accepted into the military service of the United States and serve, that he may continue to draw his pension notwithstanding such service.

The bill does not say that they may be accepted nor that they shall be accepted into the service. In case a soldier has a physical disability, and yet one which enables him to serve, he will continue to draw his pension. Now, let me illustrate. During the late war a great many men had an arm shot off, or it was amputated, like Gen. Phil Kearny, who, I think, lost an arm in the Mexican war; he was still continued in the United States service, and was a magnificent officer and soldier. Now, in a case like that, suppose that a man in the late civil war lost an arm or a leg and still his services would be valuable in case we have a war, as drill master or in charge of a post, he would do the same duty as an able-bodied man; and if he is accepted into the service, he is to draw his pension.

That is all there is to the bill. It can not benefit but very few of the old veterans, but it may benefit many scattered through the land who may obtain a position in the Army in charge of a post or for the purpose of drilling troops or any other purposes, and who may be very valuable to the nation because of their experience in war and their acquaintance with the tactics of the Army.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The point of my inquiry was whether the bill was limited to any particular class or whether it affected all classes. The explanation of the gentleman makes it clear that it is immaterial to what class he belongs, although, of course, the general presumption is that it would not apply to persons drawing pensions on the ground of great physical disabilities.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is true; and there would be only exceptional cases.

Mr. MOODY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question, based upon a letter of inquiry which I received to-day from a veteran. I wish to know whether there is anything in the existing law which upon the reenlistment of a veteran would either forfeit or suspend his pension?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, sir; that would be the effect; and it is the object of this bill to prevent that, in case such a man is accepted into the service.

Mr. RIDGELY. I think the bill ought to pass. I have a few letters from old veterans bearing upon this question.

Mr. RAY of New York. The commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of New York was here, and called my attention to this matter when the bill was introduced. Grand Army men and old veterans all through the country are in favor of the measure.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the bill apply to any other persons than to those drawing pensions? Is it broad enough to cover soldiers who may hereafter draw pensions?

Mr. RAY of New York. It will not apply to anyone unless he is receiving a pension before his service in the Army begins.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If I understood the reading of the bill correctly, it applies only to those persons who are now drawing pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Or to those who may hereafter draw pensions. It applies to anyone who has been allowed a pension before actually entering into the service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is satisfactory.

Mr. CLARDY. Is there anything in the present law that would deprive these soldiers of their pension if they joined the Army?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; and that is the reason the bill is presented.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question, and call for a vote.

Mr. GIBSON. I give notice that if the previous question is voted down I shall ask to offer an amendment repealing the law which prohibits Confederate soldiers from drawing pensions. I hope the previous question will be voted down. Now is the proper time to meet that question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OR CANCELING OF PENSIONS.

Mr. RAY of New York. I now call up the bill (H. R. 80) providing procedure in certain pension cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person to more than one pension for the same service, nor to affect or enlarge the pension rights of widows and others under sections 4702, 4705, and 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof.

SEC. 2. That in every case where an adjudicated pension is sought to be withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled, a full statement of all the facts, duly sworn to, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions by the person or officer of the United States making such allegation. When said statement is filed in the Pension Department, or within thirty days thereafter, a certified copy of the same shall be transmitted to the pensioner whose pension is sought to be so withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled, and the case assigned to a special examiner of the Pension Department for investigation. Such special examiner shall, as soon as practicable thereafter, and having first given such pensioner and the person making such statement at least twenty days' notice thereof, in writing, proceed to take such evidence as may be submitted to him touching the merits of such case. All such evidence shall be reduced to writing, and shall be by question and answer, under oath, in open session, and such pensioner shall be privileged to appear at such investigation in person and by attorney, and given full and fair opportunity to hear all testimony and face all witnesses, to cross-examine, and to rebut or substantiate any facts alleged or disputed. Such investigation shall be conducted at the county seat of the county in which the person affected resides, and the depositions of witnesses residing outside of said county shall be taken as near as may be in accordance with the practice of the State or Territory in which said witness resides. When said investigation shall be concluded by said examiner, a full report thereof, in writing, shall be made by him to the Commissioner of Pensions, who shall determine the case.

If said charge is sustained, then said pension shall be withheld, modified, suspended, or canceled, as the Commissioner of Pensions shall determine; but no pension shall be withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled until a full determination of said investigation. The right of appeal shall remain as now allowed by the Pension and Interior Departments.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith or repugnant to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out in line 23, page 2, after the word "the," at the beginning of said line, the following: "county seat of the county in," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "town or post-office nearest."

Also, insert after the word "and," in line 24, page 2, the following: "at his residence, if he is unable to leave the same, and."

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. RAY of New York. I call for the reading of the report in my time. I do not wish to occupy the floor.

The report (by Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 80) providing procedure in certain pension cases, respectfully submit the following report:

This measure seeks to prevent any pension from being withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled when once the same shall have been adjudicated and allowed, except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability. In the event any effort is made to seek a modification, cancellation, or suspension of any such pension, some responsible person must first make declaration in writing of the causes why such pension should be so modified, canceled, or suspended, and the pensioner shall be allowed an opportunity to be heard.

The procedure for the investigation of any such proposed modification is simple, direct, and just. The machinery of the Pension Department already in force in the division of special examination takes charge and prosecutes such investigation by directing an officer of the Department already in the field to proceed to the town nearest the residence of the pensioner, and there, by depositions, reduce to writing all information that he may find both for and against the proposition of such proposed modification, cancellation, or suspension of said pension. This examination is had after due notice to the party and witnesses in interest, and may be pursued in any locality where any witnesses may reside. Such evidence shall then be reported to the Department, where it is considered and passed upon under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions.

No additional officers of the Government are provided for by the bill. No additional expense other than that already provided for the expense of the special examination division is intended, and no pension which has heretofore been modified, suspended, or canceled is sought to be restored by this bill. The clear and avowed purpose of the measure is to put at rest all further anxiety and disturbance of mind of pensioners who may fear that they may be called upon without proper notice and time in which to defend the pensions which have already been granted them. It guarantees to the survivor of the rebellion, whose average age is now about 60 years and who holds a certificate of the Government entitling him to a pension, that security and peace of mind which should come to him in his declining years.

No effort is sought to evade the right of the Government to modify, suspend, or cancel any pension where the same has been obtained through fraud or where an honest mistake of fact on which such allowance was based has been made, nor where there shall be a recovery from the disability. But where the pensioner has been granted his certificate after a thorough investigation on the part of the Government, who has required the most careful investigation of all evidence by different boards, it is only just and right that the burden of proof should shift to the shoulders of the Government when it seeks to modify, cancel, or suspend the finding which she herself has already entered.

It must be remembered that when these claims have once been allowed all the papers and every line of testimony is retained in the files of the Department, and the pensioner himself holds nothing but his certificate. Even the witnesses who have furnished this evidence have in a great majority of cases become scattered, taking up their abode in their old age with their children, losing their identity among their comrades, or have died. The pensioner himself has dismissed from his mind all knowledge of details upon which his claim was originally based, and in too many instances, by reason of age and the very disabilities for which he is pensioned, has lost his mental vigor, and is no longer able to conduct a second case in defense of his claim. Such being the well-established facts, the Government can not afford to place upon his shoulders the responsibility and burden of defending his right to the claim whenever called upon.

The procedure provided by the bill requiring that such investigation shall be conducted by question and answer and allowing the party affected to be confronted by his accuser in the light of day, as in all ordinary tribunals of justice, is fair and honest, and is no more than what the Government should do in such cases.

Your committee, having carefully considered the bill, respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out in line 23, page 2, after the word "the," at the beginning of said line, the following: "county seat of the county in," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "town or post-office nearest."

Also insert after the word "and," in line 24, page 2, the following: "at his residence, if he is unable to leave the same, and."

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not know whether any gentleman desires any explanation of this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to hear an explanation.

Mr. TALBERT. I wish to know in what particular this bill proposes to change the present method of procedure.

Mr. RAY of New York. It does not change it to any great extent, but it provides clearly and explicitly that before any pension shall be taken away the pensioner shall have twenty days' notice to enable him to prepare for the hearing; that if he is unable to leave his home, the parties conducting the proceedings shall go to his home, otherwise to the nearest post-office; that the witnesses who are within reach shall be called; that each party (the Government and the soldier) shall have the right to examine and cross-examine; that the evidence shall be reduced to writing and sent on to the Pension Bureau, where it will be preserved. If the witnesses do not reside where they can be reached otherwise, an officer is to be sent to take their evidence in writing, with the privilege of both parties to examine and cross-examine.

Mr. TALBERT. The bill dispenses with the necessity of the pensioner coming here to defend his right?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is not obliged to come here; and there is nothing like an ex parte proceeding. The bill gives both the Government and the soldier a chance to be heard in the proceeding.

As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] introduced this bill, and may really be said to be its father, I will yield to him ten minutes, or longer should he desire more time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, primarily, is to put at rest that anxiety and suspense which every pensioner now experiences from the fear of having his pension taken from him without an opportunity on his part to be heard.

The difficulty about the present law, or rather the lack of definite provision of law, is that the Pension Department may at any time merely suspend the pension, giving the pensioner a notice that unless he shall, within a fixed limit of time establish his continued right to the pension or show why it should not be suspended, it will be canceled.

Mr. DOCKERY. Under the present law he has thirty days.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; thirty days under the present law.

But, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is that the pensioner having established his case primarily and got his pension, has dismissed from his mind the details of the testimony on which he relied originally. His witnesses whom he called upon for the examination in the first instance are scattered Thousands of old soldiers throughout the country who have rendered benefits mutually to each other in this respect have changed their residences and taken up their abode with their children living elsewhere, and in many instances these men in old age have lost their identity with their old comrades in arms and it is impossible in many cases to find their post-office address, and therefore it is not possible to obtain anew the evidence on which to base the claim for pension under the new proceedings inaugurated by the Office.

This bill merely shifts from the pensioner the burden of proof onto the shoulders of the Government. Primarily he has had to prove his case before all of the different boards of the Pension Office—first, the investigation of the Department; second, the examination of examining surgeons; then he has to pass before the board of review, the board of final review, and so on, before adjudication has been made of his case. Now, having taken the initiative to establish the facts that the pensioner has a right to the claim, the Government issues a certificate.

Every syllable of proof that has been produced, and that is on file, is retained by the Pension Bureau, and the pensioner has nothing except his pension certificate. That being so, when subsequently the Government seeks to modify, change, or annul, in any way, that pension, or perhaps to cancel it altogether, it should be upon its shoulders to establish, by primary proof, its right to so modify, change, or cancel. And all in the world that this modification of the law does, after the Government has, of its own accord, forced the pensioner to establish beyond all controversy his right to a pension, is that it shall take up and initiate the proceedings and must prove its right to thus modify, change, or cancel.

There is no disposition whatever, Mr. Speaker, to question the right of the Government to modify or cancel pensions in all cases where there was fraudulent action in obtaining the pension or where a mistake of fact or anything of that sort is shown. It admits all rights now in force to inquire into those two things and also to suspend a pension when the soldier has recovered from the disability for which the pension was originally granted. It only provides the procedure through which the facts are to be ascertained and the methods by which the evidence is to be taken in the investigation by the Government. It is provided that the investigation shall be conducted by question and answer and allowing the person affected to be confronted with his accuser and hear the testimony.

Now, if this bill becomes a law, it does not restore to the pension rolls any individual whose pension has been suspended. It does not add a dollar of expense to the expenses incurred already, for the whole procedure is followed through the method now obtaining in the department of the Bureau known as the special examination division. If any individual knows that a soldier has been receiving from the Pension Office a pension to which he was not entitled, or if it shall appear to anyone who brings the charge that this pension has been granted through a mistake of facts or fraud, he should have the confidence in his own opinion to express himself and support his allegation by proper proof and not undertake to place the responsibility of his charges upon the pensioner by anonymous letters or other such practices and take from the soldier the pension he has been drawing without giving him an opportunity of being heard in his own defense.

I repeat, then, that it is only just and right, where the pensioner has been granted a certificate after a thorough investigation by the Government, which retains all of the evidence before the different boards, that it is but just and proper that the burden of proof shall be put on the shoulders of the Government when, on allegation by anonymous letters or otherwise, it seeks to modify, cancel, or suspend the order already entered. After a charge has been filed against the pensioner—after some person who claims to have discovered that the pension was improperly granted has had the manhood to file the charge before the proper officers of the Bureau, he should also have the manhood to follow up his charges by presenting the proof in support of the same.

In the second place, no person, after a pension has been suspended by the Commissioner upon the investigation on satisfactory proof, shall have a right to receive the pension under this bill. But you can deprive him of a pension only when it is established by proof that it should be withdrawn from him. In other words, it simply puts the pensioner and the Government on a common plane, which obtains in every justice's court throughout the United States, namely, that the pensioner has a right to be confronted by his witnesses; he has a right to be heard in contradiction to the charge that he is not entitled to the pension, and after all the testimony has been heard it leaves the disposition of the case, upon the proof, to the Commissioner of Pensions for competent adjudication and determination.

If then it is found that there has been a mistake of fact, or that there has been fraud perpetrated, or that there has been a recovery from the disability, thereupon the Commissioner exercises the right to modify, suspend, or cancel the pension.

Mr. TALBERT. I see this bill has a repealing clause.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; everything repugnant to it is repealed.

Mr. TALBERT. How does it compare with the present form of procedure?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The difficulty is that there is no procedure fixed by law.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not opposing this bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The practice which obtained very disastrously in the last Administration was that notice was given to the soldier to show cause, within thirty days, why his pension should not be dropped, and upon his failure to show cause his pension was dropped and the only method of its restoration was by private act.

Mr. TALBERT. This gives him a better opportunity?

Mr. OVERSTREET. This gives him a better opportunity.

Mr. TALBERT. Does it meet with the sanction of the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. OVERSTREET. He approves it.

Mr. SHANNON. If I am not mistaken, the sharp distinction between the present procedure and that provided for in the bill is that the burden of proof is shifted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Exactly so. Under the present practice the burden continues on the soldier. Under this bill it is shifted to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Is there any objection to an amendment being made to this bill that would bar the Government from raising, at this late day, the question of disability existing prior to the war or the soldier's enlistment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that personally I have no objection, but that is so different from the intention of this bill that I think it would be unwise to propose such an amendment at this juncture.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the committee if they have any objection to that amendment—will the committee allow an amendment barring the Government from raising the question at this late day of previous disability and requiring the soldier to prove that he was in perfect health prior to his enlistment?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to my good friend that that question is already covered by a bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which will be brought before the House at the very first favorable opportunity.

Mr. RIDGELY. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. RAY of New York. It would be out of place here. That is another question.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like permission to occupy two minutes in stating a case in my district.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. RIDGELY. It is both unfair and unjust for the Government at this late day—nearly thirty-five years since the war closed—to raise the question as to whether a soldier was sound when he entered the service or not. I know a case which I wish to state, as it will have a bearing upon the law which we are assured by the chairman of the committee will soon be presented for our action. A totally disabled old soldier in my State was drawing a pension of $24 per month for injuries to his hearing received in the service, according to the decision of the Department based on testimony gathered years ago. During the last Administration this old soldier was notified that unless he made proof within thirty days that some defect of his hearing, for which he was drawing a pension, did not exist in degree before he enlisted his pension would be canceled. The investigation took place. All of the evidence that the soldier was able to present was furnished to the Department, and the pension was continued at that time.

During the present administration that same old soldier received notice: "Unless you prove that your hearing was not in any degree defective before you went into the service your pension will be cut off at the end of thirty days." Many of the witnesses who had testified have since died, and the soldier was unable to marshal sufficient evidence to satisfy the Commissioner that his hearing was not in some degree defective at the time of his enlistment. His pension has been cut off by the present administration, thirty-five years after the man entered the service, because the Government raised this question and seems to have found some little evidence.

I have read the testimony of the witnesses, and two of them said that they remembered the man, and in their judgment his hearing was somewhat defective, although they testified that they did not believe that the man himself was conscious of the fact that he was somewhat hard of hearing. Yet this present administration has cut off that old soldier's pension on the same charge that the last administration permitted it to stand. I say that we should pass a law not only to restrain the present Commissioner, but all Commissioners of Pensions in the future, from raising any question at this late day to compel a soldier to prove his soundness previous to his enlistment, when the Government's medical examiners accepted him and declared that he was qualified to enter the service.

I hope the bill that we are assured by the committee will soon be before us will be supported by every man upon this floor. Let us restore every pension that has been cut off for the above reasons, and forever put a stop to canceling pensions on account of the physical condition of the soldier prior to or at the time of enlistment.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misapprehension whatever as to this bill and the force, effect, and propriety of it, I beg the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I explain the present law and the proposed law. One gentleman indicated to me that he was afraid it would throw the bars down and the doors wide open, so that no pension could be stopped, even when it had been granted by fraud, and that the bill is so framed that no one would dare or care to make an allegation against the validity of any pension.

Now, the present law on this subject is as follows; and it is an act approved December 21, 1898, and reads:

Provided, That no pension heretofore or that may hereafter be granted to any applicant therefor under any law of the United States authorizing the granting and payment of pensions on application made and adjudicated upon shall be deemed and held by all officers of the United States to be a vested right in the grantee to that extent that payment thereof shall not be withheld or suspended until, after due notice to the grantee of not less than thirty days, the Commissioner of Pensions, after hearing all the evidence, shall decide to annul, vacate, modify, and set aside the decision upon which such pension was granted. Such notice to grantee must contain a full and true statement of any charges or allegations upon which such decision granting such pension shall be sought to be in any manner disturbed or modified.

Now, you see, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that this does not provide for the taking down of the evidence in the presence of a representative of the Government and of the soldier, and the right of examination and cross-examination of witnesses. It does not provide as to the place of examination. So that now soldiers are oftentimes put to great inconvenience, and the Pension Office many times acts upon evidence that is not in writing and which the soldier has no opportunity to explain or to controvert.

Now, calling attention to the bill itself, one gentleman suggests that this language would throw the door wide open. I read from section 2:

That in every case where an adjudicated pension is sought to be withheld, suspended, modified, or canceled a full statement of all the facts, duly sworn to, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions by the person or officer of the United States making such allegation.

Now, my friend who brought my attention to this said that no one in the neighborhood of the pensioner would dare to make an allegation against a pensioner. He would not dare to make an affidavit charging him with fraud. My answer to that would be that any man in a neighborhood who has reason to believe and does believe that a soldier is drawing a pension fraudulently ought to have the moral and physical courage to say so; and if he has not, then he has no business to speak upon that subject at all. But, passing that, which would be sufficient answer for me, I will say this, that the bill does not contemplate anything of that kind. It contemplates this: That before a pension shall be suspended, modified, or canceled some person shall make an allegation in some manner to the Commissioner of Pensions.

The Commissioner of Pensions will then send a special examiner to the neighborhood, who, without notice to the soldier or pensioner, will carefully look into the matter, and if he finds there is substantial evidence of fraud or wrongdoing, being an officer of the United States and not living in that neighborhood, but at some remote point, he will reduce the charges to writing, verify them on information and belief, and perhaps partly on personal knowledge, and file the statement containing the charges. Then the soldier has twenty days' notice in which to prepare to meet these charges, and the parties then go to trial upon the questions involved, the same as either you or I would go to trial on a criminal charge in a question of fact in any court in Christendom. That is certainly fair and just, not only to the soldier, but to the Government. Now, then, does any other gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that twenty days' notice is sufficient?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is twenty days' notice, and it is to be sent by mail to the town or post-office nearest which the person affected resides.

Mr. RIDGELY. And it is twenty days from the time he receives the notice?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; twenty days' notice after receipt of the charges.

Mr. RIDGELY. And then they examine the witnesses in his neighborhood.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; and if they have to take evidence abroad, they do it as it is done in various States, appoint commissioners at those places, and witnesses for both parties are to be examined and cross-examined, and then the evidence is all sent in together.

Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to be heard, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is all we have, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I was absent in my committee room when the Committee on Patents was called, and I ask unanimous consent to recur to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the call recur to the Committee on Patents, passed during his absence.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is his request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania requests a return in the call to the Committee on Patents, passed during his absence.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, having an understanding with the gentleman that he will not call up a certain bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McEWAN. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to determine whether he will object now.

Mr. McEWAN. I will not make it upon condition of a bill not being brought up that has been attempted to be brought up several times and I objected to it.

Mr. HICKS. That is not going to be brought up.

Mr. McEWAN. If it is understood that that bill is not to be presented, I will not object; otherwise I will, certainly.

Mr. HICKS. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. McEWAN. The one by which two or three hundred men would be given undue advantages.

Mr. HICKS. I will not inflict that bill on the gentleman to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the bill the gentleman agreed he would not call up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McEWAN. Very well; I will not make any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will call the Committee on Patents.

TRADE-MARKS ON BOTTLES, ETC.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill No. 72, to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, and other receptacles and vessels used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and to prevent the fraudulent use of the same in such commerce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all persons, firms, and corporations engaged in manufacturing, bottling, packing, or selling soda water, mineral or aerated waters, porter, ale, beer, cider, ginger ale, milk, cream, small beer, lager beer, weiss beer, white beer, or other beverages, or medicines, medical preparations, perfumery, compounds, mixtures, or other articles of merchandise in bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, with his, her, its, or their name or names or other marks or devices branded, stamped, engraved, etched, blown, impressed, or otherwise produced upon such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels used by him, her, it, or them in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, may obtain registration of such name or names or other marks or devices so used, as follows: Any such person, firm, or corporation may file in the Patent Office of the United States, to be recorded, a written statement specifying the name, domicile, citizenship, place or places of business, and post-office address of such person, firm, or corporation, and giving a description and a facsimile of the name or names, or other marks or devices so used by him, her, it, or them, respectively, and the usual name of the article or articles manufactured, bottled, packed, or sold by such owner in such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, boxes, kegs, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, said statement declaring that such person, firm, or corporation is, at the time of such filing, the owner of such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, and that the same are used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and that such person, firm, or corporation has at the time a right to the use of such name or names, or other marks or devices, sought to be registered, and that no other person, firm, or corporation has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive; and said statement shall be sworn to by such person, or by a member of such firm, or an officer of such corporation before a notary public or other officer competent to administer oaths, who shall attach his official seal to the same: Provided, however, That for each such statement so filed, and at the time the same is filed, the person, firm, or corporation filing the same shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25 as a fee for such registration, and shall comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents: Provided further, That no registration shall be allowed under this act except by persons, firms, or corporations domiciled in the United States or located in any foreign country, or tribes which, by treaty, convention, or law, afford similar privileges to citizens of the United States.

SEC. 2. That when any registration has been made as provided in section 1 of this act the Commissioner of Patents may issue a certificate in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Department of the Interior, and signed by said Commissioner, stating and specifying the name, place, or places of business, and post-office address of the person, firm, or corporation obtaining such registration as owner, and giving a description of the registered name or names, or other marks or devices, so used on such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels fully as set forth in said statement filed under section 1 of this act, and such certificate shall state that such name or names, or other marks or devices, have been registered by such owner in accordance with this act, giving the title and date hereof. Such certificate of the Commissioner of Patents shall, in any prosecution under this act, be prima facie evidence of registration in accordance with this act and also prima facie evidence that the person, firm, or corporation so registered as owner is the true owner of the bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, the name or names, or other marks or devices, on which have been so registered.

SEC. 3. That after the name or names, or other marks or devices, which appear on any bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels have been registered as provided in section 1 of this act, any person, firm, or corporation who shall use in traffic any such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, or make the same the subject of commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $200, or be imprisoned not more than four months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall prevent, lessen, impeach, or avoid any remedy at law or in equity which any party aggrieved by any wrongful use or sale of such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels might have had if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to make rules and regulations and prescribe forms for the transfer of the said certificates of registration, and for recording the said transfers in his office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

CUBA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits to the House the following action on the part of the Senate of the United States:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate to joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist and ask for a conference, and upon that I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House insist upon its amendment and ask for a committee of conference, and upon that he moves the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire if a motion to recede from the House amendment and concur in the Senate amendment does not take precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Maine to insist?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine that matter.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire, while the Chair is examining it, to call the Chair's attention to a decision in the Twenty-ninth Congress, on page 696 of the Journal of the first session.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean the Twenty-ninth Congress or the Twentieth Congress?

Mr. BAILEY. In the first session of the Twenty-ninth Congress this identical question arose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had the Digest of the Twentieth Congress, but that decision does not seem to be applicable.

Mr. BAILEY. The precedent cited in the Twenty-ninth Congress is the very question—the Senate amended the House bill and the House amended the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was satisfied upon general principles that a motion to recede would be in order, but his attention, however, was called to the Digest, which, it seems, made an incorrect reference; probably was intended to refer to the Twenty-ninth Congress instead of the Twentieth, and the precedent is in accordance with the general principles.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to make a motion to recede——

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and concur therein, and on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to recede and concur. As many as are in favor of the question will, when their names are called, say "aye"——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the yeas and nays would be asked for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the proposition that the House shall recede and concur with the Senate will, when their names are called, say "aye," and those opposed "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 172, answered "present" 3, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—146.

Adamson,	Cummings,	Lanham,	Sayers,
Allen,	Davey,	Latimer,	Settle,
Bailey,	Davis,	Lentz,	Shafroth,
Baird,	De Armond,	Lester,	Shuford,
Balt.	De Graffenreid,	Lewis, Ga.	Simpson,
Bankhead,	De Vries,	Lewis, Wash.	Sims,
Barlow,	Dinsmore,	Little,	Slayden,
Bartlett,	Dockery,	Livingston,	Smith, Ky.
Belknap,	Dorr,	Lloyd,	Sparkman,
Bell,	Driggs,	Lorimer,	Stallings,
Benner, Pa.	Elliott,	Love,	Stark,
Benton,	Ermentrout,	McClellan,	Stephens, Tex.
Bodine,	Fitzgerald,	McCormick,	Stokes,
Botkin,	Fitzpatrick,	McCulloch,	Strowd, N. C.
Bradley,	Fleming,	McDowell,	Sullivan,
Brantley,	Fox,	McMillin,	Sulloway,
Brenner, Ohio	Gaines,	McRae,	Sulzer,
Bromwell,	Greene,	Maddox,	Sutherland,
Broussard,	Griffith,	Maguire,	Swanson,
Brown,	Griggs,	Mann,	Talbert,
Brucker,	Gunn,	Marshall,	Tate,
Brundidge,	Hartman,	Maxwell,	Taylor, Ala.
Burke,	Hay,	Miers, Ind.	Terry,
Campbell,	Henry, Miss.	Moon,	Todd,
Carmack,	Henry, Tex.	Newlands,	Underwood,
Castle,	Hinrichsen,	Norton, Ohio	Vandiver,
Catchings,	Howard, Ga.	Norton, S. C.	Vincent,
Clardy,	Hunter,	Otey,	Warner,
Clark, Mo.	Jett,	Peters,	Wheeler, Ala.
Clayton,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Pierce, Tenn.	Wheeler, Ky.
Cochran, Mo.	Jones, Va.	Rhea,	White, Ill.
Colson,	Jones, Wash.	Richardson,	Williams, Miss.
Cooney,	Kelley,	Ridgely,	Wilson,
Cooper, Tex.	King,	Bixey,	Young, Va.
Cooper, Wis.	Kleberg,	Robb,	Zenor.
Cowherd,	Knowles,	Robertson, La.
Cox,	Lamb,	Robinson, Ind.

NAYS—172.

Acheson,	Davidson, Wis.	Johnson, Ind.	Pugh,
Adams,	Dayton,	Joy,	Quigg,
Aldrich,	Dingley,	Kerr,	Ray,
Alexander,	Dolliver,	Kirkpatrick,	Reeves,
Arnold,	Dovener,	Knox,	Robbins,
Babcock,	Eddy,	Kulp,	Royse,
Baker, Ill.	Ellis,	Lacey,	Russell,
Baker, Md.	Evans,	Landis,	Shannon,
Barber,	Faris,	Lawrence,	Shattuc,
Barham,	Fischer,	Littauer,	Shelden,
Barney,	Fletcher,	Lond,	Sherman,
Barrett,	Foote,	Loudenslager,	Showalter,
Barrows,	Foss,	Lovering,	Smith, Ill.
Bartholdt,	Fowler, N. J.	Low,	Smith, S. W.
Belden,	Gardner,	Lybrand,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belford,	Gibson,	McCall,	Snover,
Bennett,	Gillet, N. Y.	McCleary,	Southard,
Bishop,	Gillett, Mass.	McEwan,	Southwick,
Boose,	Graff,	McIntire,	Spalding,
Bontell, Ill.	Griffin,	Mahon,	Sperry,
Boutelle, Me.	Grosvenor,	Marsh,	Sprague,
Brownlow,	Grout,	Mercer,	Steele,
Brumm,	Grow,	Mesick,	Stevens, Minn.
Bull,	Hager,	Miller,	Stewart, N. J.
Burleigh,	Hamilton,	Mills,	Stewart, Wis.
Burton,	Harmer,	Minor,	Stone, C. W.
Butler,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Stone, W. A.
Cannon,	Heatwole,	Moody,	Strode, Nebr.
Capron,	Hemenway,	Morris,	Sturtevant,
Chickering,	Henderson,	Mudd,	Tawney,
Clark, Iowa	Henry, Conn.	Northway,	Taylor, Ohio
Clarke, N. H.	Henry, Ind.	Odell,	Thorp,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hepburn,	Olmsted,	Tongue,
Connell,	Hicks,	Otjen,	Updegraff,
Connolly,	Hilborn,	Overstreet,	Van Voorhis,
Corliss,	Hill,	Packer, Pa.	Walker, Mass.
Cousins,	Hooker,	Parker, N. J.	Walker, Va.
Crump,	Hopkins,	Payne,	Wanger,
Crumpacker,	Howard, Ala.	Pearce, Mo.	Ward,
Curtis, Kans.	Howe,	Pearson,	Weymouth,
Dalzell,	Howell,	Perkins,	Williams, Pa.
Danford,	Hull,	Pitney,	Yost,
Davenport,	Jenkins,	Prince,	Young, Pa.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Berry,	Brewer,	McAleer.

NOT VOTING—94.

Beach,	Davison, Ky.	McDonald,	Skinner,
Bingham,	Fenton,	Mahany,	Strait,
Bland,	Fowler, N. C.	Martin,	Vehslage,
Brewster,	Handy,	Meekison,	Wadsworth,
Broderick,	Hitt,	Meyer, La.	Weaver,
Brosius,	Hurley,	Ogden,	White, N. C.
Codding,	Ketcham,	Osborne,	Wilber.
Cranford,	Kitchin,	Powers,
Curtis, Iowa	Linney,	Sauerhering,

So the motion of Mr. BROMWELL, that the House recede from its amendment and concur in the Senate amendment, was rejected.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FENTON; and therefore I withdraw my vote. Were he present, I should vote "aye."

Mr. DOCKERY. My colleague, Mr. BLAND, has been called from the Hall on account of illness. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, Mr. CRANFORD, is detained at home by sickness in his family. He sent to inquire of me after the former roll call if I thought there would be another one to-day. I did not think there would be, and sent him word to that effect.

Mr. DALZELL. My colleague, Mr. BROSIUS, is detained from the House by illness. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. HENDERSON. My colleague from Iowa, Mr. CURTIS, is absent from the city on important business. Were he present, he would vote "no."

Mr. GROSVENOR. My colleague, Mr. WEAVER, is unexpectedly absent from the House. If present, he would vote "no." I make the same statement in regard to my colleague, Mr. FENTON, who has not yet arrived.

Mr. SULZER. My colleague from New York, Mr. VEHSLAGE, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. SHERMAN. My colleague, Mr. WADSWORTH, was called home on Saturday last on important business. Were he present, he would vote "no."

Mr. LAMB. The gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KITCHIN, who is unavoidably absent, would, if present, vote "aye."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. BLAND, on this question.

Mr. MCDONALD with Mr. MEEKISON, on this vote.

Mr. HURLEY with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana, on this question.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated. [Loud applause].

Mr. DINGLEY. I now ask for a vote on my motion that the House insist on its amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. We have voted that we would not recede. Now, if we should vote to insist, what would be the parliamentary status?

The SPEAKER. The effect would be that the House would insist on its amendment to the amendment of the Senate, and would ask a conference.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count the House; but before the count was concluded,

Mr. BAILEY said: Mr. Speaker, to save time, I withdraw the call for a division and will not ask for the yeas and nays.

So the motion of Mr. DINGLEY was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Members who desire to engage in conversation will retire to the cloakrooms; and the House will come to order.

Mr. BAILEY (after a pause). Mr. Speaker, has the Chair appointed the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet appointed the conferees.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the Chair waiting until they are appointed before further business is proceeded with?

The SPEAKER. The House will meanwhile proceed with business.

Mr. BAILEY. If there were no reason to the contrary, I was going to demand that the House proceed with other matters; but in view of the fact that the Chair was waiting——

The SPEAKER. The appointment of conferees can be made and announced at any time; other business may be interrupted for the announcement.

Mr. BAILEY. What I was trying to arrive at was whether there is any good reason why business should be in a state of suspense. If so, I am willing that this condition shall continue. If there be no reason——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has suggested that the business of the House go on.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will demand the regular order.

TRADE-MARKS ON BOTTLES, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill, the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 72) to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, and other receptacles and vessels used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and to prevent the fraudulent use of the same in such commerce.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask consent that the bill be reported again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be again read.

Mr. HICKS. I think if my friend from Tennessee will hear the report it will satisfy him in regard to this matter. The bill has already been read at length.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I only wanted to get some idea of the nature of the bill. If the report shows that sufficiently, I am entirely willing that it be read instead of having the bill read again.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the question was on the third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply desire to say that if this matter will occupy much time I would ask the Chair to appoint the conferees, in the hope that our conferees might, as soon as possible, confer with those of the Senate, and that we may dispose of this matter before both Houses adjourn to-night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he expects of the House the usual courtesy with regard to his appointments. It is not his purpose to delay the matter beyond what is necessary, and whatever he may do, he again says, will be under the eyes of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. And everybody on this side is entirely willing for the Chair to take a proper time; but I understood the Chair to say, in response to my inquiry, that the Chair was ready to name them at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman misunderstood the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. I did. I understood the Chair to say that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker, if there is any regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The bill H. R. 72 was again read.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, does any gentleman desire to make any remarks on this bill? If not, I ask that it be placed upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before that is done, I think there ought to be some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. This is a matter of very great importance to the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country, and it ought not to pass this body without being well understood.

Mr. HICKS. I hold in my hand the report of the committee, giving, I think, full and sufficient reasons why this bill should become a law. I can not express myself in better language than I did in my report. I therefore ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. HICKS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 72) to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, casks, etc., and other vessels used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States, etc., submit the following report:

This bill is an important measure, and the subject-matter thereof was carefully considered by the Committee on Patents, first by a subcommittee and then in general committee, and the voice of the committee was unanimous in favor of the speedy enactment of the measure into law. This same measure was considered in the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee said in their report:

"This measure is intended to protect not only the reliable manufacturers and merchants against the unlawful use of receptacles well known and established in the markets as containing reliable goods, but also seeks to especially preserve for the consumer the original article and prevent the substitution of cheap and spurious merchandise in casks, boxes, and other receptacles known to contain reliable articles of merchandise in the first instance.

"This measure will extend the wise provisions of the trade-mark to the casks, bottles, and other receptacles. The importance of its provisions has been urged for many years by the leading business concerns, boards of trade, and commercial journals of the country. The Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter, one of the leading trade journals, in the interest of its patrons has urged the adoption of such a law, and the necessity for the passage of this bill seems urgent from the information received in the consideration thereof."

Numerous petitions were presented to your committee, representing many industries and manufacturing institutions, all of which urge the necessity of the protection granted in the pending bill. It is claimed by these industries and institutions that there is not in the law, as it now exists, adequate protection against the dishonest and fraudulent use of labels and trade-marks. Genuine articles sold by honest dealers, under skillfully designed and selected trade-marks, are so frequently the subject of piracy and dishonest dealing that the public are continually imposed upon, as well as retail dealers, who have difficulty in distinguishing the good from the bad and the real from the imitations. In view of the importance of honesty and fair dealing in business and trade, and the protection of the honest manufacturer, who is proud of his "trade-mark" and name, from the fraudulent dealer who depends upon his ability to impose his worthless articles upon an unsuspecting public by reason of his ability to unlawfully appropriate an honest trade-mark to further his imposition and fraud, it is, in the judgment of your committee, important to our manufacturing industries that this bill become a law, and they therefore urge its speedy enactment.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, this measure was reported to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was unanimously reported by that committee and passed the House. In this Congress it was referred to the Committee on Patents and unanimously reported from that committee. We believe it to be a meritorious measure. I ask for the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it affects the liquor industry of the country in any way? There was a bill recently passed authorizing the branding of corks, etc. I see this bill provides for labels and trade-marks on bottles.

Mr. HICKS. I yield sufficient time to my friend, Mr. CORLISS, of Michigan, the author of the bill, who can explain fully to my colleague the object of the measure.

Mr. CORLISS. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman, I will state that the liquor associations desire the passage of this measure, for the reason that under the present condition of affairs when a cask or bottle is stamped as containing a recognized liquor, there is now no protection under national law to prevent the substitution of a spurious article.

Many of the States have this law, but if a person manufactures liquor or any other substance that is to be sold in a cask or a bottle, he is not protected against the retailer taking the bottle or cask which is supposed to contain good whisky or some other standard article, putting in a spurious article, and selling it to the public under the old label, thereby deceiving customers. There is a great deal of complaint against this sort of thing, and there is no doubt that this is a good bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

STATE TRADE-MARKS, ETC.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4584) to create State trade-marks and to protect foreign and interstate commerce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to prevent the false branding or other marking of goods, wares, or merchandise, the product of any State or Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, which are or are intended to become articles of foreign or interstate commerce or commerce with the Indian tribes, the governor of any such State or Territory and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to adopt a public trade-mark each for his or their respective State, Territory, or the District aforesaid, and file a description and illustration of the same in the Patent Office of the United States; but no such trade-mark or label shall be entitled to such registration which consists of or simulates the arms, seals, or other insignia of the United States, or of any State or municipality, or of any foreign nation, or which is offensive to public sentiment or morals.

SEC. 2. That upon the receipt of any description and illustration of a trade-mark as provided in the preceding section, and upon payment of a fee of $25, the Commissioner of Patents shall register the same, and a certificate of such registration, fully describing such trade-mark, shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Department of the Interior, and signed by the Commissioner of Patents, and a full record thereof be made and kept in books for that purpose. Copies of any such trade-marks, and of the descriptions accompanying the same, and of the certificate of registry, when duly authenticated by the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner of Patents, shall be received in evidence in all courts and by all officers of the United States, and shall be conclusive proof of the adoption and registration of such trade-marks.

SEC. 3. That every such trade-mark shall be used only under and in accordance with such rules, regulations, and restrictions as may be provided by or according to the laws of the State, Territory, or District adopting and filing the same, and upon goods, wares, and merchandise produced, grown, or manufactured therein, and upon packages and wrappers containing the same.

SEC. 4. That every person who, contrary to the provisions of this act or to the laws, rules, regulations, and restrictions of any State or Territory or the District aforesaid, affixes the registered trade-mark of such State, Territory, or District, or causes or procures the same to be affixed, or any colorable imitation thereof, calculated to deceive the public, to any goods, wares, or merchandise which are or are intended for sale, shipment, consumption, or use without and beyond the boundaries of such State, Territory, or District, or to any package or wrapper containing the same, shall be liable to an action on the case for damages for the wrongful use of said trade-mark at the suit of the owner thereof; and the party aggrieved shall also have his remedy according to the course of equity to enjoin the wrongful use of such trade-mark used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, as aforesaid, and to recover compensation therefor in any court having jurisdiction over the person guilty of such wrongful act; and courts of the United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases without regard to the amount in controversy.

SEC. 5. That every person who shall knowingly deal in, or sell, or keep, or offer for sale, or cause or procure the sale of, any goods, wares, or merchandise, in order that the same may become, or after they have become, subjects of foreign or interstate commerce, to which, or to the package or wrapper containing the same, there is fraudulently affixed any public trade-mark, as provided in this act, or any colorable imitation thereof calculated to deceive the public, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 6. That every person who fraudulently fills, or causes or procures to be fraudulently filled, any package, or fraudulently uses, or causes or procures to be used, any wrapper to which is affixed any public trade-mark registered pursuant to the provisions of this act, or any colorable imitation thereof calculated to deceive the public, with any goods, wares, or merchandise, with intent to deceive or mislead any purchaser or user of the same as to their true character, origin, or source, shall, if said goods, wares, or merchandise have become or are intended to become subjects of foreign or interstate commerce or commerce with the Indian tribes, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 7. That if any person shall brand, mark, stamp, stencil, label, name, or describe any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any package or wrapper containing the same, which have or may become subjects of foreign or interstate commerce, in such manner as may be calculated to deceive or mislead any purchaser or user of the same as to the true character of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or as to the place where they were grown, produced, or manufactured, or shall cause or procure the same to be done by others; or if any person for himself, or as the agent or factor for another, or as a member of any copartnership, or as a manager, superintendent, agent, or representative of any corporation, shall have in his possession or under his control any goods, wares, or merchandise which he knows or has good reason to believe bear any public trade-mark, or any brand, mark, stamp, stencil, label, name, or description, in contravention of the provisions of this act, he is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

The Committee on Patents recommended the following amendments:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4584) entitled "A bill to create State trade-marks and to protect foreign and interstate commerce," beg leave to submit the following report, with several amendments, and recommend that said bill do pass.

In line 12, page 3, section 4, strike out the words "owner thereof" and insert the words "State, Territory, or District adopting the same."

In line 13, page 3, section 4, strike out the word "his" and insert the letter "a" therefor.

In lines 16 and 17, page 3, section 4, strike out the words "and to recover compensation therefor."

In line 10, page 4, section 5, strike out the words "section four of."

In line 13, page 4, section 6, strike out the words "section four of."

In lines 18 and 19, page 5, section 7, strike out the words "as provided in section four of this act," and insert the words "by a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend this bill by striking out all of section 7 as it now exists and substituting therefor a penalty clause, which shall read as follows——

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have order. This seems to be a very important bill, changing the whole trade-mark laws of the country.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBBINS. We want to hear something about it. It seems to be a very radical measure.

Mr. HICKS. My motion is that all of section 7 as read be stricken out, and that a penalty clause be inserted, to read as follows:

In all convictions under this act the person or persons so convicted shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or either or both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

I now move the passage of the bill with the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has there been any general debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the section which he moves to strike out has several amendments pending upon it. Action must first be taken upon the amendments.

Mr. HICKS. Of course we want to get it in the proper parliamentary form.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendments before the motion to strike out is put.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HICKS. I want, of course, to get the bill in proper parliamentary form.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill seems to be a very important measure.

Mr. HICKS. It is, and concerns important interests that include all the food producers of the country.

Mr. DOCKERY. Changing the law in respect to trade-marks. I am not familiar with this question, but it does occur to me that the bill can very properly go over until the House is in proper condition for its consideration. Under existing surroundings a bill of this importance, with a large number of sections, should be considered by the House. The committee is proposing to strike out one section, so that it is apparent that the committee itself has found some objection to its own measure. I do not know anything about the bill, but a gentleman on my right states that it changes the law relating to trade-marks so that States may establish trade-marks; and objection is also made by one or two gentlemen that jurisdiction is given to the United States courts without reference to the amount involved. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that it is an important measure, and I do not think it should be pressed for action until the House is in proper condition to consider it.

Mr. HICKS. I will state, in reply to my friend, that this bill is pressed by the food-producing interests of the country. They have appeared before the committee and urged the enactment of a measure such as this. The clause that we agree to strike out, section 7, is stricken out at the request of the wine and liquor producers of the country, they claiming that it interferes especially with their interests, and we agreed, rather than have any serious opposition here upon the floor and interfere with interests that we have no desire nor intention to antagonize, that we will not insist upon the enactment of section 7, but insert a penalty clause instead thereof. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHICKERING].

Mr. CHICKERING. I thank the gentleman, but do not desire to take up the time of the House. The measure meets the requirements of the interests of my people fully.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHICKERING] represents the dairy interests of New York State. The assistant secretary of agriculture of that State, the superintendent of the dairy and food commission of New York, and the representatives of the American Produce Exchange, of the city of New York and also of the State of New York, all appeared before the committee and urged the enactment of this measure. I believe that this amendment which has been suggested to the measure will not antagonize the food-producing interests and will in no way interfere with the real object of the measure. There should be no serious objection to the enactment of the bill into law.

Mr. BARTLETT. How does it change the law?

Mr. HICKS. It does not change the present law.

Mr. DE VRIES. With that section out, there will be nothing that will interfere with the wine and liquor interests of the country?

Mr. HICKS. Nothing.

Mr. DE VRIES. And the practice of branding for Sauterne, Burgundy, etc., will not be prohibited by any provision of this bill?

Mr. HICKS. No, sir. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER] has examined the measure and agrees to it. He thinks with this section 7 stricken out there can be no objection to the bill. He can speak for himself.

Mr. FISCHER. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. The question has been asked by friends about me. It relates to section 5. As I understand that section, it simply intends to prohibit the refilling of bottles and casks that are already marked and labeling them with other brands.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman correctly interprets that paragraph of the bill.

Mr. FISCHER. And section 7, to which I called your attention, is obnoxious to the wine and liquor interests?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir; that is your claim.

Mr. FISCHER. And your committee has stricken it out, merely inserting a penalty in its place?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; I do this to prevent antagonism to the part of the bill I am specially desirous of caring for, as already stated by me.

Mr. DE VRIES. Section 6 also applies only to refilling. Is that not true?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments to the section that is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order to move to recommit the bill to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to recommit.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I make such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending that motion, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that some accommodation of differences be made, so that the bill may be withdrawn. It does not seem to me that this is an opportune time to consider the bill.

Mr. HICKS. I will withdraw the bill on the request of my friend from Missouri and in view of the disposition of the House not to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I consent to its being withdrawn, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The bill is considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HICKS. I would like for it, however, Mr. Speaker, to retain its place and for the Committee on Patents to retain its place on the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman can call it up at some other time and his committee retain its place.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to say a word upon this bill itself, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ARNOLD. It is withdrawn.

Mr. RIDGELY. To the committee, not to the House.

Mr. ARNOLD. Regular order!

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HICKS. I now call up for consideration the bill H. R. 8620.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the Chair announces as conferees on the joint resolution relating to Cuba Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it in order, pending the motion to adjourn, to move to take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the motion to take a recess can only be voted on if the motion to adjourn be voted down?

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, on the appointment of this conference committee and its being reported to the Senate, if the Senate should assent to the conference and appoint conferees, would not the House have to be so notified before the conference committee could go to work? Would the matter be in conference until both bodies had assented?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the motion.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 310. At act for the relief of Johnson Hays;

S. 504. An act granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard;

S. 603. An act granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs;

S. 1345. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah Brumm;

S. 1466. An act granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell;

S. 1467. An act granting a pension to Adolphine Krez; and

S. 1751. An act granting an increase of pension to Moses M. Crants.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. FITZGERALD requested leave to print on the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs relating to the condition of affairs in Cuba.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks permission to print in the RECORD his views on the Cuban question.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. I object.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is that debatable? It seems to me that the House message ought to get to the Senate in fifteen minutes, and we ought to get a reply before 6 o'clock. Then if we do get that reply the matter will be in conference, and we can take a recess or an adjournment just as the House thinks proper.

Mr. ARNOLD. I will withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

REPRINT OF H. R. 7130.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of House bill 7130 and the report thereon.

Mr. McMILLIN. What bill is that?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the so called anti-scalping bill, and is liable to be reached pretty soon, and we want a reprint for that reason.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before that request is granted, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] how much notice members will get before that bill is called up? It is a very important bill, and I think we ought to have some notice.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If gentlemen are in their seats, they will need no notice.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be reached on the call of committees. I do not know when that will be. We are on the call of committees now, and that is the reason I want the reprint.

The request of Mr. SHERMAN was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask, as a matter of fact, whether the Senate has been notified of our action and the appointment of the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to say. The report has been directed to be made. If there is no objection, the House is in recess until 20 minutes past 5.

The recess having expired, the House (at 20 minutes past 5 o'clock) was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a fifteen-minute recess.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana? The Chair hears none; and accordingly the House is in recess until 25 minutes of 6 o'clock.

The recess having expired, the House (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes) was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that no message from the Senate is ready, and I ask that the House take a recess until 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the House will be in recess until 6 o'clock.

There was no objection.

The recess having expired, the House (at 6 o'clock) was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, while we were waiting for a message from the Senate which does not seem to come, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] made a suggestion a few minutes ago that seems to me worthy of consideration—that we might by unanimous consent remain in session with the understanding that no business was to be transacted, except to receive the message from the Senate; and if any message should be received, upon receipt of the same, the House, by unanimous consent, is to stand adjourned until to-morrow. [Cries of "Oh, no, no!"] I will withdraw the suggestion, as there seems to be so much objection to it.

Mr. PAYNE. I insist upon my motion, Mr. Speaker.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to; and accordingly the House took a recess until 8 o'clock.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members may have five days to print remarks in the RECORD upon the Cuban resolutions. There has been no opportunity for debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] asks unanimous consent that members may have five days to print remarks in the RECORD on the Cuban question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object. I have no objection to the gentleman from Kansas speaking now, if he desires. [A pause.] I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I think there can not be a more useless expenditure of public money than the printing of such remarks in the RECORD. I object.

Mr. SIMPSON. What the gentleman from New York says might be true of his own remarks.

Mr. GAINES (to Mr. PAYNE). The people do not want any more of your "Paine's Celery Compound." That is the reason you object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. VINCENT. I ask that all gentlemen have leave to print their remarks except the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection is made.

Mr. VINCENT. Is there objection to my request?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is objection.

Mr. VINCENT. I would like to ask unanimous consent of the gentleman from New York to publish remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the same objection operates.

CUBA.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS, Mr. FORAKER, and Mr. MORGAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

After the lapse of some time,

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect, having met, after full and free conference report to their respective Houses as follows:

That they have been unable to agree.

ROBERT ADAMS, Jr.,
JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

C. K. DAVIS,
J. B. FORAKER,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 233 and ask for a further conference. On this motion I move the previous question.

Mr. DINSMORE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BROMWELL rose.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas yields to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ADAMS. I still hold the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio takes the floor for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and concur therein. [Applause.] And on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House recede and concur. [The question was put.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. DINSMORE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 177, answered "present" 1, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—145.

Adamson,	Colson,	Henry, Tex.	Mann,
Allen,	Cooney,	Hinrichsen,	Marshall,
Bailey,	Cooper, Tex.	Howard, Ga.	Martin,
Baird,	Cowherd,	Hunter,	Maxwell,
Ball,	Cox,	Jett,	Meekison,
Bankhead,	Cummings,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Meyer, La.
Barlow,	Davey,	Jones, Va.	Miers, Ind.
Bartlett,	Davis,	Jones, Wash.	Moon,
Belknap,	De Armond,	Kelley,	Newlands,
Bell,	De Graffenreid,	King,	Norton, Ohio
Benner, Pa.	De Vries,	Kleberg,	Norton, S. C.
Benton,	Dinsmore,	Knowles,	Otey,
Berry,	Dockery,	Lamb,	Peters,
Bodine,	Dorr,	Lanham,	Pierce, Tenn.
Botkin,	Driggs,	Latimer,	Rhea,
Bradley,	Elliott,	Lentz,	Richardson,
Brantley,	Ermentrout,	Lewis, Ga.	Ridgely,
Brenner, Ohio	Fitzgerald,	Lewis, Wash.	Rixey,
Bromwell,	Fitzpatrick,	Little,	Robb,
Broussard,	Fleming,	Livingston,	Robertson, La.
Brown,	Fowler, N. C.	Lloyd,	Robinson, Ind.
Brucker,	Fox,	Lorimer,	Sayers,
Brundidge,	Gaines,	Love,	Settle,
Burke,	Greene,	McClellan,	Shuford,
Campbell,	Griffith,	McCormick,	Simpson,
Carmack,	Griggs,	McCulloch,	Sims,
Castle,	Gunn,	McDowell,	Slayden,
Clardy,	Handy,	McMillin,	Smith, Ky.
Clark, Mo.	Hartman,	McRae,	Sparkman,
Clayton,	Hay,	Maddox,	Stallings,
Cochran, Mo.	Henry, Miss.	Maguire,	Stark,

Stephens, Tex.	Sutherland,	Underwood,	Williams, Miss.
Stokes,	Talbert,	Vandiver,	Young, Va.
Strowd, N. C.	Tate,	Vincent,	Zenor.
Sullivan,	Taylor, Ala.	Warner,
Sulloway,	Terry,	Wheeler, Ky.
Sulzer,	Todd.	White, Ill.

NAYS—177.

Acheson,	Danford,	Johnson, Ind.	Quigg,
Adams,	Davenport,	Kerr,	Ray,
Aldrich,	Davidson, Wis.	Ketcham,	Reeves,
Alexander,	Dayton,	Kirkpatrick,	Robbins,
Arnold,	Dingley,	Knox,	Royse,
Babcock,	Dolliver,	Kulp,	Russell,
Baker, Ill.	Dovener,	Lacey,	Shannon,
Baker, Md.	Eddy,	Landis,	Shattuc,
Barber,	Ellis,	Lawrence,	Shelden,
Barham,	Evans,	Linney,	Sherman,
Barney,	Faris,	Littauer,	Showalter,
Barrett,	Fischer,	Loud,	Smith, Ill.
Barrows,	Fletcher,	Loudenslager,	Smith, S. W.
Bartholdt,	Foote,	Lovering,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Beach,	Foss,	Low,	Snover,
Belden,	Fowler, N. J.	Lybrand,	Southard,
Belford,	Gardner,	McCall,	Southwick,
Bennett,	Gibson,	McCleary,	Spalding,
Bishop,	Gillet, N. Y.	McDonald,	Sperry,
Boone,	Gillett, Mass.	McEwan,	Sprague,
Boutell, Ill.	Graff,	McIntire,	Steele,
Boutelle, Me.	Griffin,	Mahon,	Stevens, Minn.
Brewster,	Grosvenor,	Marsh,	Stewart, N. J.
Broderick,	Grout,	Mercer,	Stewart, Wis.
Brownlow,	Grow,	Mesick,	Stone, C. W.
Brumm,	Hager,	Miller,	Stone, W. A.
Bull,	Hamilton,	Mills,	Strode, Nebr.
Burleigh,	Harmer,	Minor,	Tawney,
Burton,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Tayler, Ohio
Butler,	Heatwole,	Moody,	Thorp,
Cannon,	Hemenway,	Morris,	Tongue,
Capron,	Henderson,	Mudd,	Updegraff,
Chickering,	Henry, Conn.	Northway,	Van Voorhis,
Clark, Iowa	Henry, Ind.	Olmsted,	Walker, Mass.
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hepburn,	Otjen,	Walker, Va.
Codding,	Hicks,	Overstreet,	Wanger,
Connell,	Hilborn,	Packer, Pa.	Ward,
Connolly,	Hill,	Parker, N. J.	Weaver,
Cooper, Wis.	Hooker,	Payne,	Weymouth,
Corliss,	Hopkins,	Pearce, Mo.	Williams, Pa.
Cousins,	Howe,	Pearson,	Yost,
Crump,	Howell,	Perkins,	Young, Pa.
Crumpacker,	Hull,	Pitney,
Curtis, Kans.	Hurley,	Prince,
Dalzell,	Jenkins,	Pugh,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

McAleer.

NOT VOTING—82.

Bingham,	Davison, Ky.	Odell,	Sturtevant,
Bland,	Fenton,	Ogden,	Swanson,
Brewer,	Hitt,	Osborne,	Vehslage,
Brosius,	Howard, Ala.	Powers,	Wadsworth,
Catchings,	Joy,	Sauerhering,	Wheeler, Ala.
Clarke, N. H.	Kitchin,	Shafroth,	White, N. C.
Cranford,	Lester,	Skinner,	Wilber,
Curtis, Iowa	Mahany,	Strait,	Wilson.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this day:

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. CATCHINGS.

On this question:

Mr. HITT with Mr. WHEELER of Alabama.

On this vote:

Mr. STURTEVANT with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. ODELL with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. VEHSLAGE.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. ODELL, who is detained on account of very serious illness in his family, which made it impossible for him to be here to-night. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "aye."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BLAND is detained from the House by illness. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state, although I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. POWERS, I have voted upon this question by his special permission.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] were here, he would vote "aye."

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote. The Chair, however, begs to suggest to the House that the attention of members is essential.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]. If I could have voted, I should have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the vote was received with applause on the Republican side.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] that the House insist and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend that by making it until 10.30.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend that by making it 10.30.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by making it 10.30 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to amend, to take a recess until 10.30 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL. I withdraw the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio will say "aye."

Mr. SIMPSON. What is the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. We are unable to hear.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is that the House take a recess until half past 10.

The amendment of Mr. BROMWELL was rejected.

The motion of Mr. ADAMS was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 11 p. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 11 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for half an hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House took a recess until 11.30 p. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 11.30 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate still further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. FORAKER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 504) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 164) granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. KENNEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7318) for the relief of Frank Loyd, of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1751. An act granting an increase of pension to Moses M. Crantz;

S. 1467. An act granting a pension to Adolphine Krez, widow of Conrad Krez, late colonel Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers;

S. 1466. An act granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell, late private of Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry;

S. 1345. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah Brumm;

S. 603. An act granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs;

S. 310. An act granting a pension to Johnson Hays; and

S. 3. An act to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate has taken a recess until 12 o'clock. I move that the House take a recess until 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House (at 11 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) took a further recess until 12 o'clock midnight.

The recess having expired, the House, at 12 o'clock midnight, resumed its session.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 12.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 1 minute a. m.) the House took a recess until 12.30 a. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 12.30 o'clock a. m., resumed its session.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 32 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until 1 o'clock a. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 1 o'clock a. m., resumed its session.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent that I may be allowed to print some remarks in the RECORD on this Cuban question. Some time ago I asked unanimous consent for all the members to do so, but there seemed to be some objection to that. I have not had opportunity to express my views on this important subject heretofore.

I have been trotting back and forward between here and the Senate to hear the debate, and I am very much interested in it. I have a few remarks I should like to submit. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to print my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FOOTE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to make a speech now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to print some remarks in the RECORD on the Cuban question.

Mr. MCEWAN. I should like to have a sample of what he is going to say before I give consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SOUTHWICK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be given five minutes in which to express his views on the Cuban situation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move as an amendment that he be allowed to do so either in the Hall or out on the steps. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 18, 1898.

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

The Clerk also read the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I present the report of the committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) for the recognition of the independence of the people and Republic of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1, in line 1, striking out the words "are, and."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, in line 2, to strike out all after the word "independent," to and including the word "Island," in line 4; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the resolution, omitting in line 2 thereof the words "and republic," and agree to the same.

ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

C. K. DAVIS,
J. B. FORAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move the House adopt the report of the conferees, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House agree to the report of the committee of conference, and on that asks the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. The previous question being ordered now, would there be twenty minutes on each side allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not on this subject.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure I would have no disposition to occupy the whole twenty minutes, but I think we would desire as much as three, or perhaps five, minutes on this side.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker [cries of "Vote!"], I do not wish to be discourteous; but the hour is very late——

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Let us have the resolution read as it will read when adopted. I would like to have the resolution read, so that we may fully understand it. I believe we do understand it, but still I would like to have it read as it will appear when amended.

The resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Resolved, etc., First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

[Applause.]

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

[Cheers and loud applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Under the rules there is twenty minutes given to each side for debate, is there not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. When the previous question is moved and there is no previous debate?

The SPEAKER. When the previous question is ordered on a subject debated. The object of that rule was to prevent a proposition being presented without any debate; but these propositions have had such debate as the House saw fit to give them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. When, Mr. Speaker, was there any discussion?

Mr. BAILEY. I submit that this particular question has not been discussed.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule. For instance, when a matter has been discussed in Committee of the Whole, that is regarded as debate, and such has been the rule in all these matters. It was an extension of the privilege under a demand for the previous question, and had that intention, and that only.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly agree that if this precise question had been before the House and had been discussed at any other stage of the proceedings, that then we would not be entitled to this debate. For instance, if when the matter was presented a motion was made to insist, and debate had occurred, and then it had come back to the House, and, at a different stage of the proceedings, again a motion to recede or concur was made, the matter having been once debated, it would not be open to debate the second time.

But the question now is upon the report of the conference committee, and that matter neither exactly nor for the purpose of this vote generally has been presented to the House. In support of that contention it perhaps will happen that many gentlemen who voted one way on a previous roll call may vote another way on this roll call. Therefore it must be that the question before the House now is not a question which has been debated by the House during this legislative day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has considered the question, and after consideration it seems very clear to the Chair that the proposed debate is not possible under the rules of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair or raise any question of that kind. I then ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withhold his demand for the previous question until I shall possibly occupy two or three minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be discourteous in the slightest way, but if time is granted to the gentleman from Texas, there are gentlemen on this side of the House who are urging me to give them time; and owing to the lateness of the hour and the great fatigue of those who have participated in this matter. I must insist upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. I then ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield five minutes to this side and five minutes to that side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending that demand for the previous question, I ask unanimous consent that five minutes' debate be allowed on this side to the gentleman from Texas and five minutes on the other side.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has refused that request.

Mr. DOCKERY. He has not refused a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for five minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey demands the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this is an unprecedented and indecent proposition. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 176, noes 75.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 121, answered "present" 2, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—173.

Acheson,	Curtis, Kans.	Hurley,	Reeves,
Adams,	Dalzell,	Jenkins,	Robbins,
Aldrich,	Danford,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Royse,
Alexander,	Davenport,	Ketcham,	Russell,
Arnold,	Davidson, Wis.	Kirkpatrick,	Shannon,
Babcock,	Dayton,	Knox,	Shattuc,
Baker, Md.	Dingley,	Kulp,	Shelden,
Barber,	Dolliver,	Lacey,	Sherman,
Barham,	Dorr,	Landis,	Showalter,
Barney,	Dovener,	Lawrence,	Smith, Ill.
Barrows,	Eddy,	Linney,	Smith, S. W.
Bartholdt,	Ellis,	Lorimer,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belden,	Evans,	Loudenslager,	Snover,
Belford,	Faris,	Lovering,	Southard,
Belknap,	Fischer,	Low,	Southwick,
Bennett,	Fletcher,	Lybrand,	Spalding,
Berry,	Foote,	McCleary,	Sperry,
Bishop,	Fosa,	McDonald,	Sprague,
Booze,	Fowler, N. J.	McEwan,	Steele,
Boutell, Ill.	Gardner,	Mahany,	Stevens, Minn.
Boutelle, Me.	Gibson,	Mahon,	Stewart, N. J.
Brewster,	Gillet, N. Y.	Marsh,	Stewart, Wis.
Broderick,	Gillett, Mass.	Maxwell,	Stone, C. W.
Brown,	Graff,	Meekison,	Stone, W. A.
Brownlow,	Griffin,	Mercer,	Strode, Nebr.
Brumm,	Grosvenor,	Mesick,	Sulloway,
Bull,	Grow,	Miers, Ind.	Tayler, Ohio
Burleigh,	Hager,	Mills,	Thorp,
Burton,	Hamilton,	Minor,	Tongue,
Butler,	Harmer,	Mitchell,	Updegraff,
Cannon,	Heatwole,	Morris,	Van Voorhis,
Capron,	Hemenway,	Mudd,	Walker, Mass.
Chickering,	Henderson,	Northway,	Walker, Va.
Clark, Iowa	Henry, Conn.	Olmsted,	Wanger,
Clarke, N. H.	Henry, Ind.	Otjen,	Ward,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hepburn,	Overstreet,	Warner,
Codding,	Hicks,	Packer, Pa.	Weaver,
Connell,	Hilborn,	Payne,	Weymouth,
Connolly,	Hill,	Pearce, Mo.	White, Ill.
Cooper, Wis.	Hooker,	Perkins,	Yost,
Corliss,	Hopkins,	Pitney,	Young, Pa.
Cousins,	Howe,	Prince,
Crump,	Howell,	Pugh,
Crumpacker,	Hull,	Ray,

NAYS—121.

Adamson,	Clayton,	Hinrichsen,	McRae,
Allen,	Cochran, Mo.	Howard, Ga.	Maddox,
Bailey,	Cooney,	Hunter,	Maguire,
Baker, Ill.	Cooper, Tex.	Jett,	Marshall,
Ball,	Davey,	Johnson, Ind.	Martin,
Bankhead,	Davis,	Jones, Va.	Meyer, La.
Barlow,	De Graffenreid,	Jones, Wash.	Moon,
Bartlett,	De Vries,	Kelley,	Newlands,
Bell,	Dinsmore,	King,	Norton, Ohio
Benner, Pa.	Ermentrout,	Kleberg,	Norton, S. C.
Bodine,	Fitzgerald,	Knowles,	Ogden,
Botkin,	Fitzpatrick,	Lamb,	Otey,
Bradley,	Fleming,	Lanham,	Peters,
Brantley,	Fowler, N. C.	Latimer,	Pierce, Tenn.
Brenner, Ohio	Fox,	Lentz,	Rhea,
Brewer,	Gaines,	Lewis, Ga.	Richardson,
Broussard,	Greene,	Lewis, Wash.	Ridgely,
Brucker,	Griffith,	Little,	Rixey,
Brundidge,	Griggs,	Livingston,	Robb,
Burke,	Guna,	Lloyd,	Robertson, La.
Campbell,	Handy,	Love,	Robinson, Ind.
Carmack,	Hartman,	McClellan,	Sayers,
Castle,	Hay,	McCulloch,	Settle,
Clardy,	Henry, Miss.	McDowell,	Shafroth,
Clark, Mo.	Henry, Tex.	McMillin,	Shuford,
Simpson,	Stokes,	Taylor, Ala.	Williams, Miss.
Sims,	Strowd, N. C.	Terry,	Wilson,
Slayden,	Sullivan,	Todd,	Zenor.
Sparkman,	Sulzer,	Underwood,
Stark,	Sutherland,	Vehslage,
Stephens, Tex.	Tate,	Wheeler, Ky.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Cummings,	Moody.

NOT VOTING—59.

Baird,	De Armond,	McAleer,	Stallings,
Barrett,	Dockery,	McCall,	Strait,
Beach,	Driggs,	McCormick,	Sturtevant,
Benton,	Elliott,	McIntire,	Swanson,
Bingham,	Fenton,	Mann,	Talbert,
Bland,	Grout,	Miller,	Tawney,
Bromwell,	Hawley,	Odell,	Vandiver,
Brosius,	Hitt,	Osborne,	Vincent,
Catchings,	Howard, Ala.	Parker, N. J.	Wadsworth,
Colson,	Joy,	Pearson,	Wheeler, Ala.
Cowherd,	Kerr,	Powers,	White, N. C.
Cox,	Kitchin,	Quigg,	Wilber,
Cranford,	Lester,	Sauerhering,	Williams, Pa.
Curtis, Iowa	Littauer,	Skinner,	Young, Va.
Davison, Ky.	Loud,	Smith, Ky.

So the previous question was ordered.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. HICKS with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. CLAYTON.

For this day:

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. STALLINGS.

Mr. KERR with Mr. TALBERT.

For the remainder of this day:

Mr. MILLER with Mr. VANDIVER.

Mr. GROUT with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. QUIGG with Mr. CUMMINGS.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am announced as being paired with Mr. CLAYTON. I was not paired upon this question, and he has voted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. QUIGG, who has gone home sick, but it does not extend to the final vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, my pair was withdrawn, and I therefore voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Would it be in order at this stage, upon the consideration of the conference report, to move that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate resolution and concur in the same?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, because a conference report is to be accepted or rejected in its entirety. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MAHANY, Mr. McMILLIN, and Mr. DOCKERY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 311, nays 6, answered "present" 1, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—311.

Acheson,	Broussard,	Danford,	Griggs,
Adams,	Brown,	Davenport,	Grosvenor,
Adamson,	Brownlow,	Davey,	Grow,
Aldrich,	Brucker,	Davidson, Wis.	Gunn,
Alexander,	Brumm,	Davis,	Hager,
Allen,	Brundidge,	Dayton,	Hamilton,
Arnold,	Bull,	De Armond,	Handy,
Babcock,	Burke,	De Graffenreid,	Harmer,
Bailey,	Burleigh,	De Vries,	Hartman,
Baird,	Burton,	Dingley,	Hawley,
Baker, Ill.	Butler,	Dinsmore,	Hay,
Baker, Md.	Campbell,	Dockery,	Heatwole,
Ball,	Cannon,	Dolliver,	Hemenway,
Bankhead,	Capron,	Dorr,	Henderson,
Barber,	Carmack,	Dovener,	Henry, Conn.
Barham,	Castle,	Driggs,	Henry, Ind.
Barlow,	Chickering,	Eddy,	Henry, Miss.
Barney,	Clardy,	Ellis,	Henry, Tex.
Barrows,	Clark, Iowa	Ermentrout,	Hepburn,
Bartholdt,	Clark, Mo.	Evans,	Hicks,
Bartlett,	Clayton,	Faris,	Hilborn,
Beach,	Cochran, Mo.	Fischer,	Hill,
Belden,	Cochrane, N. Y.	Fitzgerald,	Hinrichsen,
Belford,	Codding,	Fitzpatrick,	Hooker,
Belknap,	Colson,	Fleming,	Hopkins,
Bell,	Connell,	Fletcher,	Howard, Ga.
Benner, Pa.	Connolly,	Foote,	Howe,
Bennett,	Cooney,	Fosa,	Howell,
Benton,	Cooper, Tex.	Fowler, N. C.	Hull,
Bishop,	Cooper, Wis.	Fowler, N. J.	Hunter,
Bodine,	Corliss,	Fox,	Hurley,
Booze,	Cousins,	Gaines,	Jenkins,
Botkin,	Cowherd,	Gibson,	Jett,
Boutell, Ill.	Cox,	Gillet, N. Y.	Johnson, N. Dak.
Bradley,	Crump,	Gillett, Mass.	Jones, Va.
Brantley,	Crumpacker,	Graff,	Jones, Wash.
Brenner, Ohio	Cummings,	Greene,	Kelley,
Brewster,	Curtis, Kans.	Griffin,	Ketcham,
Broderick,	Dalzell,	Griffith,	King,

Kirkpatrick,	Mann,	Rhea,	Stewart, Wis.
Kleberg,	Marsh,	Richardson,	Stokes,
Knowles,	Marshall,	Ridgely,	Stone, C. W.
Knox,	Martin,	Rixey,	Stone, W. A.
Kulp,	Maxwell,	Robb,	Strode, Nebr.
Lacey,	Meekison,	Robbins,	Strowd, N. C.
Lamb,	Mercer,	Robertson, La.	Sullivan,
Landis,	Mesick,	Robinson, Ind.	Sulloway,
Lanham,	Meyer, La.	Royse,	Sulzer,
Latimer,	Miers, Ind.	Russell,	Sutherland,
Lawrence,	Mills,	Sayers,	Tate,
Lentz,	Minor,	Settle,	Tawney,
Lewis, Ga.	Mitchell,	Shafroth,	Tayler, Ohio
Lewis, Wash.	Moody,	Shannon,	Taylor, Ala.
Linney,	Moon,	Shattuc,	Terry,
Littauer,	Morris,	Shelden,	Thorp,
Little,	Mudd,	Sherman,	Todd,
Livingston,	Newlands,	Showalter,	Tongue.
Lloyd,	Northway,	Shuford,	Underwood,
Lorimer,	Norton, Ohio	Simpson,	Updegraff,
Loudenslager,	Norton, S. C.	Sims,	Van Voorhis,
Love,	Ogden,	Slayden,	Vehslage,
Lovering,	Olmsted,	Smith, Ill.	Walker, Mass.
Low,	Otey,	Smith, Ky.	Walker, Va.
Lybrand,	Otjen,	Smith, S. W.	Wanger,
McCleary,	Overstreet,	Smith, Wm. Alden	Ward,
McClellan,	Packer, Pa.	Snover,	Warner,
McCormick,	Parker, N. J.	Southard,	Weaver,
McCulloch,	Payne,	Southwick,	Weymouth,
McDonald,	Pearce, Mo.	Spalding,	Wheeler, Ky.
McDowell,	Pearson,	Sparkman,	White, Ill.
McEwan,	Perkins,	Sperry,	Williams, Miss.
McIntire,	Peters,	Sprague,	Wilson,
McMillin,	Pierce, Tenn.	Stallings,	Yost,
McRae,	Pitney,	Stark,	Young, Pa.
Maddox,	Prince,	Steele,	Young, Va.
Maguire,	Pugh,	Stephens, Tex.	Zenor.
Mahany,	Ray,	Stevens, Minn.	The Speaker.
Mahon,	Reeves,	Stewart, N. J.

NAYS—6.

Boutelle, Me.	Gardner,	Loud,	McCall.
Brewer,	Johnson, Ind.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Clarke, N. H.

NOT VOTING—38.

Barrett,	Elliott,	Miller,	Talbert,
Berry,	Fenton,	Odell,	Vandiver,
Bingham,	Grout,	Osborne,	Vincent,
Bland,	Hitt,	Powers,	Wadsworth,
Bromwell,	Howard, Ala.	Quigg,	Wheeler, Ala.
Brosius,	Joy,	Sauerhering,	White, N. C.
Catchings,	Kerr,	Skinner,	Wilber,
Cranford,	Kitchin,	Strait,	Williams, Pa.
Curtis, Iowa	Lester,	Sturtevant,
Davison, Ky.	McAleer,	Swanson,

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. My colleagues, Mr. BLAND and Mr. VANDIVER, are absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. McINTIRE. I voted "aye" on this proposition. I was, however, paired with Mr. BROMWELL. I am informed that if he had been here, he would also have voted "aye."

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CATCHINGS. I have voted in the affirmative, but wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. LAMB. If Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, were here, he would vote "aye."

Mr. LATIMER. My colleague, Dr. STRAIT, is absent on account of sickness. If here, he would vote "aye."

Mr. CUMMINGS. My colleague, Mr. QUIGG, is absent on account of sickness. If here, he would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 310, the nays 6. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, a motion to reconsider the vote just taken was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] be content if, when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next?

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the Senate is not now in session, and in order that this resolution may be sent there and signed by the Vice-President, the House should meet to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not know that the Senate had adjourned.

The motion of Mr. ADAMS, that the House adjourn, was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4190) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of Fort Stanton, N. Mex., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1109); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3145) to establish an assay office at Seattle, Wash., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1110); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3804) for the relief of James McKenzie, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1111); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5484) for the relief of Robert Langston; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 9928) for the coinage of so much of the silver bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," as represents the gain or seigniorage of such bullion, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HINRICHSEN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 236) providing for a survey and estimates for a waterway from the controlling works of the Chicago Drainage Canal, near Lockport, Ill., to the mouth of the Illinois River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 9929) for the benefit of the Interstate Land Company of Colorado, and Robert L. Lindsay, of the State of Missouri—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. GILLET of New York: A bill (H. R. 9930) to increase the pension of Escort C. Wells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 9931) granting an honorable discharge to Lewis Benedict—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 9932) granting a pension to Harriet Gailhouse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HINRICHSEN: A bill (H. R. 9933) to increase the pension of William Newnom—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9934) for the relief of William B. Payne—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 9935) to pension Levi C. Mann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 9936) to correct the military record of Henry Finnegass—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 9937) to confirm the title of Aimable Bertrand to a certain tract of land in the parish of St. Landry, La.—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9938) for the relief of Millard F. Edwards, late postmaster at Amite City, La.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9939) for the relief of Anthony McAndrew, of Louisville, Ky.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 9940) for the relief of the Baptist Church at Red Banks, in Marshall County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 9941) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Ivern Googins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9942) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Weiss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9943) granting an increase of pension to George W. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BABCOCK: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and citizens of Delton, Sauk County, Wis., for the passage of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building and grounds—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of the officers and trustees of the United States Brewers' Association, in opposition to the proposed increase of the tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Florists' Club of St. Louis, Mo., in opposition to the practice of distributing cut and decorative flowers from Government greenhouses—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Iron Mountain Lodge, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and Cigar Makers' Union No. 44, all of St. Louis, Mo., favoring the establishment of postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BARTLETT: Petition of T. D. Tinsley, John C. Eads, J. T. Moore, and other citizens of Macon, Ga., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CANNON: Petition of citizens of Joliet, Ill., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CASTLE: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Elvinore, Cal., in favor of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: Petition of N. Frankhouser and 39 other citizens of Osage City, Kans., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in reference to Senate bill No. 3354, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in favor of reciprocity with Canada and Newfoundland—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the American Forestry Association, against House bill No. 8428, in reference to Executive order of February 22, 1897—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petitions of citizens of Mossycreek, Bull Run, Lenoir, and Luttrell, Tenn., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of John L. Benedict in support of bill granting an honorable discharge to Lewis Benedict—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GROUT: Petitions of Rev. L. P. Tucker and the Methodist Episcopal and Congregational churches of Northfield, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Methodist Episcopal and Congregational churches of Northfield, Vt., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Communication from the Dubuque (Iowa) Trades and Labor Congress, in favor of postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, telegrams from leading grocerymen, wholesale and retail, in the Third Congressional district of Iowa, protesting against an internal-revenue duty upon tea and coffee—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LITTLE: Petition of J. C. Hale and 58 citizens of Fordyce, Ark., asking for the passage of a bill restricting railroad fares to 2 cents per mile for passengers—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McCALL: Resolution of the Roxburghe Club, Roxbury, Mass., against House bill No. 8428, in reference to Executive order of February 22, 1897—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, petition of the Boston Plate Printers' Union, No. 3, protesting against the use of steam presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of the Boston Merchants' Association, urging the passage of the so-called Spooner health bill, in relation to establishing a commission of public health and defining its duties—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Boston Merchants' Association, of Boston, Mass., urging the passage of the Cullom bill relating to extension of authority granted Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McINTIRE: Petition of citizens of Baltimore, Md., Fourth Congressional district, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MAHANY (by request): Petition of the American Forestry Association, against House bill No. 8428, in reference to Executive order of February 22, 1897—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Petition of Charles W. McKee and 39 other citizens of Bloomville, Ohio, in favor of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: Paper to accompany House bill No. 9904, relating to the claim of John A. Sigur—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper relating to the claim of the widow of Odile Felicite Deslonds, to accompany House bill No. 9906—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany House bill No. 9905, for the relief of Burlin Starns, of Livingston Parish, La.—to the Committee on Claims.

Also paper to accompany House bill No. 9907, for the relief of Louis Barron—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Resolutions of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, in favor of a treaty of reciprocity with Canada and Newfoundland—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, in support of House bill No. 8066, relating to appropriations to aid in the holding of a national exposition of American products and manufactures in Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: Petition of the West Side Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Denver, Colo., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petitions of Department Grand Army of the Republic, State of Minnesota; St. Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce; Division 177, Order of Railway Conductors, Alliance, Ohio; M. R. Walters and 9 others, Veechdale, Ky.; A. S. Morton, M. D., and 29 others, Fishville, Ky.; James L. Dysart and 23 others, Marion, N. C.; E. C. Monteith and 31 others, Bushnell, N. C.; James M. Winston and 14 others, Millport, Ala.; C. C. Duson and 39 others, Crowley, La.; C. J. Thompson and 39 others, Opelousas, La.; E. Lamb and 159 others, Gretna, La.; W. C. Black and 237 others, New Orleans, La.; Fred Park, jr., and 9 others, Mossycreek, Tenn.; W. H. Kenner and 38 others, Huntington, Ind.; J. R. Acuff and 29 others, Trenton, Ga.; Judge O. F. Littlefield and 11 others, Jesup, Ga.; R. O. Medlock and 2 others, Norcross, Ga.; M. M. Fadeley and 12 others, Ashburn, Va.; E. B. Gew and 2 others, Bealton, Va.; F. C. Monfort and 56 others, Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of W. H. Kenner and 40 other citizens of Huntington, Ind., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Resolutions of the Minnesota Historical Society, in favor of Government ownership of Fort Ticonderoga—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Petitions of H. H. Hastings and other citizens of Owatonna; L. E. Stanley and others, of Leroy, and citizens of Waseca, Minn., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Minneapolis and St. Paul Fire Department Relief associations, in opposition to Senate bill No. 2736, to establish a Government insurance department—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VANDIVER: Petitions of the Women's Missionary Society of Senath, Mo., in favor of bills to raise the age of protection for girls, to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, to protect State anti-cigarette laws, and for the protection of the first day of the week in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Women's Missionary Society of Senath Mo., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the Women's Missionary Society of Senath, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the interstate transmission of newspaper descriptions of prize fights, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Women's Missionary Society of Senath, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation substituting voluntary arbitration for railway strikes—to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1898.

Prayer by Rev. FRANK M. BRISTOL, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. PETTIGREW, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

USELESS PAPERS IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in conformity with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1889, a schedule of papers, documents, etc., on the files of that Department which are not needed in the transaction of the public business and have no permanent value or historical interest; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 80) providing procedure in certain pension cases;

A bill (H. R. 72) to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, and other receptacles and vessels used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and to prevent the fraudulent use of the same in such commerce;

A bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 7442) to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to tunnel rights;

A bill (H. R. 8349) granting additional powers to railroad companies created by laws of the United States and operating lines in the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 9477) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1896, granting a right of way to the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 9598) to encourage enlistments by veterans of the late war during the anticipated war with Spain.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

A bill (S. 310) for the relief of Johnson Hays;

A bill (S. 504) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard;

A bill (S. 603) granting pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs;

A bill (S. 1345) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Brumm;

A bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Ranson S. Angell;

A bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Adolphine Krez;

A bill (S. 1751) granting an increase of pension to Moses M. Crants;

A bill (S. 3154) to amend an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erecting of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (S. 3627) to create a board of local inspectors of steam vessels for the customs district of Alaska; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 233) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and Government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of District Assembly No. 49, Knights of Labor, of New York City, praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of New York City, praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Freedom Plains Lodge, No. 191, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Freedom Plains; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lagrange; of the congregations of the Baptist Church, the Methodist Church, and the Presbyterian Church of Angelica, and of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Athens, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of Freedom Plains Lodge, No. 191, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Freedom Plains; of the congregations of the Reformed Baptist Church and the Lutheran Church, of Athens, and of the Hattie Allen Stoker Union, of Elmira, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Church, the Baptist Church, and the Presbyterian Church, of Angelica; of St Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Athens; of Freedom Plains Lodge, No. 191, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Freedom Plains, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lagrange, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Richmond, Ind., remonstrating against the repeal of the prohibition laws now in force in the Territory of Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of the Ministerial Association of Greensburg; of the Epworth League of the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, of Greensburg; of the Baptist Young People's Union of Richmond; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Greensburg, and of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Greensburg, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of E. B. Wolcott Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the desecration of the national flag; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., and a petition of the congregation of the Oakland Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., and a petition of the congregation of the Oakland Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., and a petition of the congregation of the Oakland Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Federated Trades Council of Milwaukee; of Cigar Makers' Union No. 182, of Madison; of Union No. 160, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, of Milwaukee; of Local Branch No. 18, National Association of Steam Fitters and Steam Fitters' Helpers, of Milwaukee, and of Council of Milwaukee, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Milwaukee, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, the prison-labor bill, the anti-injunction bill, and the bill for the relief of American seamen; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TURLEY presented the petitions of R. E. Price and 24 other citizens, of A. V. Warr and 10 other citizens, and of J. H. Roberts and 37 other citizens, all in the State of Tennessee, praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of Central City Lodge, No. 121, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Jackson, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called postal savings bank bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Allen, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WELLINGTON presented petitions of the Men's Guild of the First Congregational Church of Baltimore; of the congregation of the Bennet Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of Baltimore; of the Epworth League of Hyattsville, and of the Willing Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Baltimore, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Men's Guild of the First Congregational Church of Baltimore; of the congregation of the Bennet Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of Baltimore; of the Epworth League of Hyattsville, and of the Willing Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Baltimore, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Men's Guild of the First Congregational Church of Baltimore; of the congregation of the Bennet Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of Baltimore, and of the Willing Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Baltimore, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Epworth League, Chapter No. 212, of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Episcopal Church; of the congregations of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Episcopal Church, the Broadway Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Bennet Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Men's Guild of the First Congregational Church, and the Willing Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, all of Baltimore, and of the Epworth League of Hyattsville, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of Arbitration Lodge, No. 320, of St Paul, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of 12 citizens of North St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish in the Treasury Department a division to regulate insurance companies; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of J. P. Furber and 19 other citizens of Minnesota, and the memorial of A. L. May and 18 other citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill, or any similar measure; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 25 citizens of Oxford, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Custom Tailors' Benevolent Union, No. 89, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, the prison-labor bill, the anti-injunction bill, and the bill for the relief of American seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Republican League of St. Louis County, Minn., praying for the adoption of a postal savings system and approving the course of the Administration with reference to Cuban affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the settlement of the Cuban question so as to secure to every inhabitant of that island full liberty of conscience; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial addressed to the President and the Congress of the United States from the committee for the Baptist Ministers' Conference of St. Louis and vicinity, praying that in the settlement of the Cuban question the offices of the Government be used to the utmost to secure to every inhabitant of the Island of Cuba full liberty of conscience. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Lyon Grange, No. 1343, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lewis County, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country free rural mail delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or other kindred devices; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church of Sumach, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate and mail circulation of newspaper descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Schulenburg, Tex., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented a petition of the State meeting of the North Carolina Yearly Meeting of Friends, praying that all honorable means be used to prevent war and that the efforts of our people be directed to relieve the present suffering in Cuba and toward the adjustment of all claims in accordance with the principle of sound reason and gospel love; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LINDSAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Springfield, Ky., praying for the enactment of legislation to secure protection against the adulteration of pure wheat flour; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Elk Falls, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Tompkinsville, Ky., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Elk Falls, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Tompkinsville, Ky., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Elk Falls, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McBRIDE presented sundry petitions of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Minnesota Historical Society, praying for the purchase and preservation by the Government of Fort Ticonderoga, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of members of the fire department of New Ulm, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish in the Treasury Department a division to regulate insurance companies; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Goodhue, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4416) granting a pension to May F. Hilliard;

A bill (H. R. 1547) granting a pension to Sarah E. Daub;

A bill (H. R. 4435) to pension Gratia H. Martin; and

A bill (H. R. 7355) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Connelly.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5775) granting a pension to Lewis K. Whitmore, a locomotive engineer in the military service and employ of the United States during the late civil war; and

A bill (H. R. 3889) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Calista Hadley.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1039) to grant a pension to Samuel L. Busick; and

A bill (H. R. 2078) to pension Laura E. Davenport.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1482) granting a pension to John Stanage; and

A bill (H. R. 2850) granting a pension to Sarah Spangler.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6515) granting a pension to Grace Gudgell, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KYLE. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1683) granting a pension to Frederick Andros, to submit an adverse report thereon, and to recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. ALLEN. By whom was the bill introduced?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. KYLE. The claimant formerly resided in my own State. He has been dead for two or three years.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7482) granting a pension to Eliza B. Lowry; and

A bill (H. R. 137) for the relief of Annie Saffell.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4073) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in Idaho, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9204) to regulate the construction of barbed-wire fences in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2119) to grant a pension to Miss Sallie Work, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8819) granting a pension to Gemima Millsap; and

A bill (S. 2757) granting an increase of pension to Robert C. Rogers.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9205) to authorize the extension eastwardly of the Columbia Railway, to report it without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. 3446) to authorize the extension eastwardly of the Columbia Railway, being Order of Business 570 on the Calendar, be postponed indefinitely, and that the House bill just reported by me be given the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. 3535) authorizing the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to establish a cab service, and for other purposes, being Order of Business No. 621, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the bill (S. 3365) relating to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, being Order of Business No. 531, be indefinitely postponed, the committee having already reported a House bill on the same subject.

The motion was agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 227) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to make an inquiry. If this is of any value, why should we not have some copies of it?

Mr. LODGE. We have those under the provision for the usual number. Then there is a provision for the House members to have a certain number of bound copies for themselves. As it is peculiarly a House matter I did not, of course, desire to interfere with it. The usual number covers our share.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it not be well in the same connection to have a compilation of the Senate precedents also?

Mr. LODGE. The joint resolution provides for the usual number, which gives us our share of the compilation. It also provides for 500 extra copies for the use of the House. As it is simply a compilation of House decisions and House matters, I did not feel that it was necessary for us to interfere with the desires of the House in that respect, as it is peculiarly a House document.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not know but that we might have printed as a part of the same volume the Senate precedents.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon. I did not understand the Senator's question. He suggests that we should add our volume of precedents to it?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; and have all in one volume.

Mr. LODGE. We have provided for that in a separate volume, as the Senator knows, which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] discussed here the other morning. I think we passed it then.

Mr. STEWART. I am glad the Senator from Nebraska does not urge his objection against printing this document. I think the members of the House ought to have all the copies of their own precedents that they want; they work so smoothly.

The joint resolution was passed.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. QUAY, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 6,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

REPORT ON CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendments of the committee were, in line 2, to strike out "100,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "20,000;" in line 7 to strike out "40,000" and insert "7,500;" and in the same line to strike out "60,000" and insert "12,500;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence and the testimony and reports of consuls, 7,500 for the use of the Senate and 12,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I will inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if this covers the testimony taken before the Spanish court of inquiry and the report? It is my impression that it does.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that that is embodied in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the 20,000 copies are authorized to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS. The report and proceedings of the Spanish court of inquiry are in that report.

Mr. SPOONER. So that will be covered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 4432) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (S. 4433) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Ogden, in the State of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4434) authorizing the attorney for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths and affirmations; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4435) granting a pension to Charles Farmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4436) for the holding of terms of United States courts for eastern district of Michigan at Port Huron; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4437) granting a pension to B. H. Randall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask be read at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. R. 154) recognizing the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, the capital of which is located at Cubitas, is hereby recognized by the United States of America as the lawful government of the Island of Cuba, and that the United States hereby pledges to said Republic its friendly offices in the adjustment of its financial affairs with the Kingdom of Spain, or the holders of Spanish bonds or indebtedness, issued against or made chargeable to Cuba, that so far as the influence of the United States may properly be exercised, it will insist that said republic shall not be charged with the bonded, or other indebtedness of Spain, contracted during or prior to hostilities between the respective governments of Cuba and Spain.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Nebraska this morning offers a joint resolution to recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic, the purpose of which is not only to guarantee freedom to the people of the island, but to prevent them from being mortgaged to the Spanish bondholders. The purpose of the resolution is admirable and all patriots favor it. But it is clear from the vote last night that this resolution can not pass Congress. The majority of the House and the Senate on last night voted to strike that identical provision from the resolutions passed. So the majority of Congress is against the independence of the Cuban Republic.

But in order that the resolution just offered by the Senator from Nebraska may cover the whole question, I suggest that it might be well to amend the joint resolution or extend it so as to protect the people of Cuba from the franchise grabbers of the United States as well as the holders of Spanish bonds. The lobbies that we have surrendered to were composed of more than Spanish bondholders.

It is well known that the action of Congress last night in refusing to recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic means that if Gomez and his patriots do not surrender to the franchise grabbers as well as the bondholders the scheme is to set him aside and set up a government that will do the bidding of the common financial and monopoly syndicate of looters and pillagers of that fair island. The great Republic of the United States has turned its back on the brave band of patriots in Cuba under the lead of the gallant Gomez who have already won their liberty. Our Army and Navy is to be used to force them to surrender to a gold and monopoly syndicate and mortgage the island and its future generations. We are to force them to submit to an industrial slavery worse than Spanish rule under autonomy. Our action is indefensible; it is cruel; it is humiliating; it is worse.

Mr. President, it is useless to offer a supplementary measure to protect the Cubans from such injustice, oppression, and robbery, for it will never pass.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the joint resolution will be referred and seriously considered by the committee. It is very pleasing. It is much like the precautions which we all admire so much of locking the barn door after the horse is stolen.

Mr. ALLEN. I drew the joint resolution with some care. I think it embraces substantially all that could be set forth in a resolution of this character, or having the purpose this one has. I have myself not the slightest doubt that the Island of Cuba is to pass into the hands of a syndicate of financial cormorants, financial buzzards, financial vultures, unless the United States takes prompt steps to check that conspiracy. I am not at liberty, of course, to anticipate what action will be taken on the resolution by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am bound to presume in this, as in all other cases, that it will act with the degree of promptness which the gravity of the situation requires. If it does not, my remedy will be open to me in the future.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment relative to the payment of awards for land taken under condemnation proceedings for the extension of Connecticut avenue, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment relative to the payment of balance of salary to John E. Foley, late office deputy, and others, in the office of the United States marshal for the district of Indiana, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment, which I intend to move at the proper time to the naval appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the proposed amendment may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the naval appropriation bill the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to grant a revocable license to the Fitchburg Railroad Company to excavate and construct, without expense to the United States, and to use, subject to the prior right of use of the United States, a dock not less than 570 feet in length and not less than 160 feet in width, on the north side of Hoosac Pier No. 7, at the navy-yard at Boston, the land to be taken equally from the land of the United States and from land of the Fitchburg Railroad Company, in the State of Massachusetts, according to plans on file at the Navy Department, and subject to the control and approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the absence of objection.

EDGAR S. ECKLES.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Edgar S. Eckles the sum of $15 for reporting and transcribing the statement of C. F. Koop, made before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate on the 21st day of February, 1898, in relation to the condition of affairs in the Island of Cuba.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose there can be no possible objection to the resolution, but the statute requires that all such matters shall go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. Otherwise, the account will not be allowed at the Treasury Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the Chair understands that it must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it go to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 80) providing procedure in certain pension cases;

A bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 9598) to encourage enlistments by veterans of the late war during the anticipated war with Spain.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 8349) granting additional powers to railroad companies created by laws of the United States and operating lines in the Indian Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 9477) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1896, granting a right of way to the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. 72) to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, and other receptacles and vessels used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and to prevent the fraudulent use of the same in such commerce, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. 7442) to amend section 2323 of the Revised Statutes, relating to tunnel rights, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. I propose an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

To provide for the coaling of ships of war and their tenders, barges, and other vessels at the wharves and elevators at the city of Mobile, and for victualing and watering of ships of war at said wharves, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in deepening and widening of the channel leading into Mobile Bay from the Gulf of Mexico and up to the wharves at Mobile, Ala.; and the Secretary of War shall decide and direct on what particular part of said channel such money shall be expended for the purposes aforesaid, to be immediately available.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to consent to this amendment. It is an appropriation which is strictly to be used by the Secretary of War for war purposes, and is to be expended by him for those purposes alone. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow the amendment to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. When this matter was under consideration some days ago, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I was instructed unanimously by that committee to make the point of order upon the amendment as being without authority of law and without recommendation from any Department of the Government and without having an estimate. The Senator from Alabama offered his amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee reported it back and asked its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. I understand that the Committee on Military Affairs has reported adversely, or, at least, if it has not already reported adversely, it has recommended such a report.

Whilst I sympathize with the Senators from Alabama in their desire to secure this appropriation, I repeat what I said some days ago, that it stands upon all fours with a large number of similar appropriations, except that others have had an estimate from the Department and this amendment is without an estimate from the Department. So I am constrained to make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if this appropriation is, as I infer was intimated by his remark, purely an appropriation for commercial purposes or whether there is in it an element of protection to Mobile Harbor in the hostilities to which we are about to proceed. I have asked for an exigency appropriation at Ashland, Wis., but it was only to protect property. Of course it is remote from the seacoast and there entered into it no element of protection to life in the event of hostilities.

I understood the other day when this proposition was made that it was essentially to protect Mobile Harbor. I myself think that from all I have been able to ascertain that the Southern harbors are less protected than almost any of the harbors upon our coast.

The rule, of course, to which the Senator from Iowa refers, is a rule which is often invoked, and it is a wise rule; but if there is in this appropriation an element of self-defense, having reference to the possibility, or I might say the fact of war, ought it to be excluded by a point of order which under ordinary circumstances would be perfectly right? I myself think that the amendment ought to be so drawn that the Secretary of War may make this expenditure if in his judgment the safety of Mobile Harbor requires it. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the line observed between a mere appropriation for commercial purposes and one for defensive purposes; and I am not willing to vote to exclude any appropriation here for the protection of any Southern harbor or Northern harbor either if there is reasonable ground to believe it is necessary, simply because the Committee on Commerce, which is not charged with the substantive matter of defense, does not see its way clear to report it.

If the Senator from Iowa believes this sum of money may be necessary to protect the people of Mobile against attack from a foreign force, I hope he will feel at liberty to withdraw his point of order, provided the amendment is so drawn as to limit the power of expenditure to a defensive rather than to a commercial purpose.

I feel about it just as the Senators from Alabama in that regard. If they have an exposed port there on the Gulf, which is so situated as to invite hostile operations, that fact should be taken into account in considering whether the point of order should be made, and in considering by the Senate whether the point should be sustained by the Senate if made.

Mr. PETTUS. I again call the attention of the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill to the fact that this is not an appropriation for any other purpose than to authorize the Secretary of War to expend a certain sum of money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, on the channel in Mobile Harbor for the purpose of enabling the necessary supplies for the Army to be carried through that harbor. The Secretary of War is to direct what part of the work shall be done with the money, at what particular place the work shall be done for the purposes stated in the amendment. That gives the whole subject into the hands of the Secretary of War. He is confined by the very terms of the amendment to the purposes stated, and those are simply war purposes.

I hope the Senator, considering it in that light, which was not the case with the former amendment I proposed, will not interpose an objection to this amendment. I do not think the Senator in charge of this bill has considered it in that light.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama whether the pending amendment is precisely the proposition which he submitted a few days ago or not?

Mr. PETTUS. It is not.

Mr. ALLISON. In substance it is the same.

Mr. PETTUS. It has the same amount appropriated, to be used on the same channel; but in this amendment it is provided that the money shall be used under the direction of the Secretary of War and for the purposes stated in the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. A similar measure was before the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been changed and improved somewhat, I think. It now gives absolute discretion to the Secretary of War to so regulate the deepening and widening of the channel as to afford the commercial advantages sought for, and I suppose at the same time does not make a fine opening for an enemy. One of the officers of the Department—I forget whether it was the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers—did not like to clean out a fine, new harbor which we might not be able to thoroughly defend, or for which we had not the guns and other provisions. That officer made a military objection to the proposition, and the Senator wisely seeks to obviate that by leaving all that question to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

While the committee disapproved of the proposition as it stood then, and I suppose I was authorized or directed to report it adversely, I let it drop, thinking that it would be the kindlier way of disposing of it. That is my connection with the matter. It is a very ungracious thing to oppose two Senators who are anxious to introduce a valuable improvement in commerce, and yet there are some other considerations.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to state again in substance that there is not one dollar of this money which can be expended under the amendment by the Secretary of War unless he thinks it necessary for the purpose stated in the amendment, but the whole matter is in his charge. He can spend so much as and no more than he thinks is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Alabama will withdraw the amendment. There has been a desire on the part of everybody in the Senate, and I am sure it has been shown by our votes heretofore, to gratify the Senator from Alabama in all these improvements; but the conditions are such that if this bill shall be loaded down with amendments of this sort, making new appropriations for river and harbor work, we shall be overwhelmed.

I say to the Senator that we have in all the States having great ports along the Atlantic coast a pressure for increased appropriations at this session such as I have never known; but, like the case the Senator presents, after all, when it is boiled down, it is simply a matter of an appropriation for increased commercial facilities. There is not one of these ports which barges can not now enter. It is only a question of deepening the channel. Take Baltimore or New York, where the commerce is great and where the pressure is equally as great as it is at Mobile. I have been compelled to decline in committee, as I shall be in the Senate on this bill, to advocate increased appropriations; and yet such appropriations might be urged precisely with the same force for war purposes as the one which the Senator proposes.

There is another thing which I wish to say to our friends on this side of the Chamber. We are making immense appropriations in this bill, and shall be obliged to do so in the bills which are to follow. In those bills we shall make large appropriations to meet the actual necessities for the preparation for hostilities. We can not, therefore, be too careful, Mr. President, in my judgment, in eliminating from the bill every item on that account except those which are recommended by the Department and are absolutely necessary to conduct the war.

The Secretary of War in this case has said frankly that this appropriation is not necessary for his purposes at present, as I understood.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GORMAN. I understood the Secretary's indorsement to say that he did not recommend at this moment the appropriation for deepening Mobile Harbor. Of course, I stand corrected if the Senator says I am wrong.

Mr. PETTUS. The Secretary of War expressly recommended the passage of this particular appropriation. I know there were two dispatches from him. He indorsed on the back of the amendment itself—not this amendment, but upon another amendment of a similar character—a recommendation that that particular amendment should be adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Beyond that, Mr. President, we have been compelled—and I think properly it ought to be the rule always in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill—not to make an appropriation on account of any one of these improvements unless heretofore authorized by law. Otherwise we shall make a river and harbor bill of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I therefore trust the Senator from Alabama will not embarrass or put into an awkward position those of us who are in sympathy with him and who would be glad, as an individual proposition, to support on a regular river and harbor bill the appropriation for which he asks.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think myself that I have no right to force a vote on this amendment at this time, because this bill, as I understand it, is now in Committee of the Whole, and the Senate has once voted upon the question; but I give notice now that when the bill gets into the Senate I shall insist on having a vote on the amendment.

Senators, when this Senate desires to pass a law which is just and right it ought to be done. I say most emphatically that if this amendment is not allowed, every other appropriation which this bill carries of millions of money in reference to appropriations for rivers and harbors ought to be wiped out of the bill as with a sponge.

I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment, but the first question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. I believe I had a motion pending to disagree to a committee amendment on page 67, lines 21 and 22.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Washington will postpone his motion for a moment until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who desires to be present when it is acted upon, comes into the Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL entered the Chamber.

Mr. GORMAN. I see the Senator from Missouri has come in.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 67 there are two contested amendments to be disposed of in the Senate. I ask that all the amendments not reserved may be concurred in in bulk, and I ask that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] may be reserved, so that it will not be concurred in now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, reserving the amendments named by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ALLISON. There are a series of those amendments, three or four of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Offered by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ALLISON. Not offered by the Senator from Washington. They are other amendments which were agreed to in Committee of the Whole, which are now reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands. Is there objection to concurring in the amendments not reserved?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a reservation.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to one of the amendments made by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be in order.

Mr. TELLER. Then I make no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a reservation in the Senate of an amendment which I offered, and which was ruled out of order as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can offer his amendment in the Senate. That does not affect this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in all the amendments except those which have been specially reserved?

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole which were not reserved were concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment to the bill as originally printed on page 74, the amendment with reference to the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I find in the RECORD of April 5 that there was some considerable change in the text of the amendment ordered to be printed so that we might have the amendment before us as it was proposed to be amended. It is a considerable change from the language originally reported by the committee. In order that the Secretary may be able to find the proper place in the bill, I think I may as well read the text as it appears in the RECORD just before the proviso beginning—

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is on line 8, page 74, of the printed bill.

Mr. TELLER. Just preceding that proviso the amendment now reads:

But all selections of unsurveyed lands shall be of odd-numbered sections to be identified by the survey when made, and patent therefor shall not issue until after the survey.

After the word "therefor" I move to insert "shall issue to and in the name of the corporation surrendering the lands before mentioned, and such patents."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, on page 74, line 7, after the word "therefor," by inserting:

Shall issue to and in the name of the corporation surrendering the lands before mentioned, and such patents.

Mr. TELLER. That is agreed to, I suppose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask to return to page 67. If I understand it, there are two amendments reserved, the amendment in line 7, striking out certain words, and the amendment striking out certain words in lines 21 and 22. I think those are the only two amendments on that page.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments referred to will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted an amendment, on page 67, line 7, after the words "shall be," to strike out "selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and;" so as to read:

Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, also adopted the amendment on page 27, line 21, after the word "persons," to strike out "to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for duty;" so as to read:

Provided, That forestry agents and supervisors, and other persons under this appropriation, shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the motion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I make no motion. The Senator from Washington desires to reserve those amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those are committee amendments. The committee recommend that they be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Washington desires a separate vote on the amendments. I do not see him in his seat at this moment.

Mr. WILSON entered the Chamber.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Washington is now present.

Mr. WILSON. I gave notice that I should enter a motion that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the committee on page 67, line 21 and part of line 22, striking out the words "be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for duty." My desire is to ascertain, if possible, the object the committee had in striking out those words.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are making an appropriation here for the purpose of protecting certain forest reservations from fire and to ascertain and advertise certain dead trees. That may be so. You placed the responsibility of the administration of the act of June 4, 1897, on the Secretary of the Interior, and here you are taking it away from him and giving it to somebody who, every time a fire is to be put out or a tree is to be felled or a dead tree which has fallen is to be sold, is to have the power of designating the man who will carry the law into effect. I should like to have some explanation of that.

It seems to me that we are going a good way. These reservations are far remote. If we need a man to patrol them, or if we need a man to put out fires or to prevent fires from taking place there, or to have a force looking after the dead timber, I should like to know who is going to designate the man? This is an ordinary character of labor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will briefly respond to the Senator from Washington as to the purpose of striking out the words recommended to be stricken out by the committee. As the text appeared when the bill came to the Senate, the agents and others to be employed in connection with the preservation of the timber, etc., are provided for in lines 7 and 8, on page 67, and substantially the same words are used respecting the protection of the forest reservations. The Secretary of the Interior could himself select these agents and employees; but now, the words having been stricken out in Committee of the Whole, the civil-service law prevails in the selection of the agents and employees, so that in case the Secretary of the Interior desires to make selections of agents and others, he will draw them from the civil service. That I understand to be the contention respecting these two amendments. This is the only explanation that I can give.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I had presumed that that was what was intended by striking out the words I have mentioned. It seems to me that we have reached the height of absurdity in this business. Every time we want a man to put water on a fire in one of the forest reservations, or every time that we want to select an individual to tell whether a tree is dead or not and have it advertised for sale, or when we want a man to walk around the reservation to see that a conflagration is not taking place, or to count the dead trees, we have got to wait before we can get a bucket of water, I suppose, until we can go to the Civil Service Commission for their authority to designate some one to perform such service.

This class of employment is very ordinary. It must come from the State in which the reservations have been made, and the employment is only for a portion of the year; it can not extend over the entire year; it is only needed during the summer months, and if we have to go through the detail of getting the advice and consent of the Civil Service Commission before we can designate an axman or a forester or an inspector, or a man to count the dead trees, or a man to put out a fire, or a man to keep sheep out of the reservation, it seems to me to have placed the whole business on a very absurd and ridiculous plane.

We only have to make these appointments in the summer time. They are temporary in a large measure, a very ordinary character of employment; and if we are to be delayed and harassed owing to the time to be consumed by those gentlemen, who are so solicitous about preserving the forests, in making the selections, they will all burn up before we can get any designations. I do not believe that there has been any recommendation here from the Department in this matter. The placing of the responsibility upon the Secretary, considering the limited time the men are employed during each year, it seems to me would warrant the Senate in receding from the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CARTER. It is very obvious that the suggestions made by the Senator from Washington are particularly applicable to the matter here under consideration. It is proposed by the amendment of the committee to make the civil-service rules applicable to all persons employed in preventing depredations on the public timber lands, and likewise those persons who may be from time to time employed to assist in extinguishing forest fires. If an adequate fire force is to be constantly employed to prevent the spread of forest fires during the summer and autumn seasons, it would be necessary to employ a very large force in order that it may be an adequate force. I take it the practical way to avoid thus encumbering the pay roll with a continuous force for, say, from four to six months each year would be to place one of these forest reservations under the control of one or two practical men, who would be authorized and empowered, should an emergency arise and a forest fire get under headway and beyond their control, to, for the time being, employ persons in the immediate vicinity to extinguish the fire.

It is a fact so well known as not to require any comment here that the destruction of our forests, particularly in the intermontane country, where their preservation is very desirable, occurs chiefly from fire. Where one foot of timber is cut down and used for commercial purposes ten thousand feet are destroyed within plain view of the people in the fall and summer of each recurring year.

Mr. President, it is utterly impracticable to keep a force constanty employed within the midst of these forests capable of coping with any fire which may at any time break out. In the very nature of things, as a practical proposition, the force ought to be somewhat flexible; and I suggest that there is much strength in the observation of the Senator from Washington that a fire would have run its course before you could apply to the Civil Service Commission and get people to put it out by carrying up the water or by whatsoever means might be employed for its extinguishment. It is practically absurd. I can not conceive that the committee will insist upon an amendment that will lead to such a conclusion.

This is entirely apart from the elementary principle underlying the question of civil service as a method of administering the affairs of the departments of Government. The ordinary clerkship within the Departments probably can be better filled through a system which works, in a measure, automatically and by chance, rather than through the ordinary political selection, which is always accompanied by frequent removals and changes in the force. But when this principle is carried to the extent of being made applicable to the employment of a man to put out forest fires, to carry a bucket of water up the mountain side to extinguish a flame, I submit that it is so utterly absurd as really to jeopardize, if insisted upon, the civil-service scheme as applied properly to the Departments.

The inherent weakness in the contention of the advocates of civil service throughout has been in the fact that they have not at any time shown any wise sense of discrimination in limiting the application of the civil-service scheme. They would have it apply to all things—to the cook at Indian agencies, to the man who works in the blacksmith shop, to the farmer, if you please, and to each and every employee; and the questions which are naturally propounded—unnaturally propounded, I will say—to the blacksmith, or the cook, or the chambermaid lead to the most ridiculous inferences with reference to the character of the civil-service scheme, and it is because of no inherent difficulty with the scheme itself, but the misapplication of it.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator from Montana permit an interruption on the line of argument he is now making?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. Speaking of the application of the civil service, really in the only appointment made in my State where we should have had as a matter of fact a civil-service examination, to wit, the supervisor of Indian schools, there was no examination, and they pushed an appointee into that place, where we should have had an examination, without any whatever.

Mr. CARTER. I have no doubt some strange things occur.

Mr. WILSON. I have the authority for that fact here.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have it read.

Mr. CARTER. They let the superintendent in without examination and examine the cook.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we ought to have that. If it is true, it is a fearful assault on the President of the United States and the Civil Service Commission, and I am compelled to come to his defense to-day.

Mr. WILSON. This was made before the President of the United States was inaugurated. The present incumbent has nothing to do with it.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is that?

Mr. WILSON. It was made before the present President was inaugurated.

Mr. COCKRELL. That does not make any difference. He is only following the footsteps of his predecessor; it is merely a continuation of the same thing.

Mr. WILSON. There is this difference, that the order had issued and the civil-service order had gone into effect, and Mr. Anderson, the commissioner of the Puyallup commission had gone out of office, as the Senator well knows, by reason of an amendment placed upon the sundry civil act saying the appointment of the Puyallup commission should expire on the 1st day of December. Later, on the 26th day of February, I think, by Mr. Secretary of the Interior Francis, of the Senator's own State, he was appointed a supervisor of Indian schools without any examination whatever, in gross violation of the order that had been issued by the previous President of the United States. If we are going to have examinations, let us have them for the schools and not for men who take a bucket of water and put out a fire.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator does not expect me to defend the late President?

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will not defend his own President, I will say that in many things I have very high admiration for the late President of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt about it. A large number of the Republican party have that opinion of him. There is no question about it. There is much greater admiration for him there than in the ranks of the Democratic party.

Mr. WILSON. The Democratic party is a little bit sentimental at all times.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, having become somewhat rested up during the interruption, I feel that the matter can be submitted about where it is. I am not opposed to a proper application of the civil-service rules or a proper administration of the civil-service law. I want it distinctly and clearly understood that as to clerical work not requiring the exercise of administrative discretion I believe the civil-service laws and rules should apply and be properly applied. But it so happens that when a bureau of any sort is created by Congress, as aptly suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday, it begins to reach out like an octopus. It stretches in all directions to encompass everything within reach.

The civil-service organization, impersonal, intangible, irresponsible, so far as public sentiment is concerned, undertakes to wield the lash over Presidents and Secretaries and Senators and Members of the House so, as a matter of fact, men in fear and trembling rise to tell the plain, unvarnished truth about ordinary matters of administration for fear they will be publicly denominated spoilsmen, if you please. Let it be understood that the true friends of civil-service reform and administration in this country are those who would confine the law and its rules to legitimate and proper limits, and not undertake its extension to such a degree as to make it utterly absurd and ridiculous. That extension is sought by and would be accomplished through the proposed amendment of the committee, and I think the amendment ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, one suggestion only in regard to the appropriation and the expense of administering the law as it must be administered if the amendment of the committee is allowed to stand. It must be obvious to every Senator and to the committee itself that these foresters and forestry agents must be selected from the section of country immediately surrounding the reservation. For instance, as to one of the reservations in my own State, I will state that the nearest point to a railroad is some 50 or 60 miles across an almost inaccessible mountain range. The nearest available route to that reservation is at least 100 miles from a railroad. All above it are settlers, within easy calling distance. Those settlers, under the provisions of this measure, would not be competent to be employed as foresters or forestry agents, because they could no more pass the civil-service examination than could I or could the members of the Appropriations Committee of the United States Senate. We all alike would be excluded from the fact that we would be unable to pass the civil-service examination.

The cheapest labor that can be employed is the labor nearest to the scene of action. The law provides that none of these men shall be paid to exceed $3 per diem and expenses of transportation. The expenses of transportation, if these men were employed, would be nothing. On the other hand, let the Senate remember that if they come under the civil-service rules the men must be selected, from whatever part of the United States they may come, who stand highest upon the civil-service list. The consequence may be that the Government, out of the $50,000 appropriation, would have to pay the expense of transportation from New England or Florida or Texas, or the most remote point, wherever might be the places of the residence of the men selected. From a purely economic point of view, I hope the Committee on Appropriations, having in view the welfare of the Treasury of the nation and wanting to conduct these matters not only efficiently, but with economy, will not insist upon the amendment which they have reported to the bill, but will recede.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am delighted to see the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] here. I hope he will use his persuasive and forceful power in bringing the Republicans into line with their President to-day. I should like to see the Republicans, instead of attempting to slap their President in the face, stand loyally by him as they were appealed to do the other day.

Mr. President, here is a deliberate, a premeditated——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. HALE). I think the advice is not bad.

Mr. HALE. No. I say to the Senator that I fully concur with him and hope that upon all important matters the Republicans will be found, as they were at the end of the great controversy over the Cuban resolution, in solid rank in favor of sustaining the President. I wish I could say I hoped that on matters of great import which involve patriotic considerations and not party considerations we could find the Democratic party also joined with the Republicans in sustaining the Administration in patriotic endeavors; and I appeal to the Senator from Missouri to aid me and others to that end, that upon all these matters party jarrings shall cease and we will rally in common forces to support the Administration without regard to party. I welcome the day when the Senator will join with me in persuading both sides to stand by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will welcome the day, too, Mr. President, when I can honestly and conscientiously, as a legislator, a member of a coordinate and coequal branch of this Government, approve of the policies of the President. Then I will stand by him whether he be Republican or Democrat. But if the Senator expects me to be a tail to the kite of the President, to bow submissively to his will, to swing to his coat tail, and to indorse everything he says and everything he recommends, and surrender the power of the legislative branch of the Government, and meekly bow to him and make him more than an emperor, he is very much mistaken.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say right there that we all know the Senator from Missouri well and have the highest respect for his intentions, and I do not think the wildest flight of imagination here on the part of any Senator has been able to picture the Senator from Missouri swinging to the coat tails of anybody.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; and they never will, either.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. COCKRELL. When we had a Democratic President, elected by Democratic votes, and he undertook to pursue a policy which I believed was repugnant to the doctrines of the party, to the best principles of our system of government, and to the interests of the people, I did not appeal to anybody to stand by the President and follow his policy; that he was the leader of the party and we must sustain him. No, sir; I repudiated him on that question.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILSON. I am afraid my amendment is going to be lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri did not; but if the Senator had believed as we believed yesterday, that the President was right, he would have appealed to his associates to stand by him, and they would have stood by him. The Senator did not believe, under the conditions he has described, that the President was right, although he had helped to elect him. We believed the President was right——

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, I have no doubt about that.

Mr. HALE. And are very glad we came out of that triumphant, with the party arrayed in a solid line.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a very good opportunity. I was glad to see the Senator from Maine come in. I wanted a pathway to this discussion.

Our Government is a peculiar one. We have a President, not a ruler; a servant of the people, placed there to execute the will of the people as expressed in the laws of the land enacted by Congress and sanctioned by him. Not a dollar of the millions and hundreds of millions raised can the President expend without the sanction of Congress, coming from the people. He has his separate functions, and they are limited, exceedingly limited. He can recommend to Congress measures; he can, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint ambassadors, judges, and other officers, and he has the weak power of recognizing a consul, an ambassador from a foreign country, but he can not appoint an ambassador or consul to any foreign country.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, can he not appoint an envoy?

Mr. COCKRELL. And not one single envoy can the President of the United States appoint in the sense of the word "ambassador" or as provided in the Constitution without law authorizing it. No President has ever attempted to do it. They have exercised the general governmental power of appointing a representative of their own to visit foreign countries, but they can not appoint an ambassador or a minister or a consul until the Congress of the United States has authorized it. The only power on earth which the President can exercise is to receive an ambassador, a minister, or a consul, and I challenge anyone to show anything to the contrary.

We have heard a great deal about the President's prerogative of receiving and recognizing foreign governments. How can he recognize a foreign government? He can recognize it by recognizing the representative of that government, and that is the full extent of his power. That is the beginning and the end of it, the alpha and the omega of his power.

Now, that binds the judicial branch of the Government. Certainly it does. It does not necessarily bind the legislative branch of the Government, unless they assent to it, directly or indirectly. It remains that way until some action is taken. Senators talk about Congress undertaking to infringe upon the power of the Executive and take away from him his prerogatives of recognizing the independence of a government.

What did we do? What did we propose? We proposed to recognize the independence of Cuba, subject to what? To the approval of the President. Would it not have been his act as much as ours? How were we encroaching upon the prerogatives of the President? It is mere tweedledee and tweedledum to talk any such stuff. We were not going to recognize, independently of the approval of the President, the Republic of Cuba. We proposed it to the President, and had he sanctioned it, it would have become effective. There was no encroachment upon the prerogative of the President—not one particle.

There was no taking away from him of his right. It was proposed to him from us to recognize the Cuban Government. If he assented to it, it was recognition; if he did not, it was not;

and yet here we had discussions for a week nearly in defense of the President and appeals from the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Wisconsin. "Oh, we must not override the prerogative of the President," his prerogative of recognizing, when the only power he has is merely from that one little clause there, that he can receive ambassadors. That is the only right that is given. It is there. There is his power.

The Senator from Maine the other day talked as if it were treason for the Senators of the United States to refuse to follow the policy of the President. The President's policy! Does the Senator from Maine forget what occurred from 1865 to 1869, when the President did have a policy—a Republican President—and when a Republican Congress trampled it under their feet and passed bill after bill over his veto, reversing his policy, and compelling him by law to execute the reverse of his policy?

Mr. GRAY. And then finally impeached him.

Mr. COCKRELL. And then undertook to impeach him. I remember the appeal of the Senator from Maine, that we must follow the policy of the President, and how he came here, in the most solemn and dramatic manner, for the purpose of impressing the Senate in the hour of its last vote, and said there never had been such a spectacle presented in the history of the country as Congress undertaking to thwart the policy of the President. I was astounded to hear such expressions come from that distinguished Senator, when he ought to have known the record and history of his country.

I believe there was another Republican President who had a policy, and it was that great soldier, that distinguished President, General Grant. He had a policy. It was to purchase Santo Domingo, and a Republican Congress trampled that policy under their feet and rejected it. Yet the Senator from Maine tells us that it was an anomalous case for us to be opposing the policy of the President. I believe there was another President who had a policy, and that was President Cleveland. Did Congress in every instance bow to his policy? By no means, Mr. President. Some Senators and Members followed and some did not, and that policy was repudiated by his own party in the Chicago platform.

Mr. President, let me say, once for all, that so long as I honestly believe the President of the United States, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, is acting within the spirit of his constitutional power and recommending measures to Congress which are wise and politic and just, just that long will I sustain him, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. It would be a disgrace to our system of government if the Senate or House of Representatives or both should become subservient to the dictation of a President, I do not care who he is. We are coordinate and coequal branches. He recommends; we act. As I once told a Democratic President, "It is your prerogative to recommend legislation to Congress, and it is our prerogative to do as we please." I said to him, "You recommend legislation against silver. We do not intend to carry it out. We make recommendations to you for appointments. You have a perfect right to do as you please. Just as we will do with our prerogative you have a right to do with yours."

The branches of Government must be kept separate and independent. No man of any party is under obligation to follow the President of his party or the opposite party unless the President is right. The President has no right to declare a policy and then have Senators appealed to to stand by that policy because it is the President's policy. That is not the ground upon which the Senator from Maine ought to have placed it. That is not the ground upon which a Senator can justify his action. He should have undertaken to vindicate the policy and show that it was right, instead of appealing to Senators to sustain it because it was the President's policy.

Mr. MANTLE. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANTLE. Since the Cuban question has been brought up again this morning, and the statement has been made, as I understand, by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the action taken by the united vote of the Republicans upon this side of the Chamber was a support of the President's policy, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if, in his judgment, the resolutions adopted were the resolutions asked for by the President of the United States; whether, as a matter of fact, they are not infinitely stronger; whether, as a fact, they do not go very much further than what was asked for by the President of the United States? If that is true, as a matter of fact, I ask the Senator if it does not follow that the action here taken was not the action asked for by the President, and consequently was not a support of the policy advised by the President?

Mr. COCKRELL. I thank the Senator from Montana for mentioning that point. There are so many things coming up this morning that I was going to pass that point over, but let me say, and I say it without fear of successful contradiction, that the policy indicated in the resolution which was passed and voted for by the Senator from Maine was in direct conflict with the recommendation of the President of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Why did not the Senator from Missouri vote for it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because I did not think it was right; because I did not think it went far enough in the direction of the opposite policy.

I wish to call attention to the very essential points in the President's message which indicate what he believed and recommended. That is the question. All the other is mere surplusage. I read from page 4 of his message:

In April, 1896, the evils from which our country suffered through the Cuban war became so onerous that my predecessor made an effort to bring about a peace through the mediation of this Government in any way that might tend to an honorable adjustment of the contest between Spain and her revolted colony, on the basis of some effective scheme of self-government for Cuba under the flag and sovereignty of Spain.

That is what President McKinley says was the proposal of President Cleveland. Now, mark the language, Senators, if you please:

On the basis of some effective scheme of self-government for Cuba under the flag and sovereignty of Spain.

Mr. TELLER. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. COCKRELL. About the middle of the fourth page.

It failed through the refusal of the Spanish Government then in power to consider any form of mediation, or, indeed, any plan of settlement which did not begin with the actual submission of the insurgents to the mother country, and then only on such terms as Spain herself might see fit to grant.

I read now from the bottom of page 4:

By the time the present Administration took office a year ago, reconcentration—so called—had been made effective over the better part of the four central and western provinces, Santa Clara, Matanzas, Havana, and Pinar del Rio.

The agricultural population to the estimated number of 300,000 or more was herded within the towns and their immediate vicinage, deprived of the means of support, rendered destitute of shelter, left poorly clad, and exposed to the most unsanitary conditions.

That was at the beginning of the present Administration, in the spring of 1897. Then, as he states in the next few lines:

By March, 1897, according to conservative estimates from official Spanish sources, the mortality among the reconcentrados, from starvation and the diseases thereto incident, exceeded 50 per cent of their total number.

Mr. President, I turn again to page 7:

The war in Cuba is of such a nature that short of subjugation or extermination—

Mark the words—

subjugation or extermination a final military victory for either side seems impracticable. The alternative lies in the physical exhaustion of the one or the other party, or perhaps of both.

Spain can not conquer the Cubans; the Cubans, without access to seaports, can not drive the Spaniards from their fortifications in the cities. It is a death struggle. That is the condition. Now I read again from page 7:

Realizing this, it appeared to be my duty, in a spirit of true friendliness, no less to Spain than to the Cubans who have so much to lose by the prolongation of the struggle, to seek to bring about an immediate termination of the war.

Mark you, "an immediate termination of the war."

To this end I submitted, on the 27th ultimo, as a result of much representation and correspondence, through the United States minister at Madrid, propositions to the Spanish Government looking to an armistice until October 1 for the negotiation of peace with the good offices of the President.

In addition, I asked the immediate revocation of the order of reconcentration, so as to permit the people to return to their farms and the needy to be relieved with provisions and supplies from the United States, cooperating with the Spanish authorities, so as to afford full relief.

The reply of the Spanish cabinet was received on the night of the 31st ultimo. It offered, as the means to bring about peace in Cuba, to confide the preparation thereof to the insular parliament, inasmuch as the concurrence of that body would be necessary to reach a final result, it being, however, understood that the powers reserved by the constitution to the central Government are not lessened or diminished. As the Cuban parliament does not meet until the 4th of May next, the Spanish Government would not object, for its part, to accept at once a suspension of hostilities if asked for by the insurgents from the general in chief, to whom it would pertain, in such case, to determine the duration and conditions of the armistice.

The propositions submitted by General Woodford and the reply of the Spanish Government were both in the form of brief memoranda, the texts of which are before me, and are substantially in the language above given.

* * * * * * *

With this last overture in the direction of immediate peace, and its disappointing reception by Spain, the Executive is brought to the end of his effort.

He has thrown up the sponge; "is brought to the end of his effort." What plainer language was ever uttered? What plainer proposition could there be than the statement of the President that he had been "brought to the end of his effort." He could do no more. He had asked certain things that had been refused. Among those things there is no intimation, direct or indirect, that the independence of the Republic of Cuba was essential or necessary or would be expected. It was that the war should be brought to an end.

Now, what does he say? I come to the gist of the matter:

In my annual message of December last I said:

"Of the untried measures there remain only: Recognition of the insurgents as belligerents; recognition of the independence of Cuba; neutral intervention to end the war by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants, and intervention in favor of one or the other party. I speak not of forcible annexation, for that can not be thought of. That, by our code of morality, would be criminal aggression."

Here are three propositions which he says he mentioned to Congress—"Recognition of the insurgents as belligerents; recognition of the independence of Cuba; neutral intervention to end the war by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants," taking them both, each by the throat and collar, one in either hand, and bringing them to an adjustment and making them settle. Mark the language, the significant language, "neutral intervention."

Thereupon I reviewed these alternatives in the light of President Grant's measured words.

He did not think then, without quoting it all, that we ought to recognize their belligerent rights.

Nothing has since occurred to change my view in this regard; and I recognize as fully now as then that the issuance of a proclamation of neutrality, by which process the so-called recognition of belligerents is published, could, of itself and unattended by other action, accomplish nothing toward the one end for which we labor—

"Toward the one end for which we labor." Mark it.

What is that end? I ask the attention of Republican Senators. What is that end?

Accomplish nothing toward the one end for which we labor—the instant pacification of Cuba and the cessation of the misery that afflicts the island.

Independence of Cuba? No, sir; not a particle. There is no such purpose, no such end.

Could, of itself and unattended by other action, accomplish nothing toward the one end for which we labor.

We are laboring for an end. We are striving for an end. What is it?

Pacification of Cuba and the cessation of the misery that afflicts the island.

Not the independence of Cuba; not the freedom of Cuba from Spanish rule and dominion; not the taking away from Cuba the flag of Spain and her military power and her barbarous and cruel treatment. So much for that.

Now, he takes up the question of recognition. Let us see what he says. On page 10, after arguing against recognition, he says:

Nor from the standpoint of expediency do I think it would be wise or prudent for this Government to recognize at the present time the independence of the so-called Cuban Republic. Such recognition is not necessary in order to enable the United States to intervene and—

What? Intervene and what—and pacify the island.

"To intervene and pacify the island!" Not intervene and secure to the Cubans a stable, free, and independent government. Oh, no; pacify them! Take each side by the throat, and bring them together and say, "You shall settle this and stop fighting." If the Spaniards quit and the Cubans do not, make the Cubans quit; pacify them; the end for which we are aiming is pacification.

To commit this country now to the recognition of any particular government in Cuba might subject us to embarrassing conditions of international obligation toward the organization so recognized.

How? How? I ask. He says:

In case of intervention our conduct would be subject to the approval or disapproval of such government.

Now, in case of recognition, what would be the result? It is an independent government. There is no liability on the part of the United States for anything on the face of the earth, above it, or beneath it, and no man can show it. There is no liability on the part of the United States in recognizing the independence of the government in any shape, manner, or form. No writer can show one word, or one line, or one sentence in any authority on earth that would make the United States, directly or indirectly, liable for anything.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has quoted from the President's message in which he speaks of pacifying the island. Let me call attention to the fourth clause of our resolution passed yesterday, which is as follows:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Frye,	Mason,	Sewell,
Bacon,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Shoup,
Berry,	Gear,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Teller,
Butler,	Gray,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Hale,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Turner,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,	Warren,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Platt, Conn.	Wellington,
Cockrell,	McBride,	Pritchard,	White,
Deboe,	McMillan,	Quay,	Wilson.
Fairbanks,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Faulkner,	Mantle,	Roach,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside that the Senate may proceed with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the unfinished business be informally laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. I wish to state that in view of the general desire expressed by Senators for an early adjournment to-day, I do not propose to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill until to-morrow morning. When the conclusion of the sundry civil bill is reached, the Committee on Appropriations will not ask the Senate to remain longer in session, as owing to the fatigue of the long, protracted session yesterday there is a general desire to adjourn early.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 371.

Mr. HALE. In the absence, for the moment, of the Senator who is in charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill, I can not consent that any other business shall intervene, but I desire that the Senate shall go on with that bill. The Senator in charge of it is very desirous of finishing it to-day. It is almost finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from South Dakota. The appropriation bill is before the Senate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had the floor and yielded it to the Senator from Iowa. He will be back in his seat in a moment. I ask that the bill may be delayed for a few moments. I am anxious to answer his question. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the bill which I indicated be taken up and disposed of while waiting. That was my idea in calling it up. It is a very short bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

SARAH E. CAMPBELL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 371) granting a pension to Sarah E. Campbell.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah E. Campbell, widow of Charles T. Campbell, late colonel of the First Pennsylvania Artillery Reserve Corps, colonel of the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and brigadier-general of volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am waiting to hear the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri yields to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely called the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fourth clause in the joint resolution we passed, showing that that clause uses the phraseology in the President's message. That is all I wished to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. You mean the word "pacification?"

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was inserted when in the first part of the resolution there was a distinct and unequivocal recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, and as a matter of course it must be taken in connection with that, and then in connection with the language that is used.

Now, Mr. President, let us go a little further. We have been told that we did not follow the President, that we did not carry out his policy. I think the President could well exclaim, "Save me from my friends!"

The President was once a member of a legislative branch of this Government, a member of the House of Representatives, a coordinate and coequal branch with the executive branch of the Government and possessing ten thousand more powers and different kinds of power than the executive possesses. When President McKinley was a member of the House, we had a Republican President, and that Republican President had a policy, and that policy was to prevent the coinage of the standard silver dollars. A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. BLAND declaring for the free and unlimited coinage of the old standard silver dollars at the ratio of 16 to 1, of 412½ grains, 9 parts fine.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LINDSAY. Before the Senator from Missouri goes off on the silver question, if he will permit me I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going into that question.

Mr. LINDSAY. If he is not going to discuss silver, I will wait. If he is going to discuss it, I can not wait.

Mr. COCKRELL. The President's policy was known. It was rumored everywhere that the President would veto a free-coinage bill. That was noised all abroad here. The Republicans were appealed to, just as the distinguished Senator from Maine the other night appealed to Republicans, to stand by the President and support his policy. When that bill came to a vote in the House—I have it in my hand just as it passed the House of Representatives. It was a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of the old standard silver dollar, and making it a full legal tender. And who voted for it? The Hon. William McKinley, a Representative from the State of Ohio, in direct conflict with the views of the President. When that bill came to the Senate, it fell into the hands of my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Iowa, and it became known as the Bland-Allison law.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, as many as you please.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator whether in the present exigency it ought not to be considered that for the time being the statute of limitations has run on that?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; never on principles. Principles are like the eternal mountains. They are the landmarks as long as the earth lasts. They are beacon lights. They are monuments that never fade and never perish. Principles never change. Policies will change, but principles never. When that bill was remodeled into the Bland-Allison law, which authorized the purchase of, I believe, 4,000,000 ounces—or dollars was it?

Mr. ALLISON. Four million dollars was the maximum.

Mr. GRAY. From two to four.

Mr. COCKRELL. It authorized the purchase of from two to four million dollars' worth per month and its coinage in the discretion of the President, but still left the silver dollar a full legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, unless otherwise expressly specified. That bill went back to the House, and there it passed the House with the vote of the distinguished Representative from Ohio, William McKinley, for it. That bill passed and went to the President—a Republican President, who had a fixed policy—and that Republican President vetoed that bill, gave all the power he could to sink it to death. When the question of passing the bill over the President's veto came before the House of Representatives the Hon. William McKinley was still a member of that body, and in defiance of a Republican President's veto he voted to pass the bill over the President's veto, and it was passed and became a law.

President McKinley may thank his friend from Maine for his intercession in his behalf when his own record stultifies all that the Senator from Maine attempts to bring up in his defense. When President McKinley was a member of the House of Representatives he felt that he was a member of a coordinate and coequal branch of this Government; that the President had a right to recommend; that that was the end of his power; and when he recommended, if the Representative from Ohio, as he was then, did not believe that it was right, and just, and proper, it was his duty, his bounden duty, to vote against it, and he did not hesitate to exercise that power. Were he in the Senate to-day, and if the Senator from Maine were in his place, and a measure was to come up he would doubtless exercise the same power. He can not thank, it seems to me, any Senator or Representative coming in and making an appeal to follow a measure because the President recommends it. He did not pursue that policy. No.

Mr. LINDSAY rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I will hear the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator if that was not about the time that the Stanley Matthews resolution was passed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. And whether that resolution represented the will of the Administration?

Mr. COCKRELL. And he voted for it. I thank the Senator for naming it. They were in direct conflict. Just before this bill was passed over the President's veto the celebrated Stanley Matthews resolution was passed, declaring all the obligations of this Government to be legally and honestly and justly payable in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains weight, nine parts fine. It went to the House, and there received the support of the then Representative McKinley, in direct conflict with the President's policy and as a declared expression of policy opposed to the President. That was its object. It was to let the President know that Congress did not stand by his policy.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it was the difference between whose ox is gored. At that time he was a Representative and thought that Congress had some rights. Now he is President and thinks we ought to follow him.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I will not bring any charge of that kind, because he has not undertaken in his message, which we have before us, to dictate to Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then his friends claim it for him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it is his unwise friends, if the Senator from Maine will permit me to say so—his indiscreet friends, who bring a plea that he himself would not bring and that his whole record shows is not correct. If there is anything in the record of Mr. McKinley as a Representative from Ohio it is that he had his own policies and followed them whether they were the policies of the President or not; that he recognized that the Congress of the United States was a coordinate, coequal branch of this Government, and had the right to enact laws whether the President favored or opposed them; that the President had his constitutional right to veto them, and that was all he had.

Nothing could become a law without his—the President's—approval unless passed by two-thirds of both bodies—the Senate and House. That was enough power for him. He was content then, and he is doubtless content to-day. I have never believed a word of the rumors that were circulated all around here that if we passed the joint resolution with the clause in it recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba, President William McKinley would veto it. I think it was done by his indiscreet friends for the purpose of whipping in those who were not disposed to follow their recommendations and their policies, not those of the President.

But now let us come back to the policy of the President and see what it was.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; as a matter of course.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but before the Senator sits down I should like to have him answer this question: Why, on the proposition which passed the Senate, the first of which resolved that the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent; on the second, which demands the withdrawal of the Spanish forces and the abandonment of Cuba; on the third, which authorizes the President to use the Army and Navy to that end, and on the fourth, which repudiates the theory of annexation—why was it that on the roll call on those resolutions, covering such broad grounds of immediate action toward the independence of Cuba, thirty-five Democrats were found almost in solid rank voting "nay?" I wish the Senator would explain that. I can understand that the Senator is sensitive and that his associates are sensitive overnight.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not a bit of it. I never rejoiced more in my life over any vote I ever cast than the vote I cast last night. I am glad of it, and it will stand as a monument of my devotion to the interests of a struggling people for a free and independent government in answer to their appeals to the oldest Republic in the world, which appeal I am sorry has been unheeded.

Mr. HALE. I want the Senator before he sits down to explain the reasons why, when it was apparent that that was all that could be done, and also in the view that afterwards his associates in another body took the ground of voting for these resolutions, and did it——

Mr. COCKRELL. The questions were entirely different.

Mr. HALE. Why did the thirty-five Democrats who voted against these resolutions and would not put themselves on record in favor of them take that attitude and seek to prevent any action?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait a minute. I will answer the Senator from Maine myself.

Mr. HALE. I did, in a speech made on Saturday last, which has been alluded to and which has aroused some trouble, make a little forecast, and that was that I predicted that the Senators who had been clamoring for war, clamoring for action, who were denouncing the President, and in some cases—not the Senator from Missouri himself—abusing the President, ere long would be found voting "no" and obstructing the movement. I did not expect a realization to come so soon as Monday night. I did not expect, when we had come to resolutions that covered every ground but one, that meant immediate intervention and freedom for Cuba and the interposition of the armies and navies of the United States—I did not quite think that so soon as Monday night we would find almost the solid Democratic party voting "no." It came sooner than I expected, and I was a better prophet than I supposed myself to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am glad to hear the Senator sounding his own praises. "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country."

Mr. HALE. It is very moderate, indeed. I did not expect the realization of the prediction would come so soon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are you through?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will oblige me very much if, before he sits down, he will give me an explanation of this matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator wants to make a speech, he can make it after I get through with mine and yield the floor. I am willing to answer any question.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the language of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], uttered last night upon this floor when the question came as to whether the Senate of the United States would agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives striking out the clause recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba, which was the only issue then before the Senate and everything else was settled, the Senator from Georgia said:

Mr. President, in order that the action of each Senator may be properly understood, I desire to state my understanding of the effect of the vote we are now about to take. It is simply to record the position of each Senator upon the particular amendment which is affected by the conference report, to wit, the amendment known as the Turpie amendment. In other words, while all of the resolution was read to-night, the vote to be cast has no reference whatever to any part of the resolution except such parts as are in issue between the two Houses.

Mr. FORAKER. The vote, I suppose, will cover the proposition to restore the words "are, and."

Mr. BACON. Of course. I understand that; but the object I have in making the statement is that as the entire resolutions were read it might without suggestion appear that the vote which we cast is far-reaching enough to include the entire resolutions. I desired to make the suggestion, in order that there might be no misunderstanding, that the vote simply relates to the particular amendments which are in issue, or rather in difference, between the two Houses.

Then the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] said:

The joint resolution as passed by the Senate went from the Senate to the House. It was passed by the House in exactly the same terms that it passed the Senate, except that the two words "are and" and the provision recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba were stricken out. By the agreement of the conferees the words "are and" are agreed to be left exactly as they were in the joint resolution when it went from the Senate to the House.

The joint resolution has, therefore, passed both the Senate and the House, and no part of it is in controversy on the conference report before us except the one item as to whether we shall recede from our declaration in favor of the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

The sole question left is whether the Senate will agree to the conference agreement which proposes that the Senate shall agree to the action of the House in striking out the provision for the independence of the Republic of Cuba. Those of us who believe that we ought not to recognize the Republic of Cuba and that the House was right in striking that out ought to vote for the report of the conference committee.

And they did.

Those of us who believe that the Senate was right in providing for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, it seems to me, are compelled to vote "nay" on agreeing to the conference report.

And we did; and we voted right; and I am proud of the vote.

Mr. MANTLE. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANTLE. I merely wish to interject here the statement that while 35 of us voted last night, as was well said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], against striking out from the resolutions the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, it is also a fact that all of us, with some 30 more, had previously voted for all that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted for last night with the addition of the recognition of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is very true, and I was just going to state it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Maine voted against the resolutions when they were before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; he voted against them because they had recognition in them, and we voted against the conference report because it did not contain the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, and our vote was perfectly consistent. All of us, with one or two exceptions, had voted for the passage of the resolutions. They went to the House of Representatives and the House voted for them and passed them. The question that was in the House was an entirely different question from the question presented here. That body had already agreed to the resolutions, and therefore they were perfectly justified in voting as they did, and we would not have been justified in voting otherwise than we did, because we would not have expressed the sentiments and views of individual Senators if we had not so voted.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina for just a minute.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Maine a question. Does he claim any part or parcel in the paternity of the resolutions which were passed last night?

Mr. HALE. I certainly helped to pass them.

Mr. TILLMAN. After you had fought them for four days.

Mr. HALE. After I had fought for the freedom of Cuba without the scheme of recognition being added to the resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator wants to ask me a question, I will answer, but I am not going to have other Senators interject their speeches into mine. There is plenty of time, and we have nothing else to do but to talk about this question. Remember, I never occupied a minute of the time of the body on this question when it was important to have prompt action; but it has now passed, and we can talk as much and as long as we please.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator does not yield, I will not insist on putting questions to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am always glad for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to appeal to my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] that he should not interject any remarks of his into any political speech of the Senator from Missouri. It is not fair.

Mr. HALE. I think there is something in that. I was going to answer the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] desires to go on, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has suggested, and complete his exculpatory speech, his political speech, I shall not intervene.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not care a continental cent whether you call it a political speech or not. I am not hidebound.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is probably correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want you to understand distinctly that I am a Democrat; that I believe in the cardinal, imperishable, and monumental principles of that oldest, grandest, and noblest of all political organizations that has ever existed on American soil—the Democratic party.

Mr. HALE. I thought so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say further that the Senator made some remarks when he lectured us the other night that we would be found opposing the President. If the Senator expects us to vote for every project brought in here that is to be covered by the honored name of the President, regardless of whether it be right or wrong, he will find that he is mistaken. Whenever the President adopts a policy which we know is for the best interests of the country, and is honest, just, and wise, then we will support it just as heartily as if it were the policy of a Democratic President; but we will oppose measures which we regard otherwise, just as we would oppose them if proposed by a Democratic President. We are no tail to anybody's kite. We are, so far as I am concerned, at least, not dragged around at the coat tail of any man.

I regard the Presidential office as the highest in the world—the highest in the gift of the people of the world. I honor the Presidential position; but it is a constitutional position. The President is not a czar; he is not an emperor; he is not a king; he is not a ruler, but he is the representative of the American people, placed in the position of President under a written Constitution, in which all his powers are defined, and side by side with him to administer this Government is the coordinate and coequal branch, the legislative branch, the Senate and House of Representatives, and side by side with them, but created by them, is the judicial branch, the judiciary to declare the intent and meaning of the laws enacted by the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the President.

Now, Mr. President, we are not going to be driven to support any measure which may come in here and be labeled "The policy of the President." No, no; I want that distinctly understood in the beginning. We will sustain the President in all proper movements to carry out the resolution which has been adopted. What is it? To drive every Spaniard from every foot of Cuban soil and establish there the Republic of Cuba—the independent, free Republic of Cuba.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The indefinite and colorless resolutions of the House of Representatives were improved in a number of particulars by the Senate, and every improvement put upon the House resolutions was put there by the solid votes of those of us who voted last night and who have on every occasion voted for Cuban independence. Every single improvement was made by the solid Populist and Silver Republican vote and almost solid Democratic vote. There was another improvement that we wanted. It was important; it was vital. It was recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic. This important improvement would have perfected the resolutions. We put this in once. The House struck it out. Last night 35 of us voted to put it back, and thus make the resolutions perfect and effectual; but we did not have enough votes to accomplish the object. That is the case in a nutshell.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is no doubt true. It is true that every improvement and addition which bettered the resolutions proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, as adopted by the Senate, was supported by those who voted against striking out the clause recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba; and nearly all of them were opposed by the distinguished Senator from Maine——

Mr. BUTLER. Every one of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. And those who are lecturing us now in regard to our action.

Mr. HALE. Then what the Senator means to say is that he and his associates were opposed to any action in the way of intervention, to any movement whatever in the direction of free Cuba, unless they could get absolute recognition of the Cuban insurgents as a government? I ask the Senator whether it does not amount to that? What the Senator from North Carolina said, that they voted to perfect the resolutions, and when they got them perfected, because they could not get that one distinctive thing, the recognition of the Republic of Cuba——

Mr. COCKRELL. We did not vote against them.

Mr. HALE. Then they voted against the resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. We did not do any such thing. That has been explained. I have explained it in the language of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]; I have explained it in the language of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and I have explained it in my own language. What we voted for was not to recede from our position recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba. We had voted for every other one of the propositions the Senator from Maine voted for last night. He is the only one who has been turning somersaults.

Mr. HALE. Did not the Senator vote finally against the adoption of the conference report?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. We voted against the striking out of the recognition of the Cuban Republic.

Mr. HALE. The RECORD shows plainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. The RECORD shows what it shows exactly. Now, does the Senator undertake to quibble over such a little thing as that? What was that conference report? It was that the Senate should recede from its disagreement. That was all there was of it. Every particle of the remainder of the resolutions had been agreed to, and that was all there was left of the question at that time, and it was so stated upon the floor of the Senate. The Senator can not quibble upon that and undertake to say that 35 of us voted against the resolutions or against any kind of a measure at all. We had thrust upon you and upon others who were opposing us the resolutions which you had to take in the end.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator deny that the resolutions I have read, which passed the Senate and passed the House of Representatives, will become the law of the land when the President signs them?

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course; everybody knows they will.

Mr. HALE. Did not the Senator vote against them?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; not in that sense of the word.

Mr. HALE. The RECORD so shows. The RECORD shows 35 votes against them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I voted against striking out that one clause recognizing the Republic of Cuba. Suppose, however, our vote had prevailed, what would have been the result? We would have still insisted upon the adoption of the resolution as it had been passed by the Senate; and we would have got it in that form; that would have been the end of it, and that included the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, and then the Senator would have voted against it.

Mr. HALE. Rather than have voted for that resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. We had already voted for the resolution and had acted upon it. I hope the Senator from Maine will not undertake such a pettifogging quibble here, which would not be worthy of an attorney in a justice's court. If we had succeeded in disagreeing to the conference report and had insisted upon our amendment and the House had yielded and it had come before us in that way, would the Senator then have voted for it?

Mr. HALE. I voted against it whenever I had an opportunity.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then you would have voted against anything——

Mr. HALE. No; I did not believe that it was necessary, in order to secure the freedom of Cuba, that we should insist upon a resolution recognizing the insurgent government, but the Senate took that ground. The Senator may undertake to try to get out of it as much as he pleases, but the country will come to realize——

Mr. COCKRELL. We are not afraid of the country.

Mr. HALE. That 35 Democrats were found solidly voting against that proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will appeal to the country. We are not afraid of the sovereign people of this country, not a bit of it.

Mr. HALE. You ought to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are willing to trust to the verdict of the people and to trust to their intelligence. They can not be hoodwinked and deceived in any such way as the Senator supposes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President——

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether the position of the Senator from Maine is not this, that he and the Republican House of Representatives would have defeated all legislation rather than have concurred in the original resolution passed by the Senate for the recognition of the Cuban Republic, for which ten Republicans voted?

Mr. COCKRELL. Inevitably.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not an interruption. I am always glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] has appealed once or twice to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not hear his voice.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri to permit me to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Maine, if the Senator from Maine will also permit me. I want to ask if it be a truth in the consideration of this body that the vote against the adoption of a conference report which recommends a conclusion of the two Houses on an agreement made in that conference report is a vote against the measure concerning which the conference was had?

Mr. HALE. That is a fair question, and the Senator is entitled to a fair answer. A great many of the most important statutes which have ever been enacted came out of antagonisms between the two Houses which are left to conference committees to adjust, and those statutes are finally enacted as the report of the conference committee.

The question then comes pitilessly, "Shall the report be adopted?" And if it is adopted, the proposition the committee makes becomes law, so far as the body is concerned. Then it is always understood that those who are in favor of the proposition becoming law, no matter whether they want more or less, if they believe that is all they can get, they vote for the adoption of the conference report, and that report becomes law; it has the same legal effect as if it was a bill on the table being read by the Secretary, and the Chair says, "Shall the bill pass?" and those in favor will vote "aye" and those opposed will vote "no," and they will stand in the estimate of the public upon that vote.

They may declare that they wanted something else, and so did not vote for it; that they were only voting on the report and not on the bill; but the pitiless logic is that the only way that you can pass a bill or joint resolution under such circumstances is to vote in favor of the adoption of the report; and if you want to kill it, the only way is to vote "no." That record shows 42 yeas and 35 nays on the adoption of the conference report on this subject. So that has become law, or will become law when the President signs it, which was made by the attitude of the Senators who voted for it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. I have not the floor except by the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. Go on. I am glad to hear you all talk.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I desire to continue the inquiry of the Senator from Maine. His answer was much more frank than the disingenuous presentation of the case, which was so disingenuous that it would seem quite unusual to me, coming from the Senator from Maine; but in his answer he gave a saving clause in the use of the words "if they believe that that is all they can get." Now, I desire to put the question to him in this way, since he has made that the basis of his answer: Are Senators voting who did not believe that this was all that they could get, also to come under the Senator's condemnation as having voted against the resolutions which were put into the body of this enactment by their votes directly, and against the votes of those who now claim the credit for the enactment?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to answer the question?

Mr. CANNON. By the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] I would prefer to have an answer from the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on that distinct part of the proposition involved.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not condemn the Senator if the Senator believed he ought to get more and was ready to take the responsibility of voting against what he could get. I can not condemn him, for he had a right to do that; but clearly he must accept the condition that if his favorite measure or proposition was struck out, as it had been in this case, therefore he would vote against any action, provided he could not get what he wanted; in other words, if he could not get the recognition of the insurgent government, he would not vote for any other form of intervention which would secure freedom to Cuba.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the Senator assumes the entire case as being as he presents it; that that is all which we could get. I will agree to that as the Senator's statement.

Mr. HALE. It had been shown that the House of Representatives had taken this attitude repeatedly.

Mr. CANNON. It had been shown merely in this way——

Mr. HALE. We were told that the House would back down, but every vote the House took increased its strength against this proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Because the House knew, and so did the country through the newspapers and from statements uttered on this floor, that certain gentlemen in this body were ready to recede just as soon as the fire got hot enough. That is why the House refused to back down.

Mr. LINDSAY. To capitulate, not recede.

Mr. CANNON. When the Senator from Maine on Saturday last used the expression that we had but a temporary majority here, he spoke more wisely than the rest of us knew. When he made that declaration he knew how brief was the strength of that majority and how soon it would fade away under fire from the White House and from another quarter in this Capitol.

Still, Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has not yet directly answered my question. I am new to parliamentary usage and new to the finesse of transactions of this character, and I desire to learn now from an authority, whose judgment I would most esteem in this body, whether it be a fact that a man who, having voted for a bill at every stage of it to perfect it to a certain condition, when he finds that one of the essential elements has been conceded by the conferees of his own House, votes against the conference report presented, may be afterwards designated as having voted against that bill itself? That is the inquiry I desire to propound to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. That is determined when the bill passes.

Mr. CANNON. Why does he vote against the bill?

Mr. HALE. He can only say "no." That is the only way. If he had a majority with him, he could have defeated it.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Senator say that a vote against a conference report, which in his judgment he considers the vital point involved, is a vote against the bill itself?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CANNON. And we may consider that view to be the judgment of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CANNON. I have been occupying the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri, and with his permission I shall be glad to hear from the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the trouble about the attitude of some of our friends.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator that I hope he will not worry himself on our account. We shall get along very well.

Mr. SPOONER. That assumes that we consider the Senator one of our friends. I consider him one of my friends; but the inexplicable thing to me was this: That when there was reported here last night a disagreement between the House and the Senate proposition, which my friend from Utah [Mr. CANNON] had very much at heart, and the Senate voted to adhere, our friends on the other side should have voted almost solidly against any further conference for the purpose of getting an agreement which possibly would have carried out and accomplished what they most desired.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no such motion at all as that before the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. There was, certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was distinctly stated by me that I would move to insist on the amendment of the Senate after the conference report had been rejected. That motion was to disagree; and we on this side voted against agreeing to the report. Had that vote carried, what would have been the result? There would have been a disagreement, and the resolution would have gone back to the House for its further consideration; and it would not have involved the defeat of the joint resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Had not the Senator voted against a motion to request a further conference?

Mr. COCKRELL. I had; but it was in order to secure a further chance of the House accepting the Senate resolution.

Mr. TELLER. They had not asked for a conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. They had not asked for it. I wanted the House to pass upon it again. We ought to have known better; but yet we thought there was probably something of the House of Representatives left.

Mr. SPOONER. It was a party play, Mr. President, in the face of a great exigency; an attempt to put on one side of this Chamber the particular men who disagreed with the other side in a hole on the question of the freedom of Cuba.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. Not at all. It was not meant to put anybody in a hole.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say one word.

Mr. COCKRELL. In a moment. The question upon which we voted was whether we would agree to the conference report. Had the "noes" prevailed there would have been a disagreement, and that would not have defeated the resolution, for the resolution would still have been in conference between the two Houses, and we would still have been contending over the clause recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba. That was all there was in it.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will permit me to make one observation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I regret to say, Mr. President, that I can not be content with the answer received from the Senator from Maine, who, as I believe, is skilled in parliamentary usage, and his wonderful clearness should have been sufficient to convey an accurate answer to the inquiry which I propounded.

I beg to state to the Senator from Missouri and ask his consideration of this proposition, as being one which appeals to my common sense: We had already passed the joint resolution through this body. The decisive vote concerning that joint resolution was the yea-and-nay vote by which the declaration of the will of the Senate was on that, and no subsequent vote upon a conference report, either for or against, can affect in any way the record which was made up, and which will stand so long as the archives of the Government shall last, as the will of this Senate and the will of the personnel of this Senate on that joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Georgia has asked me half a dozen times to yield.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say one thing. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] are evidently pluming themselves upon the fact that they secured the passage of these resolutions. I want to call attention to the fact that neither the Senator from Maine nor the Senator from Wisconsin has ever voted for these resolutions, and the RECORD will not show that they did.

Mr. TELLER. They voted against the resolutions.

Mr. BACON. They voted against them every time, and there is no place which either of the Senators can put his finger upon to show that he ever voted for the resolutions, and I will prove it right here.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. Pardon me for a moment. Permit me to complete my statement, and I will yield to the Senator with pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. There has been but one occasion upon which the Senate has voted on the resolutions which finally passed the Senate, and that was on Saturday last, when the identical resolutions were passed by a vote of 67 yeas to 21 nays, the only difference between the resolutions and those which came back from the House being the amendments to the first resolution. The first resolution related exclusively to the independence of Cuba, and of the Republic of Cuba. Now, the first resolution, which is the only one that ever came into dispute, had no reference whatever to intervention or to any action on the part of this Government. It related exclusively to the simple question of the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba and to the recognition of the Republic of Cuba. The other resolutions are these, and I want to read them in order that the point may be made clear. I begin with the second resolution that passed the Senate on Saturday night last:

> Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.
>
> Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.
>
> Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

I assert as a fact, and as a parliamentary fact, that the Senate voted on those three resolutions which I have read but once, and that was last Saturday night, and that upon that occasion there were 67 yeas and 21 nays, and the Senators who then voted in the negative have never had an opportunity since to vote in the affirmative on it, and have never voted in the affirmative since.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin pardon me for a moment? Among those 21 nays are the names of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. BACON. The nays are as follows——

Mr. SPOONER. That is right——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me. The 21 nays who voted against those three resolutions, and who have never since voted for them, and who will never again have an opportunity to vote for them, are as follows:

Aldrich,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wellington,
Allison,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.	White.
Caffery,	Hoar,	Pritchard,
Elkins,	McBride,	Sewell,
Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Spooner,

That is the only record that can be found up to the present date where the question whether the Senate should or should not pass those three resolutions was ever acted upon by the Senate, and upon that occasion the twenty-one names which I have mentioned were recorded in the negative.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. I will yield for a question, but I do not propose to occupy the floor any length of time. I do not desire to yield for the purpose of a speech.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to make a speech and I do not want exactly to put a question. I want to repeat a verse of Dr. Watts.

Mr. BACON. I prefer that the Senator should indulge in his poetical diversions in his own time and not in mine, and I object.

Mr. HOAR. It is so exceedingly apt that I should like to do it now.

Mr. BACON. I object to the Senator's proceeding.

Mr. HOAR. Of course, if——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will have ample opportunity. He is gifted in that direction. He has very large resources. I prefer that he use his own time for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a question?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; for a question.

Mr. ALLISON. What becomes of those who voted for the third reading of the joint resolution and its passage?

Mr. BACON. The passage? The question of its passage was never before the Senate except that one time.

Mr. ALLISON. Did it not pass the Senate after its third reading yesterday?

Mr. TELLER, Mr. COCKRELL, and others. No, no.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. And the RECORD will not show it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was read the third time but once. No measure ever is read the third time but once.

Mr. SPOONER. Could it possibly have become a law without the adoption of the conference report by both Houses?

Mr. BACON. Of course I am coming to that point. Yesterday the question was on the conference report.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And so the conference report——

Mr. SPOONER. Could it ever possibly have become a law, I ask the Senator from Georgia, without the adoption in both Houses of the conference report?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; another conference could have been ordered and another conference report adopted.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to the conference report. The conference report had no relation whatever to either of the three resolutions which I have read—none whatever. The conference committee had no relation to that, and no vote upon the conference report could have any relation or any reference to the three resolutions which I have read. I repeat, that the RECORD—and everything that was done is in print—can not show the place where either of the 21 Senators whose names I have read ever voted for either of these three resolutions.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet the Senator from Maine now claims they did.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that of those three propositions the conference committee had no possible charge.

Mr. BACON. None on earth.

Mr. COCKRELL. They could not touch them.

Mr. BACON. It is a matter of elementary knowledge known to every Senator here and to every tyro elsewhere that matters of difference between the two Houses are the only things which go into conference. Nobody can dispute that fact.

What was the difference between the two Houses? Was there any difference between the two Houses as to the three resolutions I have read? Not a particle. We passed a joint resolution here containing those three resolutions, and our action so far as those three resolutions were concerned was final. The joint resolution went to the House, and the House passed the same three resolutions without amendment, and their action as to those three resolutions was final, and they had no further opportunity to act upon them. As to the first resolution——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Indiana pardon me for a moment? I will then yield with pleasure.

As to the first resolution, there were two differences. We had passed the first resolution on Saturday last in these words:

> That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that Island.

That is what we passed. When it went to the House, as to that resolution, and that alone, the House made a disagreement. It made no disagreement as to either of the other three resolutions or any part of them, any line or letter of them, but they did make a disagreement as to the first resolution. They made two disagreements. They said, in the first place, that the words "are, and" ought to come out, so that it would simply read "That the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free." That was one difference. We said the words "are, and" ought to be in. They said they ought to be out.

Another difference was that they said that part of it which recognized the Republic of Cuba ought to come out. We said it ought to be in. There were two differences, and a conference committee was asked of the two Houses. For what? To pass on the three resolutions I have read? Certainly not. Each House had agreed to them. The Senate had agreed to them, although the 21 gentlemen whose names I have mentioned voted against them, and the House had agreed to those three resolutions; but as to the first resolution there were two differences, and we had a conference for the purpose of settling the differences on the first resolution, and that alone.

Now I repeat, that it is a principle which no man can dispute that a conference committee has no jurisdiction over anything except as to the differences between the two Houses, and that those differences were such as I have here stated and related in no manner to anything else. Therefore when the conference committee reported——

Mr. SPOONER. If my friend the Senator from Georgia will allow me——

Mr. BACON. Permit me to complete the sentence. Therefore when the conference committee reported, they could report nothing beyond their jurisdiction.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course not.

Mr. BACON. They attempted nothing beyond their jurisdiction. They simply attempted to compose the differences between the two Houses, to compose the differences as to those two amendments to the first resolution, and when they came in and when we refused to agree to the recommendation of the conference committee, we made no refusal as to the three resolutions with which they had nothing to do, and when we agreed to their recommendation we did not agree to anything which related to the three resolutions with which they had nothing to do.

Mr. SPOONER. My friend the Senator from Georgia, who is not only very able, but always frank, will agree that whatever measure may be passed by the two Houses of Congress, whether there may be one resolution or two or three or four or ten, when as to one of them there arises a difference, none can become effective without an agreement as to that difference. If there is a deadlock between the two Houses as to a single difference concerning one of a dozen resolutions, it kills the whole business.

Mr. BACON. Unless there is a final agreement, of course.

Mr. SPOONER. I say if there is a failure to agree.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no failure to agree. It went right back into conference.

Mr. BACON. When the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to ask me a question, I am glad to yield, but I do not think he ought to stop me to argue the matter.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Indiana some time ago asked me to yield, and I now yield to him.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator from Georgia whether or not a vote in favor of concurrence in the final conference report was not in effect a vote for the various resolutions to which the Senator has just alluded?

Mr. BACON. It might have been in spirit; it was not in fact.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Was not a vote for or against concurrence in the final conference report in effect a vote for or against the resolutions?

Mr. BACON. No; by no means.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for just a moment. It was by no means, as I was endeavoring to show when I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin. The conference committee has no jurisdiction outside of the differences between the two Houses, the matter in difference between the two Houses. Their report can cover nothing except as to matters of difference between the two Houses; and therefore, inexorably, our vote can not have reference to anything except as to matters in difference between the two Houses.

Mr. SPOONER. Unless it is composed, the whole business drops.

Mr. BACON. I yield now to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia to state here why he and I and other Senators voted not to concur in the House amendments?

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to a point of order. I do not exactly know how the Senator from Georgia can tell why the Senator from New Hampshire did anything.

Mr. BACON. I will state why I did, and will leave out the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. That does not concern the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Georgia and I had a common purpose in those votes, and I propose to ask the Senator a question about it, if the Senator from Wisconsin will let me.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin would not interrupt me except with my consent, I would be very much obliged to him.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator what the assumed motive was in voting to nonconcur in the House amendments?

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin will state it.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if it will not be an unparliamentary interruption, what he means by an assumed motive as a basis?

Mr. BACON. I will ask that both Senators will——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin is done and will kindly sit down, I will go on with my business.

Mr. SPOONER. I will sit down when the Senator answers the question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I claim the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Georgia will——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BACON. It is very much easier for each gentleman to argue in his own time——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am merely trying to answer the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. Yes, if I may yield to him alone.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. But I see that that contingency has already fallen through.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must sustain the right to the floor of the Senator who has it. The Senator from Georgia has the floor, and he yields to the Senator from New Hampshire for a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not asked the Senator to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask my question of the Senator from Georgia in another form. Was it not the object in voting not to concur in the House amendments to secure, if possible, action by the House receding from those amendments?

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly. It could have been nothing else.

Mr. CHANDLER. Was not that the object of every vote against concurring and in favor of insisting?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will ask the Senator this question: Whether, no matter how long that voting continued, the object and purpose of it was not the same—to secure, if possible, the action of the House receding from those amendments?

Mr. BACON. The purpose in each case was to secure the action which we had originally taken, and to embody that as law, which action was the only part about which there was any difference, and which action was one relating exclusively to the question of the independence of the people of Cuba and of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. President, I did not rise with any expectation—I am occupying the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. Proceed.

Mr. BACON. I rose with no expectation of occupying so much time. I desired to call attention from the RECORD to the fact that the Senators who now claim that they alone passed the joint resolution, that those who have occupied the floor of the Senate for this purpose, have had but one opportunity to vote for the resolution, and that then, so far from availing themselves of that opportunity, the RECORD shows they voted against it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BACON. For a question?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BACON. Then I decline to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does me injustice if he imputes to me the position or declaration that I voted for these resolutions.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Georgia says the Senator from Wisconsin did not.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said that I voted for the resolutions.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not want the Senator——

Mr. BACON. I will take it back, if the Senator admits he did not. If he admits that he did not, what I said does not apply to him.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, when these resolutions——

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. If my friend will permit me as a matter of fairness, I will state that when these resolutions were before the Senate I did not vote for them.

Mr. BACON. The RECORD shows that the Senator did not.

Mr. SPOONER. I voted against them.

Mr. BACON. So the RECORD shows.

Mr. SPOONER. I voted against the first one because I regarded it as a legislative falsehood, declaring a fact which I did not believe to be a fact.

Mr. BACON. I voted for it because I regarded it as a legislative truth.

Mr. SPOONER. I voted against the last one, which is what is called an ultimatum, upon the ground—I may have been mistaken, but I was sincere about it, and as good a friend of Cuba, too, as my friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], not talking so much about it, however——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Pardon me for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator from Wisconsin was through.

Mr. SPOONER. No. I did that because I believed it was not a function of Congress to declare an ultimatum against a foreign government, and that it was in no sense a law. But when the time came that there was an agreement on the main proposition between the two Houses and a disagreement as to one point, even though, if it had been left to me, I would not have voted for it, I yielded.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator never had the second opportunity to vote for it.

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a moment. I yielded. I voted at the end, when the conference committee had reported an agreement, for the report in order to compose the differences, in order to bring about a legislative adjustment between the two Houses, when I feared there might be no other way. In a sense I voted for something which I did not believe. I voted for something which I had denounced upon the floor of the Senate; and I did it not because I am fond of swallowing, or am willing to do so ordinarily, my own words, or in any sense stultifying myself; but I did it—and I thank my friend the Senator from Georgia for permitting me to say it—because I regarded it as a great and momentous transaction. I thought small differences of opinion ought not to hold us apart, and that we should, if it were possible to do it, come to an agreement that something might emanate from the legislative department to the President, that the reconcentrados who were starving might be relieved, and that the people who claim to love Cuba so much might afford the President an opportunity to aid Cuba.

Mr. BACON. I want to make two remarks in regard to what the Senator has just said. In the first place, I have labored with considerable earnestness to prove that the Senator has never voted for these three important resolutions. I think I have proved it; and in the second place the Senator has admitted it that he never did.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator——

Mr. BACON. I object to the Senator taking me entirely off the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me one moment, I will not interrupt him again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. I said I was going to make two remarks, and he has allowed me to make one. I will repeat the first one, as the Senator was engaged in the conference he was having with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and possibly did not hear it. I said that I had labored with considerable earnestness to endeavor to prove that the Senator from Wisconsin had never voted for the three important resolutions.

Mr. SPOONER. I admit it.

Mr. BACON. And I went on to say, which the Senator did not hear, and which I am now repeating for his benefit, that I had not only proved it, but that the Senator now admitted it.

Mr. SPOONER. I admitted it from the beginning.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The second remark I desire to make in regard to the Senator's remarks during the interruption is this: The Senator in the course of his interjection, and in the latter part of it, went on to say why he had voted for the resolutions, although he did not agree with them. I say the Senator is mistaken. He never voted for them.

Mr. SPOONER. I never said I did.

Mr. BACON. I think the RECORD will show that the Senator did.

Mr. SPOONER. I said I voted for the conference report, which, if adopted, would adopt the three resolutions for which I had not voted.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is entirely wrong. The conference report had no reference to these three resolutions, and if there is anything which can be demonstrated in logic it has been demonstrated and need not be repeated, that the conference report had nothing to do with these three resolutions, because there was no difference between the two Houses on the three resolutions. The conference report was limited to the differences on the first resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. How could they have been passed without an agreement to some conference report?

Mr. BACON. The conference report simply related to those differences as to——

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will certainly permit me to make a statement without interrupting me before I get through a sentence even. The trouble is, the Senator is engaged in a colloquy, and in the midst of a number of his advisers around he does not hear what I reply, and then he makes an interruption which relates to something I did not say.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not utter a word. I simply shook my finger.

Mr. BACON. The Senator shook it in a way so that I thought possibly it might go off. The proposition is a plain one, that the time when the Senate passed upon these three resolutions, which have probably now become a law by the signature of the President, was on the evening of Saturday, the 16th day of April; that the Senate voted upon them then, and has never voted upon them at any other time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me just a question, I will ask him whether the resolutions which have now probably become a law would have become a law except in pursuance of the vote found on page 4040 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. BACON. The question which the Senator from Indiana asks me is, in substance, exactly the same question that the Senator from Wisconsin asked me, and which I was trying to answer at the time when the Senator from Indiana interrupted me for the purpose of asking it again. It is necessary to have a logical sequence in a statement of a proposition, and before I can get to the conclusion the Senator repeats identically the same question. I was coming exactly to the question as to what was the effect of the vote of last night, if the Senator will permit me to get that far.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am willing that the Senator should answer one inquiry or the other. Either will satisfy me.

Mr. BACON. I will certainly do so if the Senator will give me an opportunity, at least to the best of my ability; whether satisfactorily to others or not, they must judge.

I repeat the proposition in order to state it properly. The only time these three resolutions which relate to intervention in Cuba have ever been passed upon by the Senate was Saturday evening; that the only differences between the two Houses were as to the first resolution, relating entirely to the matter of independence, and that they did not relate in any manner to either of these three propositions; that upon those differences the conference committee was appointed, whose duties were limited to those differences, whose report must have been limited to those differences, and that when it came to the Senate for a vote the votes were limited to those differences. In other words, when we had the vote last night we did not vote for these three resolutions in any manner, directly or indirectly. We could not change them. Our action as to them had been final. The action of the House as to them had been final. We could not amend them. The House could not amend them. The conference committee could not amend them. They were all three final.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Would the joint resolution have gone to the President for his signature and have become a law without the vote of last evening?

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly not; and if the Senator had permitted me, that was the next step which I was about to take and which I was about to state.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator, then, if the joint resolution would not have become a law but for the vote of last evening, whether he aided in making it a law by his vote against it?

Mr. BACON. If we had prevailed, it would have become a law just the same. Those three resolutions would have become a law just the same.

Mr. HOAR, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. CULLOM, and others. Oh, no!

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senators' pardon. Possibly I might be allowed to state a proposition before the Senators enter their judgment and verdict finally.

Mr. SPOONER. It was so plain a case that I felt at liberty to do it.

Mr. CULLOM. So did I.

Mr. BACON. The differences between the two Houses related exclusively to the first resolution. If we had prevailed, the matters to which the House objected would have remained in the joint resolution and it would have become law with that matter in it. So the joint resolution would not have been defeated if we had prevailed. I am speaking about the Turpie amendment. On the other hand, when the Turpie amendment was not permitted to prevail, as under the conference report it was excluded, the resolutions have become a law without the Turpie amendment. But under our action, whichever side prevailed, the three resolutions would have become law, just as they have become law, without alteration. But in the one case they would have become law with the recognition of the Cuban Republic. In the other case they would have become law, as they probably already have done, without the recognition of the Cuban Republic.

Now, Mr. President, one other word and I will stop. The Senator from Maine in the course of his remarks twitted the Senator from Missouri with the fact that the Democrats in the House had voted in the affirmative on the conference report and the Democrats in the Senate had voted in the negative on the conference report. I desire to point, I think with perfect ease, to the fact that in each case the Democrats, both in the Senate and the House, voted for the accomplishment of practically the same purpose. When the House agreed to the conference report, they had no vote to make on the Turpie amendment, because they had never agreed to the Turpie amendment. Consequently, it not having been recommended that they should agree to that amendment, it was not before them in any way. The House had stricken out the words "are and," and they were called upon by the conference report to restore those words. Now, when they voted to restore those words, they voted that the resolutions should declare——

Mr. HOAR. Who has stricken them out?

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a moment. When they voted to restore the words "are and" they voted that the declaration should read that "the people of Cuba are and of right ought to be free." Consequently their vote in that instance was in the interest of the independence of Cuba.

On the other hand, when the report came to the Senate for our action, we had nothing to do with the voting on the question as to restoration of those words, because we had already put them in, and we were not called upon to restore them. What we were called upon to do was to recede from the proposition that the Republic of Cuba should be recognized as free and independent; and when we voted "nay," we voted in the interest of the independence also of the Cuban Republic.

So, while the House voted in the affirmative on the conference report, they voted in the interest of the independence of Cuba; and in the Senate, while we voted in the negative on the conference report, we equally voted in the interest of the independence of Cuba. They voted on one proposition and we voted on another, and both propositions were included in the conference report.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. An affirmative vote for the conference report as it was presented to the Senate and House last night meant a demand of the United States, supported by the President in command of the land and naval forces of the United States, to bring it about, that the Spanish Government should withdraw all claim of authority from Cuba and withdraw her land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, did it not?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; decidedly not.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, as the conference report was adopted, what did pass?

Mr. BACON. The conference report had nothing to do with either one of the three resolutions which related to the question that the Senator now speaks of.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but the Senate, by the adoption of the conference report, composed all differences between the two Houses, did it not?

Mr. BACON. And those differences did not relate to that subject at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a moment. The adoption of the conference report composed all differences between the two Houses, did it not?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. And enabled the two Houses to send the joint resolution to the President for approval, did it not?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. And that measure, which, by this agreement between the two Houses, was sent to the President for his approval, demanded the withdrawal by Spain of all authority and troops from Cuba, did it not?

Mr. BACON. Well, ask your question, and I will answer it.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking it. Did it not?

Mr. BACON. I will answer when you get through.

Mr. SPOONER. I have asked it.

Mr. BACON. Are you through?

Mr. SPOONER. I want a categorical answer.

Mr. BACON. I decline to answer the question until you finish.

Mr. SPOONER. I say——

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, that has been thrashed over and over fifty times at the lowest calculation—the same thing over and over again.

Mr. BACON. Yes; I think it has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator——

Mr. BACON. I yield the floor to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been extremely good-natured, but I believe it is time to bring this to a close.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to interrupt me to ask a question of me?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Georgia has the floor, yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BACON. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BACON. I yielded the floor to the Senator by whose courtesy I held it, and that is the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Georgia had yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin who asked him a question before he sat down.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Missouri had yielded to the Senator from Georgia, and I could not, of course, hold the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the reason why I asked you if you wanted to put a question to me.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; I did not. I want to put a question to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. If not for too long a time. I have been yielding and I have been very good-natured. But I am very willing to indulge him. I will yield for a short time.

Mr. MONEY. I will not abuse the patience of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield further.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I said that I would yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a short time.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish the Senator from Missouri would yield to me for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. If for a question, I will yield, but I think I have shown a great deal of patience. I have listened to everybody and I want to get through. I want to do some talking myself. I have not talked any for a month. I did not open my mouth in the whole discussion of Cuban affairs. Everybody else has talked. The Senator from Wisconsin occupied five or six hours.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question. I will answer any question, but I have started here and gotten to a certain point. I have been reading from the President's message, and I want to get through with it. I do not know how many hornets' nests I shall stir up as I go along, but still I should like to proceed with the President's message.

Mr. President, I was discussing armed or neutrality intervention. I was quoting from the President's message on page 10, where he said:

There remain the alternative forms of intervention to end the war, either as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants or as the active ally of the one party or the other.

We have heard a great deal about the President's policy and that we must follow the President's policy, and we have been lectured because we were opposing the President's policy. I am trying to find out now exactly what was the President's policy and recommendation. I want Senators to note these words:

There remain the alternative forms of intervention to end the war, either as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants—

"Rational compromise between the contestants"— or as the active ally of the one party or the other.

Which one of these horns of the dilemma does the President take? He says:

There remain the alternative forms of intervention to end the war, either as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants—

Making them both submit; making them both equally submit, neither in favor of one nor the other. Now, what does he say?

As to the first, it is—

What is that? "An impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants."

As to the first, it is not to be forgotten that during the last few months the relation of the United States has virtually been one of friendly intervention—

"Friendly intervention!"— in many ways, each not of itself conclusive, but all tending—

Where tending?—

tending to the exertion of a potential influence toward an ultimate pacific result—

"An ultimate pacific result!"— just and honorable to all interests concerned. The spirit of all our acts hitherto has been an earnest, unselfish desire for peace and prosperity in Cuba, untarnished by differences between us and Spain, and unstained by the blood of American citizens.

Now listen:

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral—

Mark the language—

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war—

The phrase "to stop the war" is repeated hereafter—

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war, according to the large dictates of humanity and following many historical precedents where neighboring states have interfered to check the hopeless sacrifices of life by internecine conflicts beyond their borders, is justifiable on rational grounds. It involves, however—

What? I ask Senators to listen. It involves what—

It involves, however, hostile constraint—

"Hostile constraint"—

upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

There is the recommendation of the President of the United States. Nothing less and nothing more and nothing else. There it is:

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war, according to the large dictates of humanity and following many historical precedents where neighboring states have interfered to check the hopeless sacrifices of life by internecine conflicts beyond their borders, is justifiable on rational grounds. It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Now he gives the ground for it. He goes on and discusses all about it. Then he tells about the naval court of inquiry. What does he say in the end? I read from page 13:

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured—

Is what? What is the only hope? I appeal to Senators. What is the only hope of the President? He says this is unendurable. Now, what is the only hope?—

The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba.

The enforced pacification of Cuba. Not the independence of Cuba. Not the recognition of the independence of Cuba. Not the expulsion of Spain from Cuba, but the enforced pacification of Cuba by the United States, taking Spain and Cuba, respectively, each by the throat, and forcing them to terms. As I said before, as I quoted:

It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

That was the way of it. Enforce the truce and then guide the settlement and constrain both parties. That was the recommendation, pure and simple, and no living man can take the message and make anything else of it.

In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests—

Says the President—

which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

Must stop how? By the constrained intervention "upon both the parties to the contest." There it is. Yet the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked us to follow the President's policy; he said that that is the policy to follow. Did he follow it?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COCKRELL. In one moment. Now, I want to do justice to the President. I want to show that what his policy was is not the policy that was carried out, and is not the policy that was recommended by any committee of the Senate or of the House. Neither the resolution passed by the House nor that passed by the Senate is a fair interpretation of that policy. Now, what does he say?

The issue is now with the Congress. It is a solemn responsibility. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors.

"I have done all I can as the President of the United States in the exercise of my Executive functions. The matter now rests with the Congress." He has given his views. He has made his recommendations. He is powerless to do more, and he leaves the matter entirely to Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Will not the Senator from Missouri in fairness read the next paragraph where he stopped?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am going to read it all.

Mr. GRAY. Read the paragraph beginning, "In view of these facts."

Mr. COCKRELL. I intended to read that before. I will read it. Now, what is his further recommendation?

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

How? By the armed intervention, as he has recommended, as he has stated could be done by compelling the forces to come together and agree to a pacification. That would give a stable government and protect the rights of the people. It would not be an independent republic and it would not be the expulsion of Spain. Then he says:

In the interest of humanity and to aid in preserving the lives of the starving people of the island I recommend that the distribution of food and supplies be continued.

Did the President recommend that the distribution of food supplies should be continued when he undertook to expel Spain from Cuba? Why, no; it was upon the theory that he was going to put the strong arm of the United States upon the Spanish Government with one hand and upon the Cuban government with the other and constrain them to terms, and while doing that he would issue rations to the people to prevent starvation. That is the only interpretation you can make of it; there is no other on earth that you can give to it. Then he says:

The issue is now with the Congress. It is a solemn responsibility. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors. Prepared to execute every obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution and the law, I await your action.

"I await your action." This was as every President ought to have done. He awaits the action of Congress. Now, Mr. President, what was the action of Congress? Did we authorize him to place his mailed hand upon the Spanish and the Cuban governments and bring them together and constrain them to a peace and then make a settlement? Not a bit of it. Did we authorize and empower him to do anything? Not a bit of it. There is no authority and power here. It is a direct command. There is a great deal of difference between the two.

Mr. MONEY. The language is "directed and empowered."

Mr. COCKRELL. "Directed and empowered." The language of the resolution is perfectly explicit:

That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand—

What? Demand that pacification shall occur in Cuba? Demand that constraint shall be put upon the Cuban and Spanish governments and bring them to a truce and a final settlement? No, no; it is that the Government demands—that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

There it is. There is no equivocation about it. It is not authorizing and empowering, but it is directing and authorizing the President to do a specific act and giving him the power to do it. That was not in the President's recommendation; not a bit of it. And yet the Senator from Maine undertakes to say that these resolutions are in accordance with the policy of the President. They are directly the reverse of the policy of the President. What is the next clause? It reads:

That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States to such extent as may be necessary to carry—

To carry what? To carry the demand for Spain to withdraw from Cuba and from Cuban waters; to withdraw its authority as a government and its forces; to give up the Island of Cuba. What does the first sentence mean?

That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

That is the recognition of the Republic of Cuba by innuendo, by indirection; it is not a specific recognition.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is in favor of the declaration "That the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be, free and independent?"

Mr. COCKRELL. I voted for it and the Senator voted against it.

Mr. SPOONER. But he did not believe it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did believe it was true.

Mr. SPOONER. Never mind; the Senator was in favor of a demand upon the part of the United States that the Government of Spain should withdraw from Cuba——

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. All her land and naval forces, was he not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, and I voted for it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator voted against it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I voted for it and you against it. I voted for it and the RECORD shows you voted against it. I am astonished that the Senator from Wisconsin should resort to such a subterfuge. It is the weakest bosh I ever heard of. It is not swill, much less soup. There is no strength about it. There is nothing in it. He voted against it and I voted for it, and when it came to the pinch I voted against receding from it with the view of getting another vote in the House, or another conference until the House would yield, as it ought to have done.

Mr. CHANDLER rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is very anxious to do something or to ask me something. I do not know for what purpose he has risen.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri does not care to finish his speech to-day?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to yield for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I make that motion, Mr. President.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 19, 1898.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Andrew J. Edsall, of Bozeman, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Bozeman, Mont., vice John F. Asbury, whose term will expire May 4, 1898.

Louis W. Eldridge, of Lewistown, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Lewistown, Mont., vice John P. Barnes, whose term will expire May 7, 1898.

John Horsky, of Helena, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Helena, Mont., vice Jeremiah Collins, whose term will expire May 7, 1898.

Charles H. Norris, of Fowler, Cal., to be receiver of public moneys at Visalia, Cal., vice Edward A. Pueschel, term expired.

William J. French, of Alva, Okla., to be receiver of public moneys at Alva, Okla., vice James W. Coman, removed.

Thomas P. Kennard, of Lincoln, Nebr., to be receiver of public moneys at Lincoln, Nebr., vice William B. Morrison, resigned.

Samuel A. Young, of Inyankara, Wyo., to be receiver of public moneys at Sundance, Wyo., vice Thomas A. Dunn, whose term will expire April 16, 1898.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

To be second lieutenants.

ARTILLERY ARM.

Sergt. Samuel C. Vestal, Company E, Second Infantry, April 12, 1898, to fill an original vacancy.

Corpl. Thomas H. R. McIntyre, Company E, Fifth Infantry, April 12, 1898, to fill an original vacancy.

Sergt. Maj. Robert McCleave, First Infantry, April 12, 1898, to fill an original vacancy.

Corpl. Richard H. McMaster, Company D, Tenth Infantry, April 12, 1898, to fill an original vacancy.

INFANTRY ARM.

Sergt. John Robertson, Troop C, Second Cavalry, April 12, 1898, vice Saffarrans, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

Private James V. Heidt, general service, April 12, 1898, vice Pierce, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

Sergt. Joseph D. Bradley, Company D, Twelfth Infantry, April 12, 1898, vice Wahl, Fifth Infantry, promoted.

Sergt. Charles S. Lincoln, Company B, Second Infantry, April 12, 1898, vice Jackson, Twenty-fourth Infantry, promoted.

Corpl. Patrick H. Mullay, Troop B, Sixth Cavalry, April 12, 1898, vice Donworth, Fourteenth Infantry, promoted.

POSTMASTERS.

Frederick O. Prouty, to be postmaster at Cuba, in the county of Allegany and State of New York, in the place of R. S. Armstrong, deceased.

Sumner W. Thompson, to be postmaster at Davis, in the county of Tucker and State of West Virginia, in the place of Owen Willison, whose commission expired March 19, 1898.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Frederick von Baumbach, of Minnesota, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Minnesota, to succeed William H. Harries, removed.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Luke C. Strider, of the District of Columbia, to be justice of the peace in the District of Columbia (assigned to the city of Washington), his term expiring May 3, 1898.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Pay Director Edwin Stewart, to be Paymaster-General and Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Department of the Navy.

Ensign Ashley H. Robertson, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 1st day of February, 1898, vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) John J. Blandin, promoted.

Ensign Carlo B. Brittain, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 6th day of February, 1898, vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) Albert L. Key, promoted.

Ensign Casey B. Morgan, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 16th day of February, 1898 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) Friend W. Jenkins, deceased.

Ensign William M. Crose, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 10th day of March, 1898 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) William L. Howard, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Wiley R. M. Field, to be a lieutenant in the Navy, from the 14th day of March, 1898, vice Lieut. Oswin W. Lowry, deceased.

Ensign John F. Hubbard, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 14th day of March, 1898, vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) Wiley R. M. Field, promoted.

Thomas Drayton Parker, to be an assistant engineer in the Navy, under the provisions of private resolution No. 3, approved March 18, 1898.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Henry Z. Osborne, of California, to be marshal of the United States for the southern district of California, vice Nicholas A. Covarrubias, whose term will expire May 16, 1898.

John H. Shine, of California, to be marshal of the United States for the northern district of California, vice Barry Baldwin, whose term will expire May 29, 1898.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Edward Brassey, of Lewistown, Mont., to be register of the land office at Lewistown, Mont., vice David Hilger, whose term will expire May 7, 1898.

George D. Greene, of Boulder, Mont., to be register of the land office at Helena, Mont., vice William E. Cox, whose term will expire May 7, 1898.

Frank D. Hobbs, of Salt Lake City, Utah, to be register of the land office at Salt Lake City, Utah, vice Harvey N. McGrew, who was appointed November 5, 1897, during the recess of the Senate, and whose nomination was rejected April 12, 1898.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Leander M. Shubert, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, to succeed Russell N. Whittlesey, removed.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Richard H. Robinson, a citizen of Ohio, to be an assistant naval constructor in the Navy.

Frederic C. Brown, a citizen of Massachusetts, to be a chaplain in the Navy, to fill a vacancy.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 19, 1898.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Henry J. Lenderink, of Iowa, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Santiago, Chile.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Fred Butler, of Leadville, Colo., to be receiver of public moneys at Leadville, Colo.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Edwin R. Durham, of Missouri, to be marshal of the United States for the western district of Missouri.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Patrick H. Rourke, of North Dakota, to be attorney of the United States for the district of North Dakota.

Robert G. Evans, of Minnesota, to be attorney of the United States for the district of Minnesota.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Frederick von Baumbach, of Minnesota, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Minnesota.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Edgar Thompson, a citizen of Missouri, to be an assistant surgeon.

Thomas Drayton Parker, to be an assistant engineer.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Pay Director Edwin Stewart, to be Paymaster-General and Chief of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Navy Department.

Lieut. John A. H. Nickels, to be a lieutenant-commander.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) John J. Blandin, to be a lieutenant.
Lieut. Clinton K. Curtis, to be a lieutenant-commander.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Albert L. Key, to be a lieutenant.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) William L. Howard, to be a lieutenant.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Wiley R. M. Field, to be a lieutenant.
Lieut. Theodric Porter, to be a lieutenant-commander.
Ensign Frank M. Russell, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
Ensign Frank Marble, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
Ensign Ashley H. Robertson, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
Ensign Carlo B. Brittain, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
Ensign Casey B. Morgan, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
Ensign William M. Corse, to be a lieutanant (junior grade).
Ensign John F. Hubbard, to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

To be post chaplains.

The Rev. J. H. Sutherland, of West Virginia.
The Rev. Dwight Galloupe, of New Jersey.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Medical Department.

Maj. Henry Lippincott, surgeon, to be deputy surgeon-general.
Capt. George McCreery, assistant surgeon, to be surgeon.

Infantry arm.

First Lieut. Charles Richard Tyler, Sixteenth Infantry, to be captain.

Second Lieut. William Payne Jackson, Twenty-fourth Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. Albert Bernard Donworth, Fourteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

Cavalry arm.

First Lieut. James Waterman Watson, Tenth Cavalry, to be captain.

First Lieut. Percy Edwards Trippe, Tenth Cavalry, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Richard Larremore Livermore, Tenth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. Thomas Michael Corcoran, Tenth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. Robert John Fleming, Seventh Cavalry, to be first lieutenant.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. Res. 233. Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

THE VOTE ON CUBA.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by my colleague, Mr. DAVISON, to state to the House, so that it may go upon record, that on account of sickness he was not present during last evening's session of the House. Had he been present, he would have voted in accordance with the votes he had previously cast; he would have voted to agree to the report of the conference committee.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I ask that an editorial in to-day's New York Sun be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A CALL FOR A VOLUNTEER.

The most useful service which the Hon. CHARLES HENRY GROSVENOR, of Ohio, can render his country at this critical time is to get up in the House and ask Mr. REED to recognize him for a personal explanation.

[Laughter.]

If he is recognized, he should then proceed personally to explain that when he remarked in the House of Representatives on Thursday, April 7, that "this war will be fought under the banner of the Republican Administration of this Government, or it will not be fought at all," he did not mean to be understood, as he certainly has been understood by certain patriotic Democrats in Congress, that this war is to be a Republican war.

Let General GROSVENOR stand up like the man he is and state the exact truth. If this war is fought at all, it will be fought under the flag of the United States. General GROSVENOR can do his country and his Administration this great service. Will he volunteer?

[Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have volunteered. [Laughter.] There is but one statement of fact in the article just read that I in any possible way controvert; and that is, that there is any Democrat on this floor who construed my statements in my remarks of April 7 in the manner indicated by that editorial paragraph. I will make a very brief statement; and I am sure the House at least will be satisfied with it.

There had been a very severe assault, as we all understood, upon the Administration by gentlemen on this floor; and in reply, having traversed the various grounds upon which the allegations had been made, I came finally to the point objected to by the New York Sun. There had been at that time, as is well known, more or less disposition to disorganization on the Republican side of the House, and one distinguished gentleman who occupied the floor that afternoon had pointed this out with considerable force and with a degree of insinuating pleasantry, if it was pleasantry, that was quite suggestive to us on this side. Having, as well as I could, combated the charges against the Administration as I understood them to be made——

The SPEAKER. The Chair ought to say that this is proceeding by general consent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Chair to be put in any awkward position. I ask unanimous consent of the House——

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask that privilege. I think it has been granted a great many times heretofore.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be allowed to proceed. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair simply wanted to call the attention of the House to the matter, because the precedents in regard to questions of personal privilege do not go quite so far as to recognize this matter as such.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know exactly where I left off. I will ask the privilege of connecting what I am to say with what I have said.

Having combated as well as I could what I understood to be the allegations which had been made on the other side, I then appealed to the Republican side of the House, and incidentally to the entire House, to cease attacks upon the Administration. I will read the language which I used. And I beg to say that no line or word or punctuation mark was changed by me, for I never saw the matter as written out by the official reporters from the time I made my remarks until they made their appearance in the RECORD. Here is my language:

Here comes a matter which the whole world will say controlled the Administration as it ought to have been controlled; and the world will be notified to-night that the President of the United States has been assailed by a distinguished Representative on this floor, his motives impugned, his integrity censured, his whole action charged as being instigated by criminal purpose. And this in a body that boasts that it is going to stand by the Administration!

Now, gentlemen, let me tell you another thing. This war will be fought under the banner of the Republican Administration of this Government or it will never be fought at all. We may differ about how it ought to be inaugurated, and honestly. Some of you may have an opinion different from mine, and I honor you for that. But when the time comes the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States will command the column that will crush the power of Spain, or it never will be crushed.

That is the entire reference, the entire statement, verbatim, of everything said by myself in reference to that branch of the subject.

My purpose, Mr. Speaker, was not to intimate that the Democratic party of this country was not as loyal to the country as was the Republican party; and I had taken occasion to state, earnestly, at the time of the passage of the $50,000,000 emergency bill, my unqualified indorsement, and, indeed, my profound delight, at the record of the Democratic party with reference to it. My proposition, which I was seeking to enforce, was that this Administration having three years to serve, the war that we were entering upon, probably, at that time, and certainly now, would have to be conducted under the Administration of the present Chief Executive of the United States; and I was appealing to gentlemen on this floor not to hamper the Administration in any manner, but to stand together solidly in its support.

And now, if it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly think it is not, I will say that I believe this war will be as energetically waged, both in the machinery necessary to carry it on and the response to the call for arms by the Administration, by the Democrats and by the Populists as by the Republicans; and especially do I believe that the response of patriotism will come from every Southern State, from every ex-Confederate soldier who is capable of bearing arms, and will be joined in by one triumphant echo of victory among the people of the South and by the loyal men who wore the blue. [Prolonged applause.]

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on Military Affairs may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. I simply desire to say that I was unavoidably absent last evening, having traveled 450 miles yesterday and last night in the attempt to get here for the purpose of voting on the Cuban resolution. I got here at 8 o'clock this morning, after the vote had been taken last night; and now desire to say that if I had been present, I should have voted in the affirmative on the final passage of the resolutions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The following changes of reference were announced by unanimous consent:

The bill H. R. 9662—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Militia.

The bill H. R. 9816—from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

House Document No. 415—from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the members of the House are exceedingly wearied by the all-night session, and the desire seeming general that they may have a rest to-day, I move that the House do now adjourn. [Applause.]

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9863) to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1112); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9862) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1113); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ELLIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6087) granting to the State of Kansas the entire remaining portion of the abandoned Fort Dodge Military Reservation in said State as an addition to and for the use of the State Soldiers' Home, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1115); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRIFFIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 237) appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, accompanied by a report (No. 1116); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9454) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1114); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HURLEY: A bill (H. R. 9945) to make the 12th day of February a national and legal holiday, in memory of Abraham Lincoln—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 9946) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Muskogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARMACK: A bill (H. R. 9947) for the relief of Martha A. Booth, administratrix—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 9948) granting a pension to Sarah Gordon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 9949) for the relief of Oliver M. Blair, administrator of Thomas P. Blair, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 9950) granting relief to Henry Null, of Greene County, Ind.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 9951) for the relief of Mrs. Druzilla Stump—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire: Petition of Daniel Webster Council, No. 22, United American Mechanics, of Concord, N. H., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 112, amending the immigration laws—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Sunapee, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONNELL: Petition of Robert Taylor Lodge, No. 418, Knights of Pythias, of Vandling, Pa., indorsing House bill No. 6468, praying for a lease of public land from the Government for the establishment of a national Pythian sanitarium—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of the United States Brewers' Association, protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of the Chicago Federation of Labor, against the passage of the anti-scalping bill or any similar measure—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HURLEY: Petition of the United States Brewers' Association, protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana: Resolutions of citizens and religious denominations of the Sixth Congressional district of Indiana, against the passage of a law dispersing William Duncan and Indians of Annette Island—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and various citizens of Richmond, Ind., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: Petition of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey, Independent Order of Mechanics, for the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cubans—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. McRAE: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Little Rock, Ark., in support of House bill No. 6066, relating to appropriations to aid in the holding of a national exposition of American products and manufactures in Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Papers to accompany House bill to remove the charge of desertion against Henry Null—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER: Evidence in support of House bill for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Stump—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: One thousand two hundred and sixty-eight petitions of citizens of the State of Colorado, in opposition to the so-called anti-scalping bill or any similar measure—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petitions of Order of Railway Conductors, No. 278, Dennison, Ohio; H. C. Boughton Division, No. 33, Andrews, Ind.; Blue River Lodge, No. 61, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Princeton, Ind.; Order of Railway Conductors, No. 320, Dayton, Ohio; R. W. Taylor and 19 others, Chewalla, Tenn.; E. A. McDonald and 9 others, Heiskell Station, Tenn.; Z. T. Watkins and 19 others, Ooltewah, Tenn.; A. M. Shell and 22 others, Piney Flats, Tenn.; F. F. Allison and 7 others, Lavonia, Ga., and Senator D. J. Griffith and 8 others, Lewiedale, S. C., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: Protests of the J. M. Bour Company, R. A. Bartley, the Dow & Snell Company, and the Paddock Overmyer Company, all business firms of Toledo, Ohio, against the internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TODD: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other citizens of Allen, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VINCENT: Papers to accompany House bill No. 8715, for the relief of W. J. Randolph—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

BASIS OF TREASURY STATEMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 5th instant, certain information relative to the ascertainment of the amount of gold in actual circulation after deducting the reserves in the Treasury and in the banks, and stating that the starting point of the estimate of the stock of gold in the United States is the calculation made of the stock June 30, 1872, by Dr. Henry R. Linderman, then Director of the Mint, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of an additional appropriation of $50,000 for the survey and examination of the Nicaragua Canal; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented the memorial of F. W. Clair and 19 other citizens of Maine, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of A. E. Burnside Post, No. 29, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bladen, Nebr., praying that the President of the United States and the Congress take immediate action for the relief of the starving

Cubans, and also for the recognition of the Island of Cuba; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the National Building Trades Council of America, praying for the enactment of legislation to grant the right of franchise to citizens of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich.; of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Big Prairie, Mich., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Big Prairie, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise, to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes, to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws, and to prohibit the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or other kindred devices; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Big Prairie, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 330, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Alpena, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, the prison-labor bill, the anti-injunction bill, and the bill for the relief of American seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Farrell Division, No. 94, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Marquette Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate circulation of newspaper descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit kinetoscope reproductions of prize fights in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of the congregations of the Baptist Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Epworth League, and the Christian Endeavor Society, all of Tekonsha, in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Oakland, Imlay City, and Lambertville; of the Congregational Christian Endeavor Society of Owosso; of the congregations of the Climax Methodist Episcopal Church, the Scott Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Baptist Church, of Climax; of sundry citizens of Pickford, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Epworth League, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Baptist Young People's Union, and the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church, of Tekonsha, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the board of directors of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating and defining the grades of flour; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Denver, Colo., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Freight Bureau of Denver, Colo., praying for the adoption of the so-called Cullom amendment to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MANTLE presented a petition of Black Eagle Division, No. 358, Order of Railway Conductors, of Great Falls, Mont., and a petition of Butte City Division, No. 294, Order of Railway Conductors, of Butte, Mont., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of Republican Camp, No. 1, of Veterans and their Sons, of Indiana, praying that section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to the effect that the provisions of the statute giving preference to the soldiers who were discharged by reason of disabilities incurred in the service shall be extended to all honorably discharged Union soldiers of the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of Huntington Lodge, No. 55, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Huntington, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Brownville, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., praying that an appropriation be made to complete the inland waterway along the Atlantic coast; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5883) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PETTUS on the 22d of March relative to the stating of an account by the Postmaster-General with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company during the period between July 12, 1876, and January 25, 1889, intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute as an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1928) for the relief of William Stephenson Smith, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3144) for the relief of Finetta Nalle, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4191) to readjust the boundary of the National Zoological Park and preserve its seclusion between Park road on the east and Cincinnati street and Connecticut avenue on the west, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3696) to amend an act entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1018) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ingham; and

A bill (H. R. 7554) granting a pension to William Iott.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAFFERY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4438) for the relief of the estate of Raymond Pocheiu, deceased, late of New Orleans, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a bill (S. 4439) to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4440) granting a pension to Josiah B. Deeter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 4441) granting a pension to Sarah S. Barker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 4442) removing the charge of desertion from the name of Milton G. Markland, of Salem, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 4443) to establish a board of national defense and to secure unity of action between the War and Navy Departments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4444) to correct the military record of Franklin J. Myers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4445) for the relief of the city of Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4446) granting a pension to Emma Thurston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHILTON introduced a bill (S. 4447) for the coinage of so much of the silver bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," as represents the gain or seigniorage of such bullion, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHILTON. No; I ask that it may lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 155) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange a battery and equipments with the governor of the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARANSAS PASS HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, and especially to make plans and estimates for the removal of the sand bar at Aransas Pass and the deepening of the channel across said bar to a depth of at least 20 feet and a width of at least 150 feet at the bottom, so as to furnish an inlet for the passage of vessels from the Gulf of Mexico into Aransas Harbor; and in preparing said plans, specifications, and estimates the Secretary of War, or such Government engineers as he may designate to do the work, may consider the feasibility of utilizing such breakwaters now at said pass, constructed by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, or the utilizing of any part of the same, and the value such use of such breakwater or material may be to the United States in deepening said channel; and in the estimate of such valuation any permanent damage which, in the opinion of the Government engineers, may have occurred by reason of the construction of said breakwater to said harbor or pass, or additional expense to the United States made necessary by reason of said attempted improvements in future improvements of said harbor or pass, shall also be considered by said engineers and reported by them. The engineers shall also report the approximate cost of construction of any breakwater of the said company which may be used by the Government, and also report the approximate cost of removing any part of said breakwater if it is deemed necessary to remove any portion of it.

That the Secretary of War is further directed to report to Congress at its next session.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate no circumstances can arise in the relations of the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain that will warrant an increase of the interest-bearing bonded indebtedness of this Government, or that will in any manner interfere in the reform of the financial affairs of the United States on lines laid down in the National People's Party platform of July, 1896.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no. I want to have the resolution either considered at this time or passed over under objection until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution lies over.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, being the joint resolution providing for the succession of the Presidency, be made the special order for Wednesday, May 4. Though I think there will not be much objection or much discussion, I do not like to call it up as matters are ordinarily called up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What hour does the Senator suggest?

Mr. HOAR. The 4th of May, at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, shall be made the special order for Wednesday, May 4, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Is there any objection to the request? Unanimous consent seems to be given.

Mr. CANNON. What was the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That Senate joint resolution 86 be made the special order for Wednesday, May 4, at 2 o'clock. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

ROBERT SPAUGH.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 294) for the relief of Robert Spaugh.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Robert Spaugh $750, for money paid out by him on the 16th day of September, 1863, under certain confiscation proceedings against the property of John Vogler, in the district court of the United States in the State of Indiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4929) extending the time for the completion of bridge across St. Lawrence River.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4 of the act approved February 9, 1893, authorizing the St. Lawrence Railway Company, of the State of New York, to build and maintain a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at some point in St. Lawrence County, State of New York, as amended by the act approved February 15, 1896, by extending the time for the completion of the bridge to February 9, 1899.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I see Senators on the floor. I take it they are rising to morning business. If so, I will yield for that purpose after the appropriation bill is taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 8428, being the sundry civil appropriation bill? The Chair hears none, and lays the bill before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for morning business.

FORT MAGINNIS MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that the bill which was partially considered a few evenings since?

Mr. CARTER. It is the same bill. I think it is entitled to special consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 161) providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon; and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 6, after the word "entry," to strike out the words "except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes;" so as to make the section read:

That all lands which have heretofore been excluded from the limits of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, shall be open to the operation of the laws regulating homestead entry and to entry under the town-site laws and the laws governing the disposal of coal lands, desert lands, and mineral lands, and shall not be subject to sale under the provisions of an act relating to the sale of abandoned military reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "all entries" and insert "any entry;" in line 2, after the word "faith," to insert "by a legally qualified person;" in line 5, after the word "shall," to insert "if regular in form and free from adverse claim;" in line 7, after the word "Interior," to insert "upon application of the entryman, if made within one year from the approval of this act;" and in line 8, after the word "directed," to insert "where adverse interests have not intervened;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any entry heretofore made in good faith by a legally qualified person under either the homestead, town-site, desert-land, or mineral-land laws of the United States upon any of the excluded portions of said Fort Maginnis Military Reservation shall, if regular in form and free from adverse claim, be held valid, and the Secretary of the Interior, upon application of the entryman, if made within one year from the approval of this act, is directed, where adverse interests have not intervened, to reinstate such entries under either of said laws as he may heretofore have canceled because of a construction based upon the opinion that the laws mentioned in section 1 of this act did not apply to the abandoned portions of said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD KING.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 133) for the relief of Richard King.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Richard King, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, being compensation in full for expenses incurred and permanent injury sustained by said Richard King by reason of being shot by the gross carelessness and neglect of a soldier of the United States Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. CLARK. There is a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, Report No. 774.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. It is a short one.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SHOUP March 24, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 133) for the relief of Richard King, have examined the same and submit the following report:

This is a bill for the relief of Richard King, and provides for the payment to him of the sum of $5,000, as compensation in full for expenses incurred and permanent injuries sustained by said Richard King by reason of being shot by the carelessness and neglect of a soldier of the United States Army. The facts in the case are substantially as follows, as shown by affidavits of civilians and by reports of military authorities having knowledge of the circumstances:

Richard King was shot by a soldier of Troop F, Ninth Cavalry, while that troop was on route from Rawlins, Wyo., to Fort Duchesne, Utah, on June 7, 1894. On that day King was herding his sheep about 25 miles southwest of Baggs, Wyo., and about three-quarters of a mile off from the Thornburg road. Between 9 and 10 o'clock a. m. he was shot through the body and fell on his face. Upon raising himself he was able to see two men with horses who seemed to him to be going away from him. He motioned to the men and one of them proved to be a colored soldier, and when asked why he shot King, said he "thought he was an antelope." Both men then left, one ostensibly to find the surgeon and the other to find King's wife, who was in camp about three-quarters of a mile away. After waiting some time he crawled toward his camp, and upon arrival there found the soldier had not made his appearance. Upon examination afterwards, as is shown by official reports, the man failed to find the camp of King, and fearing that King would die had not reported the accident to his command.

During the afternoon the hospital steward of the command came to King's camp, having been ordered to do so when notice of the shooting was given to the command by the second soldier. His report to the military authorities sets forth the serious nature of the wound, and corresponds in its material features with the affidavit of Dr. W. S. Bennett, who afterwards attended King. King suffered for a long time, incurred over $600 expenditure for medical services, his only property, a herd of sheep of some 2,000 head, were badly scattered and never recovered, and he sustains, from all the evidence, a life-long injury, which will forever prohibit him from active labor. The affidavit of Dr. Bennett, above referred to, says: "He will live, but can never be a strong, able-bodied man." He further states that in two cases out of three such a gunshot wound would result fatally. The Secretary of War, after a full official investigation and with all the official reports before him, says:

"After a very careful review of the evidence in the case, it is the opinion of this Department that it was one of those most unfortunate accidents for which no one seems really to blame. Indeed, it is a case which it is very likely would appeal to the sympathy of Congress, and would seem to be a very proper one to be brought to the attention of that body by Mr. King or his representative, but it is not thought that the War Department should take the initiative in the matter."

The Acting Judge-Advocate-General, in his report upon all the evidence and official information in the case, says:

"I do not find that any culpability attaches to Capt. H. W. Wright, Troop F, Ninth Cavalry, in this case. On being apprized of the shooting, he appears to have dispatched at once the medical officer of his command to seek out and attend the wounded man, and to have done all that could be expected of him under the circumstances.

"But Mr. King has certainly a most equitable claim upon the United States on account of these injuries and expenses—the result of the negligent act of the United States soldier. The Secretary of War, however, would of course not be authorized to entertain an unliquidated claim of this character in the absence of legislation of Congress. The case is thus eminently one for relief by that body, to whose attention it is recommended that the Secretary invite this appeal at the earliest opportunity."

Major-General Schofield, commanding the Army at the time, concurs in the recommendation of the acting Judge-Advocate-General.

The correspondence, evidence, and official reports to the War Department, all of which have been submitted to the committee, fully warrant a recommendation be made to report the bill favorably, without amendment.

The passage of the bill is therefore recommended, with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, about a year ago, as I remember the matter, a claim somewhat of this nature was before the Senate to pay a citizen of some other country for injury received from careless firing by a Union soldier. I then called attention to the fact that in the Forty-ninth Congress a bill passed the other House in behalf of a citizen of New Hampshire who sustained a very grievous injury in the harbor of Portsmouth from the acknowledged careless practice of the gunners in the fort. The bill came to this body and did not receive favorable consideration.

During the discussion the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who I think at the time the bill passed the House was either chairman of the Committee on Claims or a member of that committee, explained at length that he gave very careful consideration to the New Hampshire claim; that his sympathies were very strongly aroused; but that he could not come to a conclusion that the Government ought to pay for damages of this kind, even though they occurred through the carelessness of soldiers of the United States, and that he drew a wide distinction between a claim on behalf of a citizen of a foreign country and a citizen of our own country.

Mr. President, I have never revived the New Hampshire claim, for the reason that I assumed that that was to be the policy of the Government. I simply rose now to say that if this claim is to pass Congress I propose at the earliest opportunity to endeavor to get consideration for the New Hampshire claim, which is a much stronger one than this, and which incurred suffering and sorrow to a much greater extent than this did, because it caused the death of two persons, and it was acknowledged by the United States officials that the firing of the guns was utterly inexcusable, and that it was the fault of the Government and the fault of nobody else.

I do not rise to oppose this claim if the Senate cares to pass the bill, but I want to put myself upon record as being in favor of exact justice in this particular, and if we are to enter upon this I think very doubtful procedure, I shall feel it my duty to press upon the Senate certainly favorable consideration for a claim that involves more equities than does this claim.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the bill go over for a day. I want to examine it further.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will agree to that course.

Mr. CLARK. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill lies over.

YALOBUSHA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi, giving notice that after that I shall object to the consideration of any bill on the Calendar.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8569) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi. It is a bill simply extending the time for building a bridge, and it has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce, after having passed the other House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. At the adjournment last evening we were considering an amendment on page 67, made as in Committee of the Whole. I believe that is about the only remaining matter under consideration. I hope we can have it disposed of at an early hour. I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had the floor on the amendment at the time of adjournment.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] desires to say anything, I will yield the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington desire to say anything further on the amendment?

Mr. WILSON. I have nothing to say upon the motion that I made. I did intend to answer briefly the statement brought out in the remark of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and the reply made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]; but if we can have a vote upon my motion to recede from the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, of course I would be glad to have it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall have to discuss the question of receding from the amendments. I am in favor of the action that was taken by the full committee to strike out these provisions, which would take this subject from under the civil-service law.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not know but that the Senator from Washington would be content to take a viva voce vote on the question. We could in that way get rid of it very soon. However, I do not wish to interfere at all with its full consideration.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the Senator from Missouri is ready to proceed. I desire to say just a word or two in defense of my position in this matter before the general debate is closed; but if there were to be no further debate, of course I would not care to discuss it. I should like to hear the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have only a word or two to add on the particular question we were discussing yesterday, and that is about Cuba.

Prior to the receipt of the President's message I thought there was no question but that the President had notified Spain that the independence of Cuba was absolutely required. It was so stated in the press as coming authoritatively; it was so stated by others who had opportunities to know what had been done. When the message disclosed the fact that the President had never said to Spain that Cuba must be free, I felt that it was our duty then to take the initiative in recognizing the independence of Cuba. The President had the right to recognize the independence of Cuba. We supposed that he had told the Spaniards that Cuba must be an independent government. That is the reason why I for one insisted all the time that we should have in the resolution a distinct and unequivocal recognition of the Republic of Cuba, and that is the reason why I voted for every provision in the line of a declaration that the people of Cuba are and of right ought to be a free and independent nation.

We secured that, but we failed to secure the other provision which we thought was essential.

I hope the President will construe the resolutions which have been adopted as an unequivocal declaration on the part of Congress that the Cuban people must be free, and that not one particle of restraint or constraint shall be imposed upon them by the power of the United States, either directly or indirectly. Aid, comfort, strength, and force must be given to them, instead of restraint, and they will at no distant day achieve that freedom for which they have fought so long and endured so much. That is all I desire to say on this particular branch of the question.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] asked me to yield to him yesterday, and while I was yielding to almost everybody, I find that I did not finally yield to him. I yield now, and trust he will make his remarks in his own time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if there is to be a political debate on an appropriation bill it can not, I think, be laid at our door.

Since the unfortunate occurrence in the harbor of Havana, when the battle ship of the United States was blown up, there has been intense excitement in the public mind over that question. For one, I realized the position in which it put the President. I had on various occasions, in a very brief way, expressed my opinion as to what the Administration preceding the present Administration ought to have done, and what the present Administration ought to do. I think my criticisms were always strictly within proper rules and at no time tinged with any extreme partisan feeling.

When the President of the United States grappled with the question concerning the destruction of the Maine—which I felt was a different question from any he had been handling before—knowing how much the public mind was excited, I refrained from any discussion of the question, as did nearly all of what may be called the opposition to the present Administration. Later, when the debate was precipitated by those who call themselves supporters of the Administration, and somewhat severe criticism, I think, was indulged in on the other side of the Chamber—on the Democratic side, if you choose—there was some criticism of the course of the President; but I do not recall that there was any offensive criticism by any Senator who does not consider himself a supporter of the Administration. There was general criticism in the country of what was regarded as the delay of the President. There was a good deal of impatience expressed in another place by those who professed to be the supporters of the present Administration.

Mr. President, I am bound to say that, in my judgment, the criticism as to the delay of the Administration in dealing with the question concerning the destruction of the Maine was not a fair criticism. I do not think there was undue delay. I felt that the Administration in dealing with a question of that kind had a right to deal with it in a dignified way. There were disputed questions of fact which had to be determined, and then the responsibility was to be deduced from an examination of those facts; and, so far as the opposition in the Senate was concerned, there was no attempt to press the Executive, there was no haste on the part of those who do not support him; but there was a good deal of haste on the part of some of the supporters of the President in this Chamber.

So we proceeded, Mr. President, until we received the message of the President on the 11th day of this month. I hope no one will consider that I am unduly criticising the President when I say that the message was a great disappointment to the American people, and that it was a great disappointment to the members of this body, irrespective of their party associations. We had been told over and over again by the public press, and we had been told by the friends of the Administration here, that the President of the United States had submitted to Spain an ultimatum, and that that ultimatum was that Spain should get out of Cuba; in other words, that she should recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic.

When the message came to us, we found that no such submission had ever been made to Spain; on the contrary, we found there had been submitted to Spain a proposition that Spain should cease her warfare on the Island of Cuba until next October, which Spain had in an arrogant way declined, and later, at the request of the Pope, and perhaps of the powers, had acceded to it. What has become of that armistice? I do not know whether it is in existence or whether war is flagrant in Cuba, as it has been so long. I am not advised.

Mr. President, while not approving what has been done, I do not intend now to enter into any criticism of it. I have felt from the beginning that if we were to have war—which I believed might have been avoided, as I have said heretofore, by a proper treatment of this subject by the preceding Administration or by this, or by both—but if we are to have war, Mr. President, I have been anxious that the American people should be a unit, not only the body of the people of the United States, but that there should be unity here in this body and in the other. But, Mr. President, it seems that the friends of the Administration here are not willing to have that kind of condition prevail. If there is to be a war between us and Spain, they desire to see a war between the different political factions or the political parties of this country.

We had proceeded with a fair degree of unanimity up to last Saturday. When the President of the United States in an informal way asked Congress to give him the control of $50,000,000—a thing never done before in this country; for, while we did vote to give such a power to President Lincoln, that was in the midst of an active and important war—there has never been in the history of this country any such power placed in the hands of an Executive as that which was placed in the hands of the present Executive by the united vote of this body and, practically, I think, the united vote of the other. The Democrats in another place responded as promptly to that informal demand as they did here; and the President of the United States received a power that the English people would not give to the Queen of Great Britain, I think, under any circumstances that might arise. That was at least indicative of a desire not to engage in party politics.

When the House resolutions came to us, we had before us a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, a majority of which I think consists of Republicans—I am not sure as to that, but I think a majority are Republicans—at least the report of the committee came to us on the main feature of those resolutions without division. Upon one point there was a division, and that was whether or not we should recognize the independence of Cuba.

Mr. President, in order to see what influence the minority report should have upon the Senate and how it should be dealt with, I think it is necessary to go back to 1896, when we passed through this body a resolution to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. On the 28th day of February, 1896, the Senate passed this resolution:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

There was a square, unequivocal declaration on the part of the Senate of the United States, and subsequently by the House of Representatives, that there was a government of some kind in the Island of Cuba; and that declaration was made two years ago.

That government has been maintained with great vigor ever since; it is in control of a large part of the island; it has been enabled to contend with the greatest army which Spain has ever sent to the Western Hemisphere, a greater army than she ever sent to conquer the revolted provinces in South America. That army has contended with Spain, notwithstanding an outlay on the part of Spain which has been unequaled by any outlay ever heretofore made by her. Yet it is said on this floor that there is no such thing as a government in Cuba which we can fairly recognize.

Mr. President, the resolutions which I have read are in the statutes of the United States, as concurrent resolutions go into those statutes. Now, it is said that the President of the United States has the absolute control over that question, and therefore they count for nothing. Those resolutions passed the House of Representatives because that House agreed to the report of the committee of conference by a very large vote, a vote of 247 yeas to 27 nays, a report which passed this body by a vote of 64 to 6.

The President of the United States, not the present Executive, did not see fit to recognize, as he might, and, as I think, he should, no matter whether the power was with him or not—he did not see fit to recognize the existence of that government, nor to extend to it, as he might have done without reference to our vote, belligerent rights.

That was the condition up to the 20th day of May, 1897, when this Senate by a vote of 41, as I recollect, to 14 passed a resolution declaring that those people were entitled to belligerent rights; which resolution went to the House of Representatives, and has not since been heard of.

When the Committee on Foreign Relations made their report, there came to us a minority report, or rather an appendix to the committee's report, I should perhaps say, being a declaration that those people were entitled to recognition, and that the Government of the United States would recognize the Republic of Cuba. On a vote taken, after discussion in this body, the resolutions were amended by the insertion of that clause by a vote of 51 to 37, being a majority of 14 in favor of the proposition.

In that majority were a number of very prominent Republican members of this body. There were at least three Senators who voted for that, and who, I think, made speeches in favor of it—in fact, I know they did—who have held very high positions in their States in addition to the positions which they now hold as the representatives of those States. There was in that majority at least one Senator who had sat in a Republican Cabinet. There were some Democrats who did not vote for that, but who voted with the minority.

Mr. President, I have been a member of this body for a great many years, and have always been an active participant, more or less, in its proceedings, and a close observer, and I assert here now that in my experience I have never seen so much temper exhibited as was exhibited by the defeated party on that occasion. The fifty-one Senators who cast that vote were treated here as if they had committed a crime.

Then came the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to substitute the resolution which we had perfected or amended for that of the House of Representatives. On that there were 67 yeas and 21 nays.

Before the vote was taken we were treated to two very remarkable speeches. In the first place, the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] addressed the Senate in a manner which struck me then as being—and I called the attention of the Chair to it at the time—entirely out of order. It was the first time in my experience in this body that I had ever heard the Senate threatened with an Executive veto in so many words; it was the first time in this body that I had ever heard a statement made to affect the vote that the House of Representatives would enter into a deadlock with us. A majority of 67 against 21 were assailed as a temporary majority about to be, I suppose, destroyed by some influence which was not exactly stated.

Mr. GRAY. May I call the attention of the Senator to the vote on that question? It was 60 to 28.

Mr. TELLER. That was the first vote—60 to 28. I had reversed that. I had put the next vote first, but the principle was the same.

Here was a great big majority, more than two-thirds of the Senate, that had declared that there was a proper condition existing for the recognition of the Republic of Cuba. We had declared more than two years before that there was a government in the Island of Cuba.

Mr. GALLINGER. And a majority of Republicans voted for it.

Mr. TELLER. A majority of Republicans in this Chamber voted for that. I need not say, Mr. President, that it was a representative majority of the Republicans who voted with us. At once we were assailed and charged with making politics out of this question. Although we had never entered into any political discussion, although we had made no attack upon the Executive, yet we were told that this would be treated as an attack upon the Executive. For a week we heard it whispered about this Chamber in the most indecent manner, as I have always felt the statement to be, that the President would veto any joint resolution that was sent to him that included the recognition of the Republic of Cuba. I deny here that any man had the right to speak for the Executive on that question, for the Executive himself had declared in the most emphatic terms in his message that he had exhausted diplomacy, that the matter must be left with us, and that he would be content with whatever we should do.

The Senator from Maine said the President had marked out a course that we were to follow. Well, suppose he had, were the Senate of the United States obliged to follow it? But the President had marked out no course for us to follow; and if he had, I would not myself have followed it, unless it comported with my judgment; and I hope no other Senator would, Mr. President.

The advice of the Executive is frequently persuasive; the advice of the Executive is frequently good; but it is a very poor administration of public affairs which will allow the Executive to dictate to the legislative branch of the Government what it shall do.

I insist, Mr. President, that the Executive made no attempt to interfere. I do not think he is subject to any criticism whatever in that view, for I have not heard from any respectable source that he ever authorized any man to say that he was dissatisfied with that provision of the resolutions as we passed them; nor do I believe that he would have vetoed the resolutions if that provision had been adopted. The Senator from Maine when asked whether he spoke by authority, disclaimed that he spoke by authority.

After the Senator from Maine had concluded, the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] addressed the Senate in the same strain, not as to the threat of an Executive veto—I do not mean that—but as to the criticism of those of us who had seen fit to differ with him in our votes. That Senator said—and I think he did not say it with the carelessness with which we sometimes speak, for, if I mistake not, he spoke with great deliberation:

> Mr. President, I can not vote for the joint resolution because it introduces, and I believe was meant to introduce, discord and divided counsels in what ought to be the act of a united country.

Mr. President, up to that time I challenge any man to show any ground for such a statement. There had not been a speech made in the Senate by any Senator who voted for the resolutions which would have justified a charge that the resolutions were amended by adding the recognition of the Republic of Cuba for the purpose of having divided counsels. We had voted here two years before that it was the duty of the Government of the United States to secure the independence of a government that we had especially pointed out as a government of the Island of Cuba that had been carrying on war with Spain. That was a direct recognition of that government by the Senate of the United States by a very large vote, to which I have called the attention of the Senate.

There were a number of Senators here who had addressed the Senate before those resolutions were passed in favor of the recognition of the independence of Cuba. The Senator from Massachusetts himself, though not present and voting, was vouched for by his colleague [Mr. LODGE] on the floor of the Senate as ready and willing and desiring, if present, to vote for that clause of the resolution—that was Mr. Cameron's amendment—which provided:

> Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The colleague of the Senator stated that he was authorized to say that the senior Senator from Massachusetts would vote for that resolution if he were present on the floor.

Divided counsels! Mr. President, I want to repeat that there was no foundation for that statement except that the Senator feared that there would be a division because he and his associates were not willing to submit to the views of the majority. There could have been no other reason. I do not want to use harsh terms, but the language of the Senator was somewhat severe. He then proceeded to speak as follows:

> I can not vote for it because it undertakes to direct, contrary to all our legislative precedents, a coordinate branch of the Government—the Executive—ordering him to proceed at once, when his constitutional and legal duties are defined by the Constitution and not by the lawmaking power.

That, of course, did not touch upon the recognition of the independence of Cuba, but the other provisions, the first, second, and third, I suppose were intended to be referred to.

The Senator then called the attention of the country to the case of Texas, which he seemed to assume was parallel with that of Cuba, inasmuch as a condition of war existed in the State of Texas at that time. There is no parallel at all between the cases. A state of war did exist at the time when that declaration was made. There had been three battles fought on American soil between Mexican troops and our own; but whether there was or was not, the Senate of the United States by a large majority had exercised a constitutional power to declare that they recognized—whether it was effective or not, they had a right to do that—the independence of the Republic of Cuba. The President asked us practically to make war, and it was a practical declaration of war, as everybody knows, and if we added to it this provision we had a right to do so.

Mr. President, in my judgment these speeches were made partly out of the excitement which arose from the fact that certain Senators had been voted down, partly out of a feeling perhaps of resentment, and partly out of a notion that some good might come to the Republican organization by getting up a political discussion. I dislike to see a political discussion going on at such a time, and yet we can not well retire from it.

Yesterday the Senator from Maine assumed that everybody who had voted against the conference report had voted against the resolutions. I need not go over that ground. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who had the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], answered that point so clearly that it does not need any further elucidation. I only want to say that had the vote that we gave prevailed, there would have been further consideration of the subject and there would have been in that resolution to-day the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba. The House of Representatives, in my judgment, would have yielded. They did not yield because they had the assurance from this Chamber that this "temporary majority" was likely to be frittered away and that we would back down from the amendment which we had put on with so much force and with such a majority.

Mr. President, I do not need to make any defense to the people whom I represent as to my attitude on the Cuban question. All I need say to the people of Colorado is that when the vote was taken, my name was found in one column and the name of the Senator from Maine was found in the other. They know where the Senator from Maine has been on the Cuban question from the beginning. All I need to say, if anybody criticise me, is that I voted against the conference report and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted for it. It will take something stronger than the mere statement here which the Senator makes, that now we are all in favor of the freedom of Cuba, to make the people of this country believe that he is now the special champion and defender of Cuban interests. There has been no vote given by the Senator from Maine in the interest of Cuba. Every vote that he has given for three years has been against it.

In 1896 the Senator was found among the negative votes. On the 20th of May last, when we declared for belligerency, the Senator was found amongst the negative votes. There has been no vote given where the Senator has not been found against that which looked to the aid and assistance of Cuba. When we took the vote in this Chamber on the passage of the resolutions as they finally passed the Senate, the Senator from Maine recorded himself against them; and he wants the public now to understand that the only reason why he voted for them was because they contained a recognition of Cuban independence, a boon that the Cuban patriots had begged of us for three long years.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Colorado will permit an interruption, I should like to ask him whether on the 23d of May last, if that be the correct date, the Senator from Maine, to whom he has just referred, did not vote for a resolution which looked directly to securing the independence of Cuba?

Mr. TELLER. What was the resolution?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. A resolution directing the President of the United States to tender his good offices to the Spanish cabinet with a view of restoring peace in the island and securing the ultimate independence of Cuba.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that did not necessarily mean the independence of Cuba any more than the suggestion made by the President that it might require force upon the insurgents as well as upon Spain meant the independence of Cuba. It meant that there might be such an arrangement as would secure a government in Cuba which would recognize the sovereignty of Spain or the recognition of Cuban independence, if that could be secured.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] gave his vote against the recognition of belligerency, against the acknowledgment of a fact that was as patent then as it is to-day, with the declaration of the President in his message that a state of war has existed in Cuba for three years. If it existed three years ago, he knew it. He knew it when he came into office. He knew it every hour from that time down to the present. The Senator from Indiana knew when he voted "nay." It was not denied that there was war; but they said, "It is not policy for us to recognize it." So said the men who now talk about their sympathy for Cuba—a sympathy that comes in at the eleventh hour, a sympathy that comes in when their sympathy is scarcely needed—when the act of Spain has driven this country into a condition where its honor and, I may say, almost its integrity require that we should treat this matter as we have treated it.

Mr. President, I predict that if the loss of the Maine had not occurred, the Senator from Indiana would still be giving a vote that there is no war in Cuba and has been none. I do not find that any Senator who counted himself with the twenty-one Senators who voted against the resolution has been working in the cause of Cuban freedom and Cuban independence—not one.

I do not care to say these things. I only say them because of what I regard as an unfair attack upon us who were not willing to surrender the right to declare our judgment that the patriots of Cuba had a republic of their own. I would not give a continental for the sympathy expressed here by those who could not go to that extent, at least. In my judgment that was an essential feature of this case. Had we declared six months ago that there was a government in Cuba which was entitled to be recognized by us, you would have had no threatenings of war; you would have had no haste to get battle ships and to get your troops in array. That alone would have given to these people the independence to which they are entitled and which they have practically won without our assistance.

Mr. President, what can be and what was the objection to saying that the republic existed? As I said before, it is the same government of which we spoke in 1896. It is the same government which has maintained itself in Cuba against 200,000 Spanish soldiers. It is the same government which has maintained itself against the moral support that this Government has given to the Spaniards for three long years. It is the same government which maintained itself, and still maintains itself, against the moral support which has been given to Spain within the last four months by the present Administration, when it entered into negotiations with Spain for a reciprocity treaty concerning and touching only the products of the Island of Cuba. Was not that saying to the world, "We know that Cuba is not to be free; we know that Cuba is still to remain under Spanish control and under the Spanish flag?"

I have heard it charged by the friends of Cuba—I do not charge it, but I have heard it charged—that that negotiation was entered into and opened for the express purpose of giving that moral support to Spain. I have been led to say these things because those who have been the enemies of Cuba and the friends of Spain, or who if they have not been either have been indifferent to the cause in Cuba, have now assumed that they are the patriots and that we have forsaken the cause of Cuba.

No complications could have come from the recognition of the Republic of Cuba. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says our troops would be under the control of the Republic of Cuba. Our troops would probably have been under that control if we had agreed that they should be. It would have depended exactly upon the terms on which we went there. We could have gone there and ignored, I suppose, the patriots of Cuba; but does anybody believe that it would have been wise, proper, or just that we should? Those people have made a fight, a gallant fight, a fight for liberty, a fight for freedom, under the most adverse circumstances that a people ever did. It has been even a more gallant contest than that of our fathers. It has been made under circumstances more difficult, and yet they have maintained it; and Spanish soldiers, and Spanish assassination, and Spanish bribery, and Spanish lawyers alike have been incapable of subduing them. They are entitled, if we go down there, to take part with us in this contest. All we need to do is to give them some of the appliances of war and let them take care of the balance of the Cuban soldiers.

I believe to-day a ringing declaration of sympathy with them and recognition of their independence are all they need. It is not necessary that we should intervene. The President thought it was. I was myself willing to give him the power, because I did not care under those circumstances to do what might appear to be against the interests of Cuba, although I believed all the time that much less would have answered the purpose. The Committee on Foreign Relations tell us that if two years ago the President of the United States had acceded to our request, if you choose to call it such, and had recognized the belligerency of those people, that alone would have secured their independence; and I believe that the committee have stated the case properly. I believe that was all it was necessary for us to do then. It was all that it was necessary for us to have done six months ago. I do not know now that belligerency alone would be sufficient, but I believe yet if we declare their independence and indicate our sympathy and our support, our moral support alone, they can maintain their independence against Spain, as they have done during the last three years.

A very intelligent newspaper man came to see me the other night and I said to him, "How long can these people maintain themselves against Spain?" He said, "They can maintain themselves for all time. Spain can not dislodge them, and Spain can not defeat them." It was said here that Gomez had stated that he could maintain the struggle for twelve years. I asked this young man, "Can he maintain it for twelve years?" He said, "The Cuban people can maintain it for two hundred years, if necessary, because they do not intend under any circumstances to surrender to Spain." Here are a people who decline all efforts to compromise, all efforts at concession from Spain, and say, "Cuban independence or nothing." They have a right to do that. Independence or nothing was what we put upon our flag when we went to war with the mother country. I do not know that we had to punish by death people who proposed to surrender, as the Cubans have had to do, they say, but at all events if any man had proposed to surrender after that contest began, he would have met with derision and probably with something worse. We went into it for independence. So has Cuba gone into it for independence.

Mr. President, why is it there is such an anxiety that we should not recognize the government in Cuba? Why is it that it seems to be so popular in certain sections that there should be a stable government organized under the control of the United States? We declared in the fourth resolution that we were not going to exercise sovereignty over the island. I think myself that is a valuable feature of the resolution. Why should we be anxious to establish a government? I do not know. We hear all sorts of rumors. We hear of a syndicate in another place, not here in Washington but outside, which has been formed for a truly laudable purpose, the development of the island.

That may be eminently proper, but I know what it means or I know what it may mean. As has been said here, it may mean the recognition of certain bonds. It may be the recognition or it may not be of that indebtedness, but it will afford opportunity such as rarely comes to men for peculations, for the organization of combines and syndicates and trusts to deal with questions there. I do not say that that is the fact, but I do say it is a great deal safer for us, better for our credit, to let the people of that country have the government they have maintained there for three years, and I do not believe the American people will tolerate anything like a destruction of that republic.

It may not be so good a republic as ours; it may not be so good as we had at the close of the Revolutionary war; but it is a government which answers all purposes, to the extent that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] the other day rose and stated that the people under the flag of Cuba are as free as those in any part of the United States. There is a government there, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] tells us, composed of men of high character and standing, men who are the equal, as he said, of our own Executive and our own Vice-President. It is high praise that a people in Cuba, with the conditions there existing, can select from their ranks men of such exalted character to preside over their government. Such a government ought to be entitled to recognition, and nobody ought to lose his temper because a majority of the Senate believe that such a government exists.

Mr. HOAR. Amen!

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says nobody has.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say "nobody has." I beg pardon. I said, "Amen."

Mr. TELLER. A Senator next to me did.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that anybody was excited or angry, and yet if the indications were anything to judge from, there was more feeling over putting that provision in the resolution than anything I have seen in the Senate in many a day. Of course I do not mean to say that Senators did not believe it was a very vicious thing to do. I do not know but that it was perfectly proper that the majority, the 60 who voted for it, should be lectured by the 20 who voted against it. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] got up here and in a melodramatic tone said, "Oh, I had hoped we would be together." There were 60 of us together on that proposition which we believed to be essential to carry out the very purpose and object on which the President had asked us to legislate; but the Senator from Rhode Island did not agree with us, and some other Senators, I believe, were also in the same position. They were begging for support.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] told us yesterday that we ought to stand by the President. The President of the United States will have the united support of the American people in any contest that goes on between this people and Spain, and neither the Senator from Maine nor any other Senator will be able to get up a diversion and get into the condition, as was said somewhere else and not here, to claim that if this war is to be carried on, it will be under the Republican flag and by a Republican Administration and it will be a Republican war. If it is carried on at all it will be carried on under the American flag, and a due proportion of the men who do not agree with the Republican party and its measures and policies will be found fighting under that flag. The Republican party have no monopoly of the patriotism of this country, and they will have no monopoly of fighting our battles, either; and they ought not to want it. I regard it as an affront to decency to have the suggestion made that this is to be a partisan war.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question? Where was any such proclamation made? I have not noticed it myself.

Mr. TELLER. I have a slip in my pocket cut from a newspaper, saying that it was made in a place about which I am not at liberty to speak.

Mr. CHANDLER. I feel at perfect liberty to speak about an utterance attributed to General GROSVENOR, which he explaind he did not make in any such sense as the Senator attributes to it. He called attention to the fact that the Administration was Republican, and that if there was a war it would have to be fought under the present Administration, but that it would be sustained by Republicans, Populists, and Democrats alike. I did not feel like letting the Senator's statement——

Mr. TELLER. I have not made any charge against General GROSVENOR. I do not know that I care to hear——

Mr. CHANDLER. As I was about to say, I did not like to let the Senator's statement pass unchallenged. I have never seen a statement that could be fairly called an assertion that this is to be a Republican war.

Mr. TELLER. Whatever the statement was, it seems, according to the Senator from New Hampshire, to have been such a one as requires explanation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Many of the Senator's own innocent and patriotic statements require explanation to be entirely plain.

Mr. TELLER. I have not made any statement of that kind, and never would.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to call his attention to the fact that substantially the same thing was stated by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] April 16, just before the taking of the vote substituting the House joint resolution for the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can read it.

Mr. BUTLER. It is to be found on page 3990 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said:

> If war must needs come, its conduct will not be in the hands of the Democratic party; if war must needs come, the country will not turn to the Democratic party for the conduct of that war; if war must needs come, it will not be by the Democratic party that the flag of the United States will be borne. The war will be conducted--and, I hope and pray, to a speedy termination—by that great soldier and statesman, the President of the United States, and the people will rally to him.

And so on. While that is not exactly the language which the newspapers quoted, and to which the Senator from Colorado has referred as coming from a member of the other House, it was said under circumstances which made it in effect the same statement, while referring to an alleged attempt of Mr. Bryan and his followers to inject politics into the situation.

While I am on my feet I will say that the statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that Mr. Bryan's trip here influenced the voters and was intended to do so, is, as far as I am concerned and as far as the Populists are concerned, entirely unfounded. The position of the Populist party had been taken and was known before Mr. Bryan came here. Not a single Populist attended that banquet, and not a single one, so far as I know, has had any conference with him about it. The statement was gratuitous, to say the least, absolutely unfounded, and, in my judgment, entirely out of order and improper to have been made here.

Mr. TELLER. Whatever may have been said here or elsewhere, I think it is unfortunate that there is an attempt made to give this question a partisan outlook. I regretted very much the suggestion made the other night that Mr. Bryan had anything to do with this question. I understood from the public press that Mr. Bryan had come to the city to attend a banquet given in memory of Jefferson by Democrats. I did not see him. I did not communicate with him. I did not hear from him, and I had not even heard of what was done at the meeting. But before the meeting was held, before Mr. Bryan came into the town, we had all found our position on this question.

Nobody that I know of changed front on that question except later, and they were not Bryan men, either. I do not believe that Mr. Bryan had any influence upon the votes or attempted to have or desired to have. Mr. Bryan's name was dragged in because he was the candidate of the Democracy in 1896 to give it partisan movement, and I think I shall not be out of order if I say, in my judgment, for the purpose of creating a division here and, if possible, driving the Democrats away from the support of the President in the effort to maintain our honor and our dignity and to assist Cuba. While I do not speak for the Democrats, I will say that I do not believe they will be able to do that.

I regret very much that we should have attempted on this floor to put into the resolutions a recognition of Cuba. I was for it. I had voted for it two years ago when an opportunity came. I had publicly expressed my desire to vote for it again, although I had expressed a willingness to take simple belligerency if we could get that at the time, because I feared we could not get more. But we have emphasized the fact to the world that Congress has declared that there is no Cuban Republic; and this morning in the paper a diplomatic official of Spain says "the people of the United States are now about to intervene in behalf of a people that they themselves admit can not conduct a government." It would have been better, perhaps, in the interest of Cuba, in the interest of our own position before the world, if we had not made that effort, and yet I feel, so far as I am concerned, that it was properly made.

We had a right to suppose that the men who voted with us for the recognition of the independence of Cuba, Senators who represent sovereign States, knew what they wanted and knew what was the fact. We voted on Saturday, and on Monday we voted again practically for it. We declared that we would not recede from it, and we let the House ask the conference from us, as we had a right to do, and it was a proper parliamentary proceeding that they should. Yet within an hour after that we were informed on this side—and I speak now of myself as sitting on the other side—that, whatever the conference committee should do, before it was appointed, we could not any longer look to the 10 votes of those who sit on this side of the Chamber.

Then I felt that a decent procedure would require us to let those ten men who had voted with us, if they wanted to, take back the votes they had given before; and I suggested, if that was the condition, it was not worth while to have a conference report. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said we will get valuable concessions. Of course I said nothing more. We did get a very valuable concession. We got the words "are, and" put back. There is not anybody here who does not know that it did not materially and valuably change the sentiment in the first resolution. Everybody knows that. Was it a play or did somebody think so then, or was it a method of letting out our ten colleagues, our ten allies, who stood by us for a day or so?

Mr. President, I think it would have been better to have retired squarely than by such a flank movement as that. I would not speak of this if I did not feel that that movement had hurt the cause of Cuba throughout the world. In that way there was secured a declaration practically that there is no Cuban Republic, when it is a fact we all know that it does exist. The world will say we knew it existed and we are afraid to deal with it, or that we have some ulterior purpose; that, after all, it is not that you are going there in the interest of the human race; you are not going there to increase the area of human freedom, but you are going there for the purpose of conquest. That is what they are saying now in Europe, and it gives them good cause to say so. The fourth provision of the resolution, in my judgment, will not have the same effect it would have had if it had been backed up by a declaration of the independence of the people of the island under the control of the government of the Republic of Cuba.

Our committee came here and said the people of Cuba are free and independent. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] showed how absurd that was. A free and independent people without government is a simple absurdity. Such a thing never existed on the face of the earth, and can not exist. If they are free and independent, they have a government there. You might say they ought to be free; you might say they are entitled to freedom; but if you say they have not got a government there, then you can not say truthfully that they are a free people, for I repeat, freedom can only exist when limited and supported by law.

Mr. President, the absurdity of making the American Senate, in the interest of small politics, to, I believe, declare a state of things that could not exist, a free and independent people without any restriction or protection of law——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. If the statements made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] about the status of the Cuban Republic are correct—and I do not question them—and if the statements made in his work on the American Revolution by John Fiske about the condition of our Government during our Revolution are correct, then the present Cuban Republic is a better and more stable government, is better organized, than the Government we had in the Revolutionary war during the campaign which ended at Valley Forge. I have been looking carefully over Mr. Fiske's book, and I have marked a number of pages that describe the condition of our Government, and the Government of the Republic of Cuba is vastly superior to the one we had at that time.

Mr. TELLER. I have made the statement that, in my judgment, the Cubans have a better government than we had. Of course we had a different government. We had the States to take care of local affairs, but that government is just as strong as the Continental Government was, or the confederacy of States, if you choose to so call them. They have performed every function of a general government.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to engage in this debate, but in view of the fact that I insisted as earnestly as I could upon the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, I wish to call attention in this connection to what was said in the Senate on the 28th of February, 1896, by the present Secretary of State, Mr. Sherman, who was then a Senator from Ohio. He said:

> The objection has been made, not in debate here, but in the public press, that the Cubans have no organized government; that they have no local habitation and name; that they have no legislative powers; that there is nobody elected to make laws. That is absolutely untrue. Here in this little pamphlet—

Which I see, by referring to a previous part of his speech, was something that had been published in relation to the conditions in Cuba—> are the proceedings of the government of Cuba and of the people of Cuba in organizing the government. Here is a statement of the growth of the revolution, of the battles and campaigns, and contemporaneous with these movements the preliminary organization of local self-government as constituted.

>
> Sir, much to my surprise, because I took up the general idea that those people, in the first instance, were merely a band of discontents, having no organization, with whom we could not deal, it is shown by this official document, communicated to the Secretary of State, that they have gone through all the formulæ of self-government as fully and completely as the people of the United States did at the beginning of the Revolution.
>
> This little document shows the organization of the legislature, the military organization, the election of a president, M. Cisneros, a man of high character, of conceded ability, a man of property and standing, who also, I believe, took a prominent active part in the revolution of 1868 to 1878, besides being eminent in civil life.
>
> Here are rules for the regulation of the army. Here are stipulations made as to the treatment of prisoners, how they shall be dealt with, and it is a remarkable fact that in all the battles fought by these wandering "robbers and bandits," as they have been called, whenever they captured a soldier of the Spanish army they released him and allowed him to return to his command. This humane and generous treatment is far different from the universal custom of the Spanish troops when one of the rebels is taken. He is sent to a prison in Africa by the Spanish troops or is treated harshly and in some cases murdered. These are poor men; the army is composed of native Cubans and men some of whom have been freed from slavery, black people, but they have shown no signs of being guilty of the barbarous atrocity of which I shall have to speak hereafter, I am afraid injudiciously.

That is as far as I care to read. The part to which I wanted to call attention, particularly, was the statement made by Mr. Sherman two years ago in the Senate that he had been surprised, as I was surprised, when he came to investigate, to find that they had a government thoroughly organized and in successful operation. If that was true two years ago, and unquestionably it was, and if it be true, as it unquestionably is, that from that day until this that government, with its army, has withstood the combined assaults of Spain upon it, it is a government which we have a right to recognize according to all the principles of international law, for it is not only standing as it then stood in defiance of the power of Spain, but now it can be said, as it was not said and could not be said then, that Spain has ceased to be attended in her efforts to conquer those people with any reasonable hope or expectation of success. That is said; it is said by the President of the United States in the message which he sent us.

It was because two years ago the truth was, as Mr. Sherman stated it in the speech from which I have read, and because from that day until this that truth has been made more and more strong, that I felt in dealing with this question at this time we had a right to recognize that government, and that it was our duty to recognize that government. I think it was unfortunate that we did not recognize it, but it may not be as unfortunate as I imagined, for I think quickly, speedily, possibly even now, on the very day when the ultimatum has been sent to Spain pursuant to the resolutions that passed here, this Government has practically recognized the Republic of Cuba, and I think possibly it is true—we will all know it by to-morrow morning—that that government is to-day being officially dealt with by the official representatives of this Government, as it should be.

Mr. HOAR (in his seat). That has probably happened.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Massachusetts made a remark which I did not hear.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not intend to interrupt him. I exclaimed what was simply in my mind, without being conscious myself that I spoke. What I said was what the Senator is now saying and what I said some time ago would probably happen.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I have no doubt the Senator predicted this, for he has been talking along this line, as I recollect, at various times. The only difference between the Senator and myself was as to when the recognition should come.

Mr. HOAR. And as to the question of constitutional power.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no trouble about constitutional power. I want to say to the Senator with respect to that question that every time he refers to it he talks about it as though it was a settled and established fact beyond all controversy that recognition is exclusively an Executive function.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. He said the only difference between him and me was what he stated, to which I added,

"and the question of constitutional power," on which we also differed. I did not mean to make any affirmation about it except to state the fact of our difference.

Mr. FORAKER. There is that additional difference. I think I have perhaps said heretofore in the Senate, and I want to say again, that I do not at all agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the recognition of either independence or belligerency is an exclusively Executive function. I want to say further that every time that question has been raised here in Congress, and it has been raised repeatedly, Congress has always contended that it had a right to participate at least with the Executive in all questions determining our foreign policy, including questions of recognition of belligerency and recognition of independence.

But if the Senator from Colorado will pardon me just one minute further, I wish to say a word in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the other evening that the proposition to recognize the independence of the Cuban Government had been as he thought injected into this debate merely for purposes of discord. I do not think the Senator could have been very deliberate in his consideration of this subject when he made that statement. I perhaps have a special right to answer that question in view of the fact that I introduced that proposition in the resolutions which I offered in the Senate, and which have now in substance, except as to one proposition, been adopted.

The resolutions that I introduced contained four propositions. One was that the people of the Island of Cuba are free and independent. That has been adopted. Another was that this Government should recognize the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island. The third was that by reason of the character of that war, in its results upon our commerce and because of the humanitarian question involved, it was the duty of this Government to demand that Spain should at once abandon the island. The fourth proposition was that the President should be authorized and directed to carry these resolutions into effect. Three of these propositions have been accepted. The one in regard to the recognition of the republic was stricken out in the way all are familiar with. I had no thought of discord when I introduced that proposition. I was familiar with this record. I supposed it was a conceded fact that they had at least a de facto government in the Island of Cuba known as the Republic of Cuba.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will allow the Chair to have the unfinished business stated.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have only a word or two more to say. I supposed it was a conceded fact, conceded by everybody, that there was such a government as the Republic of Cuba. I supposed all were familiar with this record, and I supposed surely it was a conceded fact on the part of the Administration, the present Administration, when the present Secretary of State acting here as a Senator had employed the language which I have quoted.

Furthermore, as an answer to the suggestion that this proposition was introduced for purposes of discord, I will state that before the proposition was introduced here I talked with the President in regard to it. I showed him the resolution, and while he had some concern as to the form of it, I did not understand that he had any objection to it on principle. With me it was only a question as to the particular time when that resolution or something else like it should be introduced. Events came quickly, one thing following after another, and it seemed to me after the Maine report was in that the way was clear for some action to be taken, and that that was an appropriate time to introduce the resolution, and I introduced it.

That resolution was introduced at a time when it was being given out through the press, and I suppose it was at least a semi-official announcement, that the President had notified Spain as a condition precedent to everything else which might be agreed upon that there should be on the part of Spain a recognition of the absolute independence of the people of the Island of Cuba. That was given out, I supposed, with authority. We were made to understand in our committee that that condition precedent had been made, and I had no idea that in introducing my resolutions I was not in harmony with at least the general purposes of the Administration with respect to this question. And so it was I had no thought or purpose to create any discord, but was only intending and purposing to discharge, according to my conviction, what I conceived to be a very grave, important, and responsible duty.

That resolution was introduced, injecting that proposition into this controversy, I do not recall now how many days, but a week or ten days before the President's message came in. I supposed that when we received the President's message we would be advised that a recognition on the part of Spain of the independence of Cuba had been insisted upon. I was forced to conclude when the message was read that that demand had not been made; otherwise surely the President would have made some mention of it.

A day or two later, however, I saw in a newspaper what I understood to be a semiofficial statement that such a telegram had been prepared, and that after it had left the hands of the President, upon being revised by the Attorney-General, he had taken the liberty to strike out the word "independent" and insert in lieu of it the word "stable." But even that statement showed that the recognition of an independent government there was in harmony with the ideas of the President. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] has just now kindly handed me the newspaper article to which I have referred, and I will read it in order that it may appear in the RECORD in connection with the remarks I have just been making. It is taken from the Washington Post. It is entitled "Why independence was omitted."

It became known yesterday why independence was omitted from the message. When President McKinley first made his propositions to the Spanish Government, he announced that the war must cease in Cuba and an independent government be established. This dispatch was changed by Attorney-General Griggs to read "stable government," which, it was claimed, was the diplomatic phrase for the independence desired. When Minister Woodford submitted that dispatch to the Spanish prime minister, he was asked if "stable government" meant independent government, and at once replied in the negative, assuring Señor Sagasta that the United States looked only to a system of self-government like the Canadians enjoy.

Afterwards, believing that he might have made a mistake, Mr. Woodford cabled the President as to the intention of this Government, and was promptly informed that the word "stable" must be interpreted "independent." As all suggestions for independence had caused much indignation and resistance on the part of the Spanish Government, Minister Woodford feared to make his demand, and, as a matter of fact, the ultimatum for independence was never officially laid before Spain, Mr. Woodford believing that it would be a constant irritation and menace in what might follow. He repeatedly suggested it to Señor Sagasta in private as being the view of the President, but as it had never been submitted in writing, the President had to omit it from the message. This is the explanation semiofficially made of the President's message.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. He having read the newspaper statement as to this diplomatic correspondence, I ask him whether the Committee on Foreign Relations, before it made its report to the Senate recommending the resolutions which have passed, knew what the diplomatic correspondence actually was, or were the members of the committee obliged to take it from a newspaper; and did they take it from the newspaper slip which the Senator from Nebraska has just handed to the Senator from Ohio to refresh his recollection as to what the diplomatic correspondence was?

Mr. FORAKER. Answering the Senator from New Hampshire, I will state that the Committee on Foreign Relations has never been advised as to what the diplomatic correspondence is, except only a statement has been generally made of the character I have already stated, that the demand of this Government was a recognition on the part of Spain of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. ALLISON (in his seat). That demand was made.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FORAKER. I want the statement just made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] first to go upon the record. I understand the Senator from Iowa to say now that the demand was made, but, if he will pardon me, I would rather he would make it in his own way.

Mr. ALLISON. Although I have no authority to say so, as I have not conversed with anybody who has heard it stated, I understand there is no question of the fact that that demand was made of Spain; that it was sent to the Spanish Government and a copy of it was sent to the Spanish minister in this city.

Mr. HALE. That is, that the intervention of the President should be to the end that an independent government should be established; not that the so-claimed government of the insurgents should be recognized, but that the intervention of this Government should be to the end that an independent government should be established. I suppose the Senator does not think that the demand was put in the form of Spain being required to recognize the insurgent government.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa to be a little more clear in stating just exactly what that demand was, because his language is indefinite.

Mr. ALLISON. One can not be very clear when he is giving hearsay evidence. Therefore I only intimated to the Senator from Ohio that I had learned from sources which I considered reliable that in the course of this correspondence the President did say to the Spanish Government that there must be an independent government in Cuba; and that demand was submitted not only to the Spanish Government in Madrid, but a copy of it was sent to the minister here. Perhaps I ought not to say this in public debate, but so understanding the fact, I did say so to the Senator from Ohio in my seat. As I do not speak in this matter except, as I state, from hearsay, I can be no more definite in my statement than I have been.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Maine, or anyone else here who is expected to be the mouthpiece of the Administration on this subject, to answer this question: Is it the rule of the President to allow the Attorney-General to change a word in his dispatch to a foreign government without his consent, and is it the rule of the ministers sent abroad by the United States to refuse to deliver the dispatches that are sent to them?

Mr. HALE. I do not consider this to be a very important controversy just now; I do not think the Senator from Ohio does.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not, so far as the matter itself is concerned.

Mr. HALE. It is not claimed by anybody, whatever the dispatch was, that it originally was intended to be a recognition of the so-called government of the insurgents, but it was a proposition that this country would intervene to the end that there should be in Cuba a free and independent government.

Mr. TILLMAN. From whom does the Senator from Maine get that? Out of the air?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Ohio has followed this matter very closely. I do not suppose the Committee on Foreign Relations claims that that original dispatch, before it was at all altered, if altered by the Attorney-General, covered the proposition that Spain was to recognize that particular government, but that we should establish there a free and independent government.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I never heard of the proposition that we were to establish any kind of a government in Cuba until we got the message of the President. What I heard, what we all heard, in so far as I have any information, was this: That the President was diplomatically negotiating through our minister, Woodford, with the Government of Spain, and that in the course of those negotiations he had instructed the minister to make certain demands, and that he had made a condition precedent to everything else the absolute recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba. That is the way it came to me. I have not seen the correspondence; I do not know what it would disclose. We would be glad to see it if we could.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment until I add another sentence, I will state why I have dwelt upon it. I want to make it appear, by showing these facts, that at the time when this proposition was incorporated in these resolutions, and when they were subsequently insisted upon, there was no thought thereby of creating any discord. On the contrary, we thought we were doing exactly what it would be the purpose of this Government to do, for I will confess frankly that it never occurred to me that if we were to recognize the independence of the people of Cuba, we would deny recognition to that political organization under the direction and control of which that independence had been achieved. I supposed the republic would be recognized, as a matter of course, if we declared that the people of the island were free and independent, and it was not an idle purpose we had in putting that into the resolutions.

The reason may not have been valid for it, but my idea was a very simple one. I thought if we recognized the independence of the people of Cuba, as we do in the first paragraph, and I thought we were entitled to do it, according to the principles of international law applicable, we thereby at once changed the legal status of the people of Cuba from that of subjects of Spain to inhabitants of that island. That was highly important if we were to have war, for when we make war on Spain we make war on all her subjects everywhere. I am sure I did not want to make war on the Cubans, even technically. Then I had this further purpose. When I drafted the resolution and put the second proposition in, that we would recognize the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of the island, it occurred to me, as I undertook to set forth in the remarks I made the other day, that if we went down there and intermeddled, to use an international law term, in the affairs of another people, and drove the Spanish Government out and set up a government of our own, and failed to recognize the government that was there, we at least ran a serious risk of being liable for the debts for which the revenues of that island have been pledged.

I have never seen the form of that pledge; I have never seen the legislation whereby those revenues were pledged; I have been unable to get it, although I have tried to get it. Therefore I do not know what the exact facts are, but I have seen it stated over and over again, without any contradiction, that by the Kingdom of Spain the revenues from the Island of Cuba have been pledged to the payment of a certain indebtedness, at least the interest. It seemed to me that we ran a risk of becoming liable for that indebtedness, and it not occurring to me that there was any objection upon principle to the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, but it occurring to me that by that recognition we could shut the door against that possible liability, I thought it was wise to insert that proposition. That is all there was of it, and all this talk which has since arisen about a combination between Democrats and certain Republicans at the instigation of Mr. Bryan is entirely without any foundation, so far as I am aware.

I have never had the good fortune to so much as even see Mr. Bryan. I never saw him to know him, at least. I have no acquaintance with him. I never had any communication with him directly or indirectly on this subject or any other.

I have acted in this matter, Mr. President, from the beginning without a thought that partisan politics would at any stage become a feature of the controversy. I have felt that it was not a political question. It is a question, it is true, with respect to which political parties have made declarations; but the true interpretation of the declarations which have been made in the party platforms would make them all mean practically one and the same thing.

Therefore, in dealing with the subject, I have had no thought with respect to any of my colleagues to stop and consider and inquire whether they were Populists, Democrats, or Republicans. I have felt this was a great national question, a great international question, a question in dealing with which we should remember, not that we are Democrats or Populists, or Free Silver Republicans, or stalwart and unqualified Republicans, but only that we are Americans—Americans all.

I have sought to deal with the matter in that spirit. I intend to go on dealing with it in that spirit. I have no feeling of hostility toward anybody who has a duty to discharge with respect to it. The duties of the President have been of the most serious and grave character. I think he has in the discharge of them undertaken, according to his best judgment, to do his whole duty. He may have made mistakes. I do not know who has the right to say whether he has made mistakes or not; but it may be that with respect to this matter he has perhaps not done exactly as others might have done if they had been in his place, but only time can tell whether the President has made a mistake or whether, if others had been in his place and had acted differently, they would have made a mistake.

Let us, instead of cavilling about these matters and trying to draw party lines, remember that this is a question with respect to which we should try to be united; and it was because it was a question of that character that I was willing, after I had done my full duty in an effort to get a recognition of the Republic of Cuba, to abandon that proposition in the interest of harmony, and to secure an agreement and pass the resolutions.

That is all I care to say, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to take the floor; but I just want to ask a question, if the Senator from Colorado will allow me.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; go ahead.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in the opening, or shortly after the opening of his remarks, to state that he had reason to believe that either already, or in the very near future, the Cuban Government, this republic which exists in the minds of some of us, but does not exist in the minds of others, had been recognized or would be recognized.

Mr. FORAKER. I said practically in this sense, to be more particular—I think I did make that statement—that some representatives of this Government, if not already dealing with the representatives of that government duly accredited to this Government by that government, will in the immediate future be dealing with them just as it occurs to me we should want to deal with them if we recognize the Cuban Government. That was another purpose I had in view.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has no positive information on that subject?

Mr. FORAKER. I have positive information, but it is not official.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me, after reading the speech of the gentleman who was the Senator from Ohio at that time and who is at present Secretary of State, that the present Secretary of State must stultify himself beyond redemption if he refuses to recognize the republic which two years ago he contended existed in Cuba.

Mr. TELLER. I had intended to call the attention of the Senate to the speech of the Secretary of State, but as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has referred to it, I will not do so now.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Colorado pardon me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, that statement made by the present Secretary of State has been read and placed in the RECORD. In order to make the record complete, and show what the position of our Government has heretofore been, I will ask permission to insert in my remarks several extracts from the History of the Revolution, by John Fiske, which will show that the position of our Government during the Revolution was similar to that of the Cuban Republic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order to print in the RECORD the matter referred to by the Senator from North Carolina will be made.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

Until toward the close of the Revolutionary war, indeed, the United States had no regularly organized Government. At the time of the declaration of independence a committee had been appointed by Congress to prepare articles of confederation, to be submitted to the States for their approval. These articles were ready by the summer of 1778, but it was not until the spring of 1781 that all the States had signed them. While the thirteen distinct sovereignties in the United States were visible in clear outline, the central government was something very shadowy and ill defined. Under these circumstances, the military efficiency of the people was reduced to a minimum.

* * * * * * *

There was really more danger in such intrigues than in an exhausted treasury, a half-starved army, and defeat on the field. The people felt it to be so, and the events of the winter left a stain upon the reputation of the Continental Congress from which it never fully recovered. Congress had already lost the high personal consideration to which it was entitled at the outset. Such men as Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Henry, Jay, and Rutledge were now serving in other capacities. The legislatures of the several States afforded a more promising career for able men than the Continental Congress, which had neither courts nor magistrates, nor any recognized position of sovereignty. The meetings of Congress were often attended by no more than ten or twelve members. Curious symptoms were visible which seemed to show that the sentiment of union between the States was weaker than it had been two years before.

Instead of the phrase "people of the United States," one begins in 1778 to hear of the "inhabitants of these Confederated States." In the absence of any central sovereignty which could serve as the symbol of union, it began to be feared that the new nation might, after all, be conquered through its lack of political cohesion. Such fears came to cloud the rejoicings over the victory of Saratoga, as at the end of 1777 the Continental Congress began visibly to lose its place in public esteem and sink step by step into the utter degradation and impotence which was to overwhelm it before another ten years should have expired.

* * * * * * *

As the nullity of Congress made it ever more apparent that the country as a whole was without a government, Washington stood forth more and more conspicuously as the living symbol of the union of the States. In him and his work were centered the common hopes and the common interests of all the American people. There was no need of clothing him with extraordinary powers. During the last years of the war he came, through sheer weight of personal character, to wield an influence like that which Perikles had wielded over the Athenians.

Mr. TELLER. The statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that the Government of the United States is about to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba may be true. If that be so, it will certainly be a justification of our action in inserting in the resolutions the provision for the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, if we needed any justification for that act. We all remember the report which the then Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Cameron, made on the recognition of the independence of Cuba and the proof which he adduced in that debate of the character of the government there.

On the 28th day of February, 1896, I voted to recognize the independence of Cuba. I have never changed my view, and I do not think that I can be charged with having voted for a similar provision the other day simply for the purpose of either embarrassing the Executive or creating divided counsels.

I do not believe that the President of the United States has at any time asked or demanded of Spain the recognition of the independence either of the Government of Cuba as it now exists or of the people thereof, because I find nothing in the President's message which indicates anything of that kind; and it seems to me if he had been making a report to us—for that is what his message really is—he would have made some mention of that. He mentions, however, the fact that he had demanded of Spain at one time that there should be a cessation of hostilities between the Government of Spain and insurgents, which Spain had declined to grant. The President himself makes a case, according to my notion of international law, for the recognition of the Government of Cuba.

We were told here with great emphasis yesterday and the day before, and also on Saturday last, that it would be a violation of international law to recognize the independence of Cuba. That is a question for the government which makes the recognition, and when it is made no one has any business to complain. It is not an offensive act; it is not a cause for war. It is simply a question, Does the government making the recognition believe that there is a government existing there, although it may not be as great a government as that of Great Britain or of France; but is it a government which performs the functions of government for the people within its borders? It may not maintain international relations. Of course it can not maintain international relations until some government has first recognized it. It may not have a flag which it can float on the sea, or it may not have ships, because it can not have those things until some government recognizes the government as independent. Therefore it is certain that before it can have those things some government must take the initiatory steps and recognize the existence of a new government. It does not make any difference what government does it, provided it is done. But there is great influence and great force when a Government like ours recognizes a new state.

The President says that he submitted the question of an armistice to the Government of Spain on the 27th of March, and on the last day of the month he received a reply stating in substance that Spain would not assent, but that the matter might be left to the autonomous government of Cuba, and if there is any paper government or any ephemeral government in Cuba it is the autonomous government, for it has neither form nor shape nor confidence, and it is not even recognized by the Spaniards themselves.

Mr. President, I do not care to extend this discussion, except to say that, in my judgment, if any man will take up the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and read it carefully he can not escape the conclusion that the report was originally written so as to be in harmony with the resolutions as they passed the Senate. The committee says, on page 7 of the report:

Upon due consideration of all of the relevant facts of the relations of this Government with Spain, including the destruction of the Maine, and of the history of the rebellion, it is the opinion of your committee that the United States ought at once to recognize the independence of the people of Cuba.

I ask any Senator acquainted with international law when and how we could recognize the independence of a people without recognizing a government; and I challenge any Senator to find a single precedent in history where that has been done where there has not been such a recognition. You may recognize the fact that a people ought to be free, and that they have earned their freedom, and all that. The committee evidently, when they wrote that report, had not the slightest doubt; but when the "change came over the spirit of their dreams" they changed what was the recognition of the government of Cuba to "the independence of the people of Cuba."

I desire to call the attention of the Senate—and I ask leave to insert it in my remarks—to an extract from the report of the committee on page 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The extract referred to is as follows:

The recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba is justified and demanded by the highest considerations of duty, right, and policy.

The insurgents hold the eastern portion of the island, to the practical exclusion of Spain. This possession extends over one body of territory comprising fully one-half of the area of Cuba.

The extermination by Spain of the peaceful inhabitants of the western portion of the island has so affected the balance of population between these moieties of Cuba that the insurgents comprise in the eastern half nearly one third of the population of the island. That third of the population pays taxes to them, serves in their armies, and in every way supports and is loyal to them. This situation has existed ever since the first few months of the war. The armies of Spain under Campos, Weyler, and Blanco, successively, have been repelled in every invasion that they have attempted on the eastern half of the island.

The cause of Spain has continually grown weaker and that of the insurgents has grown stronger. The former is making no substantial effort for the recovery of these lost provinces. Their people are secure from invasion and cruel administration. Spain has never been able to subject them to her unprecedented and murderous policy of concentration and extermination. Her armies have been more than decimated in the attempt to subdue them. Two hundred thousand of her soldiers have failed to reduce the insurgents. The few reenforcements that she is now sending to Cuba do not supply a tithe of her losses caused by battle and disease.

Her control over the western portion of the island is dominance over a desolation which she herself has created. Even there she controls only the territory occupied by her cantonments and camps. Outside these the insurgents are everywhere in presence.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, what benefit, what advantage, could result to the people of Cuba by declaring that they were free? There would some come to them if we declared for a recognition of their government, but none could come to them from a simple declaration that they were free.

More than that, the committee describe the condition of the country. They say:

The preceding observations have assumed a certain control and sovereignty by Spain over the western portion of Cuba. We have indicated its character. It is limited to scattered and fortified areas, and it is not a civil sovereignty. It is merely a military occupation of fortified places. Even this dominion has been made possible and continues only by the infliction of a policy for which the history of no people (excepting possibly that of Spain herself) furnishes any example.

The world knows what that policy is and all civilization execrates it. Can you say that Spain has control of the island to-day, in view of what the committee have said? It is a mere military occupation, they say. The report continues:

It consists in compelling, under penalty of death, the rural population of the western part of the island to leave their homes, their fields, their stock, and other chattels, and mass themselves between the outskirts of certain designated towns and a military cordon intercepting their return into the country.

Then the committee speak of the desolation that followed that order. On page 11 they say:

The recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba entitles the United States to insist that the war shall be conducted in accordance with those humane laws which have been ordained by the common consent of the civilized world, and which have done so much to mitigate the horrors of warfare. So long as this Government abstains from such recognition Spain is entitled to insist that we agree with her that the insurrection is merely a treasonable riot and not a formal and organized rebellion, and that she is therefore entitled to execute upon the insurgents and upon American citizens, and all persons upon the island, the penalties of a domestic code which is an affront to civilization.

The United States has been in this attitude of concurrence ever since the beginning of the war.

That supports the statement I have made that we have given our moral support to the inhuman Government of Spain.

It has, as a consequence, in a spirit of forbearance—

I would amend that by saying in a spirit of cowardice—

It has, as a consequence, in a spirit of forbearance, submitted to many atrocities perpetrated by Spain upon our own citizens which, under recognition, would have had no warrant in international law and would have afforded just grounds of procedure by this Government under its acknowledged principles. Citizens of the United States have been condemned to death by military tribunals in violation of their treaty rights. The expostulations of this Government have been in effect merely petitions for royal clemency.

I shall not read more from the report.

The President of the United States has declared in the most emphatic manner that Spain has lost the island, and certainly she can not have dominion over it if she has lost it. The Republican convention made a similar declaration two years ago the coming June. The President in his message says:

The long trial has proved that the objects for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained.

Mr. President, when that fact is known to the world, how much longer must we wait before we recognize the government established in Cuba? Whenever it shall appear that the government waging the war is incapable of putting down the rebellion, then there is the right on the part of every other country in the world to recognize the government which is contending against it. It is not even necessary to wait until that time. The President declares:

The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods.

Mr. President, I trust and hope that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has not been misinformed. I trust that we may hear in a few days that the President of the United States has recognized the Republic of Cuba. It will save us infinite complications, in my judgment, and a great danger which is imminent if we shall go into an intervention in Cuban affairs without such declaration.

Now, Mr. President, though I did not intend to be so lengthy in speaking on this question, I want to go back to my starting point. I regret as much as anybody the necessity of intervention in the affairs of Cuba. I am oppressed all the time with the feeling that if we had done the right thing, as I said before, we could have avoided war.

I have never wanted to see war between Spain and the United States. I do not now wish to see it. I should be delighted, and I should give the President great praise, if to-day he could compromise this matter consistently with the dignity of the people of the United States and the liberty of the people of Cuba. I have not been one of those who were impatient of delay. I know if the President could have brought about what we desire without war, we could have afforded to wait, even though it cost some lives in Cuba; because a war, Mr. President, will cost many lives. I know that we shall not get out of this war without great expense, which I count but little compared with the loss of life and the other evil consequences which always flow from war.

I am not in favor of this war, nor shall I be of the next. I am for peace if it can be honorably had. We have now put the matter in the hands of the President, practically as I suppose he wanted it, not perhaps exactly, but in a way. If Spain is disposed now to accede to a reasonable demand, which is that she shall recognize the independence of the Island of Cuba, and which she can only do, I suppose, by the recognition of some government there, either the one which is now established there or one which can be established—if that is done, of course we shall have no further complaint.

The Maine incident is a matter to be left, according to the President, to further diplomatic consideration; but if war comes, no taunt from those who call themselves the friends of Cuba par excellence, or who attach themselves to the Administration to a degree that they will follow every dictum, every request, and every suggestion, will drive me from the support of my flag and my country.

You can not make this a Republican war; you can not make it a party war. Much as you may desire it shall be, I say it will not be a party war. It will be a war of the American people, conducted under the American flag; and I want to say to the Senators who claim that it shall be a Republican war, or that a Republican Administration has got to fight it, that they can not make political capital in an intelligent country like ours by attempting to array those who are not the supporters of the Administration against it, or by insisting by mere mouthing that others are not as patriotic as they are.

Mr. President, I should despise myself if I treated the present Executive of the United States, in case of war, any differently from the way I would have treated the man for whom I gave my vote if he had been elected President of the United States. I despise any man who will make political capital out of the misfortunes of the nation, who will in the hour of conflict stop to consider "How will this affect my interest or the interests of my party?" How will it affect the interests of the country? is the question to be put to every man and to be answered by every man, without reference to his prejudices or his passions.

It is a question to be answered from that patriotic impulse, which makes every man stand by his flag whether or not he believes the flag always covers as just a cause as it ought to cover. Although he may believe that blunders have been made and are being made, yet it is his duty, if he can not cure the blunders, to stand up and defend his country until the conflict is over and the crisis has passed. Then he may stand up and criticise to the fullest extent the conduct of affairs which have passed away. No criticism is justified at such a time that will embarrass, that will hinder, that will obstruct.

When the Senator from Maine said he expected to find the Democratic party hindering and obstructing, I think he spoke without due reflection, because he has no reason to suppose that the Democratic party will be less patriotic and less urgent and insistent upon maintaining the honor and integrity of the Government than will be his party.

Mr. President, I am going to do as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] said the other day he was going to do. I am going to forget that William McKinley was elected President on the Republican ticket. More than that, I am going to forget the methods by which he was elected; I am going to forget the class of men who stood back of him and by him; I am going to forget a hundred things that I have criticised; I am going to put them back of me; and I am going to stand up for every effort of his to maintain the integrity, honor, and dignity of the American people; and I believe every Senator on this floor has the same sentiments that I utter. I wish, instead of the Senator from Maine appealing to us to stand by the President, he would have the goodness to admit that up to this hour the President has not any reason to complain of any man who sits in this Chamber or in the other House who does not belong to his political party.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether any profit is likely to come from the prolongation of this discussion. We were in sharp conflict for ten days up to a late hour on Monday last. The President of the United States had declared in his message—and I am glad that Senators give him the credit of being sincere and honest—that—to quote his language—

Nor from the standpoint of expediency do I think it would be wise or prudent for this Government to recognize at the present time the independence of the so-called Cuban Republic. Such recognition is not necessary in order to enable the United States to intervene and pacify the island. To commit this country now to the recognition of any particular government in Cuba might subject us to embarrassing conditions of international obligation toward the organization so recognized. In case of intervention our conduct would be subject to the approval or disapproval of such government. We would be required to submit to its direction and to assume to it the mere relation of a friendly ally.

I thought the words were wise, that the sentiment was commendable, and believed when the message was first read that it would in due time have its effect upon Congress and upon the country. The two Houses came almost to a deadlock, the House of Representatives taking the proposition of the President, acting upon it, and sustaining the President in his view as given in the passage which I have just read. A majority of the Senate took the other view and voted that repeatedly. When at last it was found that here was pronounced antagonism, the result of which would be, if prolonged and crystallized, that nothing would be done, out of that condition emerged an actual result—a report finally from a committee of conference, made up on the part of the Senate of Senators who had from the beginning been earnest friends of independence in Cuba, a report which was submitted to us in those late hours to an interested, not excited, but earnest body, wearied with the protraction of the struggle, but yet willing to stay in order that something should come out of it, that we should relieve ourselves of the position where nothing could be done.

The committee of conference on the part of the two Houses having agreed in their proposition, which left out the feature that had raised such a controversy and had raised the issue with the House of Representatives—the recognition of the so-called insurgent government—reported. They established a policy. They submitted it to the Senate. It was not what pleased everybody. It did not in all respects in its language and formality of phrase please some of us. It did not please others because it did not go far enough. It did not please in itself undoubtedly all the members of the conference who reported it; but under the gravity of the conditions and because something should be done the committee reported as follows:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Upon that, Mr. President, the Senate voted. I will not read the vote in detail; it is to be found on page 4040 of the RECORD. Forty-two Senators voted in favor and 35 Senators voted against it. When the House took it up and by a great vote adopted it, it made it the line of action which is to be pursued in this matter, and when the President on receiving it from both Houses signed it, he accepted it as the rule of action. The conflict, Mr. President, departed from these Halls. The outlining of what should be done had been given. A majority of both Houses had declared to the President that they gave him this power, and all the solemn responsibility of so carrying out that line of policy which was enunciated by a majority of both Houses of Congress left our shoulders and rested on the President of the United States and his constitutional advisers.

I have not heard from that day to this that any attempt has been made to prolong this discussion by any Senator who voted with the majority and whose policy was adopted, but perhaps fearful as to what the future will bring, yet hopeful, all have been willing that the President should take up this burden and carry it out in the exercise of his good sense and his known and admitted patriotism.

Now, Senators who voted in the minority have the perfect right to renew this discussion, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] did yesterday, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has done to-day; but with the highest respect to both of those Senators, with whom I have served long and with whom I have always had pleasant relations, I repeat that I doubt the profitable nature of this discussion when the responsibility is somewhere else.

I do believe we would present to the American people and to the world a spectacle of calmness and wisdom and self-restraint and unity, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] suggests, if, after the act of last Monday night, which must be settled in the future, we went on as the Senator from Iowa has been trying to do, to pass upon other business of the Government. I can not refrain from saying that there were a hundred things I had gathered in my mind when the Senator gave notice that he intended to speak upon this matter, which I had intended to say in answer to the Senator from Colorado, but with this view in my mind, pressed upon it so strongly, I will not, for the sake perhaps of what would be an inadequate answer, prolong the discussion. I leave it, so far as I am concerned, where it is, and the fate of war, if war must come, must be now largely contributed to and settled by action in another branch of Government.

It has encouraged me in this view, that I will not go into controversy either with the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Colorado, that the Senator has in his latest utterance before he took his seat assured us, with the fidelity that characterizes him when he takes a position, that he means to sustain the Government. I have no doubt whatever of it.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that I am through.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator, what he, perhaps, may have forgotten, that on Saturday night, after the Senator made his speech, which I have criticised somewhat, but not so much as I would have done on Saturday night, in my desire to get a vote I stated that I would not then delay the Senate, but that later I would take occasion to make some remarks in defense of what I thought was our position. Therefore I took the occasion to-day, not for the purpose of continuing the discussion, but because I had waived that right at the time and I thought I was justified, and I think so now. I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, to drop the political feature of this case or to keep it up, if it is insisted upon; but it will not be kept up on my part unless somebody else insists upon it.

Mr. HALE. I had intended to say something in regard to the few remarks I submitted on Saturday night, but I refrained from doing so because this other view stood so strongly in my mind, that we will be in all respects better off if we leave the present conditions, grave as they are, solemn as they are, tragic as they may well be in the future, to the Executive and his advisers and go on and do the business of the Republic.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. COCKRELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] undertook and pretended to read what he called the conference report, knowing that it was not the conference committee's report just as well as he knew his existense; but he told the Senate that it was the conference report. I do not like that kind of procedure. I will read the conference report now.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. You read yourself what you called the conference report. Now, I will read the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from Missouri read the conference report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will.

Mr. HALE. I have read its results.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ah, but you did not say it was the result. You said you read the conference report.

Mr. HOAR. I call the Senator from Missouri to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make the point of order upon the Senator's last statement in regard to a Senator on this floor, to wit, that he asserted something that he knew was not true——

Mr. HALE. I did not understand the Senator from Missouri to say that.

Mr. HOAR. I do not raise that point, because I am sure the kind heart and the gentlemanly nature of that Senator did not intend what his words seemed to me to mean. But, after those words, I must insist on the rule that Senators must address the Chair and not address individuals in this body.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have addressed the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator used the words, "you read so and so" or "you said so and so," turning to the Senator from Maine. I make that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point made by the Senator from Massachusetts is sustained by the Chair, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I stated, and I repeat, that the Senator from Maine said that he read the conference report, and thereupon he read the resolutions which were passed. Now, I say again that was not the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Let me say——

Mr. COCKRELL. Therefore, I mean to read the conference report, and I will proceed to read it, and then I will hear the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Now, does the Senator——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me read the conference report, and then I will hear the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRELL. I decline to yield until I read the conference report, and the Senator will say it is the conference report.

Mr. HALE. I will reply to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I read from the RECORD:

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., Tuesday, April 19, 1898). Mr. President, on behalf of the committee of conference I submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

"That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1, in line 1, striking out the words 'are, and.'

"That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, in line 2, to strike out all after the word 'independent' to and including the word 'Island,' in line 4; and agree to the same.

"That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the resolution omitting in line 2 thereof the words 'and Republic;' and agree to the same.

"C. K. DAVIS,
"J. B. FORAKER,
"Managers on the part of the Senate.

"ROBERT ADAMS, Jr.,
"JOEL P. HEATWOLE,
"Managers on the part of the House."

Mr. President, that was the report. Now, I have no objection to the Senator undertaking to make it appear that we were voting against the joint resolution, and we have defined exactly what we did vote for, but I do object when the Senator gets up and reads the resolution which was passed and calls it the conference report, when it was not.

Mr. HALE. Let me say just there——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Nobody knows any better than my friend the Senator from Missouri, because we have had together large experience in reports of conferees, that from any report, the formal, technical report, such as the Senator has just read, which strikes out a word here and inserts a word there, and puts in a clause here and a clause there, no man can tell what is the result of the report. Nobody can tell the result of any conference report from the formal reading of figures and numbers. Now, to show that that is true, and that I was entirely correct in reading what I say was the result of the report, let me read what followed when the report had been read as the Senator from Missouri has read it:

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to disagree to the conference report.
Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that we first have the resolution read as it would stand if amended by the report.

Nobody could tell from the formal report what had been done.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.
Mr. DAVIS. I move the adoption of the report.
Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the chairman of the committee explain in the main to us what the agreement is.

Because you could not tell from what the Senator from Missouri has just read. Again:

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it not be better to have the joint resolution read as it would stand if the report were agreed to?
Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read, and then afterwards, if it be necessary, I will explain the report.
Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

And then, in order to show the Senate what the formal report had done, there was read what I read here, and after that no man asked an explanation. I do not need to say anything more.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the pending question is one of business rather than of politics. I have failed to see anything in the proposition now before the Senate to bring up these momentous political questions or debates or to provoke this heavy artillery of oratory. I have concluded, however, that we are pursuing an old and usual custom. We are picking up the scraps, the bits of cold victuals, hot stuff, and so forth, left over, that every well-regulated family has to enjoy for a few days after there has been a rich and elegant feast. We have had a feast, a national one. We had, indeed, a feast of reason and a flow of soul here during the last week. We have had memorable speeches from all sides of this Chamber, all bristling with loyalty, courage, statesmanship, and patriotism. No recognized political party has been found wanting in its allegiance to the United States, the honor of the country, or its purpose to liberate the suffering Cubans and assist them in establishing an independent republic.

It is true there have been in certain quarters very severe criticism of the President of the United States. In my judgment a great many splendid speeches have been marred with that indulgence, but I have not taken those criticisms seriously. I do not believe that the country is going to take them seriously. I do not believe that they seriously disturb the President of the United States, because it seems to me the country must see, what we in this Senate see, that while we are perhaps on the verge of war—one nation against another—fighting for the good and the future liberty of a down-trodden people, yet there is another conflict not far away in which we on the Republican side will fight alone against the allied forces, as it seems from present indications, of Democrats, Populists, Silver Republicans, Independents, and others.

It is necessary of course that the allied anti-Republican forces have sinews of war, and they are now proceeding to create them. Literature is always considered necessary, and it is more convenient to have it frankable; hence all this frenzied oratory. So into these speeches on a patriotic subject there must be infused a little politics. Fine speeches must be the sugar coating to cover the insidious political poison that goes out to the reading public. That is all there is to it, in my judgment. Of course it is expected that with the present very great interest in Cuban matters every speech on the subject will be read, and so the long-suffering reader—the voter—must take this political medicine which the allied mixers have prepared, whether it is palatable or not.

It is to be, as I understand, a fight of the G. O. P. against the field; the elephant against all the other inhabitants of the zoo. It is possible that that great and powerful animal may be conquered in the coming conflict by the combined efforts of all the others, but he will be an alive and powerful elephant still. In my own judgment, however, if I may be permitted to make the prediction, the elephant will be not only alive, but in command of the ring, at the end of the fracas, and he will have his trunk with him, and will have come to stay.

Mr. President, I am one of those who have not felt it necessary during this discussion to declare my allegiance to the United States nor to protect the President against these attacks. I am both glad and proud that I have the privilege of being among those termed supporters of the President. I believe that every Senator who sits in this body, no matter under what political banner he trains, has away down in his heart the utmost respect for the present incumbent of the White House. I believe that every Senator is willing to acknowledge and does acknowledge to himself that we have an honest, able, patriotic, statesmanlike occupant of the White House presiding over the destinies of the nation. It has been pretty well shown here that every Senator is really willing and ready to loyally support the President in the coming conflict. That was shown by the manner in which $50,000,000 was voted, and it would have been shown just as readily and completely if $500,000,000 were asked for, in my opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not wish to interfere with the debate——

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming, who is a fair-minded man, if he does not believe that all Senators here who are classed as the opposition have shown the utmost respect for and confidence in the President of the United States by their votes on this subject?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I have said that, and I hasten to say it again; and it is only in explanation of the disrespectful remarks contained in some of the speeches that I allude to them, contending as I do that they are not serious and were only injected for home consumption as a matter of cheap, frankable political ammunition.

Now, if I may be excused, and if I am not out of order, I should like to address myself to the subject before the Senate. I presume it will not be out of order to take up the real subject now before us.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator from Wyoming refer to my motion to recede?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; the motion to recede.

Mr. WILSON. It has got a little lost here in the last two or three days. I am very glad to learn that we are coming back to the motion I made yesterday at 12.30 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the liberty to state that the question before the Senate is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. Then the parliamentary condition is the motion to concur——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the conditon.

Mr. WARREN. Then the parliamentary condition is a motion to concur in the amendment offered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to the bill as it came from the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a proper motion, the Chair will state.

Mr. WILSON. I do not care, but that is not the motion I made. However, it is immaterial, as it accomplishes the same purpose. I may not have the exact parliamentary language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states the proper parliamentary question. The bill is now in the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. WARREN. I hope that the motion to concur will not prevail. The House of Representatives have in the bill very properly provided for a certain specific way in which certain employees of the Government shall be selected—that is to say, they shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior. I do not know how they could well help inserting such language if they wished to have the matter move along satisfactorily and to have these new places that are to be provided for filled with competent persons, as they should be filled.

The provision is for the selection of the foresters, care-takers of the forests, etc. Such employees have never heretofore been selected through the civil service. There has never heretofore been an examination held by the civil service of any person to hold one of the similar places which have been created or filled. The proposition before us is for the employment of some men at a small per diem for certain portions of the year, possibly the whole year in some cases, and provides, as it should do, that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint or employ. The men who will naturally be employed for this purpose can not well be examined under any known rule or method of civil-service examination.

A civil-service examination, as I understand it, is largely on paper and goes to show what a man's knowledge may be of arithmetic and geography and various other studies and facts. The personality of the party whom he employes does not enter into it; the matter whether he is a person of good judgment and whether the person has the experience in this particular branch of business seem to have no opportunity of examination. For this purpose it matters not whether the men who are to be employed can write a sentence grammatically or spell a half dozen words in succession correctly. You require pioneers; you require men capable of great physical endurance, men capable of going without sleep, without food, under exposure and in all weathers, and to travel great distances.

The genius of civil service is that men may rise or fall on their own merits and on their own capabilities. Men are examined and put to work, and usually, as in the matter of clerks, a man's sphere of action is confined to perhaps 4 feet or 10 feet square in some office. Others are working along side of him in the same line. Over these clerks we find a chief of division or a chief clerk. Therefore their daily work is examinable, and is examined from time to time. They are marked and credited accordingly, some go up and some go down, all of which is very proper; but when we select a man for the kind of work proposed in the measure under discussion, we must consider that first his pay is almost or quite on the basis of a laborer, and such places have heretofore been considered outside the civil service. Then, his term of office is merely at will; he is hired per diem. His service is to be away out on the frontier, most of the time hundreds of miles from human habitations.

A man has to go there into the forest and live alone. He has to be alert, a man who can mount a horse and ride a hundred miles at great speed, go without food, or perhaps taking a biscuit or two in his saddlebags and riding continuously three or four days at a time. They are men who have to be intrusted with the hiring of a great many more men in case of forest conflagration. They are men who have no one over them who can examine their work or know what they are doing for months at a time.

They are men who ought to be personally known to the appointing power or ought to be known to some one who can vouch for them and state to the appointing power the capacity and the personality of the person, his experience, what he is able to do. This move is not an encroachment upon the civil service, because the proposition is one that can not properly come under the civil service. It is merely a direction how these men, who are to work by the day, shall be employed. I do not understand why the Senate Appropriation Committee propose to cut out the words "by the Secretary of the Interior," and I should be very sorry to see them cut out. That is all I have to say at present. I hope the motion to concur will fail and that the House language will be restored.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had intended to say something in reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], as he referred to me by name or designation in his remarks. But the Senate seems to be rather sleepy, and I feel somewhat sleepy myself; and as the Senator from Colorado has departed the realm, I think I will not proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I want to say one word about the matter that has been discussed here. I think it was unfortunate that the usual and established policy of the United States in dealing with Spanish-American colonies struggling for liberty was not pursued in the case of Cuba. Both Houses of Congress repeatedly signified their desire that Cuba should be treated as all the other Spanish-American colonies had been treated, and various resolutions were proposed recommending the recognition of the belligerent rights of Cuba. This has been the overwhelming sentiment of Congress for the last three years. There can be no doubt about it.

I think it was very unfortunate that the President of the United States did not pursue in this case a policy similar to that pursued by Monroe and by Jackson. I believe all the trouble we now have has resulted from a departure from the policy heretofore adopted in dealing with the Spanish-American colonies. I do not intend to protract the discussion, but I wish to call attention for a few moments to the course of Mr. Monroe, during whose Administration nearly all the South American countries acquired their independence. I began to call attention to this point the other day, but the Senate was not at the time in a mood to listen to much on the subject. Mr. Monroe in his first annual message, referring to the South American colonies struggling for liberty, said:

> Through every stage of the conflict the United States have maintained an impartial neutrality, giving aid to neither of the parties in men, money, ships, or munitions of war. They have regarded the contest not in the light of an ordinary insurrection or rebellion, but as a civil war between parties nearly equal, having as to neutral powers equal rights. Our ports have been open to both, and every article the fruit of our soil or of the industry of our citizens which either was permitted to take has been equally free to the other.

This was in 1817, and he continued to call the attention of Congress from time to time to the condition of the colonies, always reiterating the same sentiment. I now read from his annual message of December 7, 1819. He said:

> In the civil war existing between Spain and the Spanish provinces in this hemisphere the greatest care has been taken to enforce the laws intended to preserve an impartial neutrality. Our ports have continued to be equally open to both parties and on the same conditions, and our citizens have been equally restrained from interfering in favor of either to the prejudice of the other.

Finally, after they had pursued the even tenor of their course sufficiently long to make him believe that they ought to be admitted, he did not cry out "prerogative," as unfortunately Mr. Olney did in the last Administration when these matters were being considered, claiming that the Congress of the United States had nothing to do with it. With jealousy of prerogative the conflict commenced which has led us into the trouble. We did not hear that from Monroe or from Monroe's Attorney-General or anyone in those times. On the contrary, when President Monroe had arrived at the conclusion that their independence ought to be admitted, he addressed a special message to Congress in 1822, commencing thus:

> In transmitting to the House of Representatives the documents called for by the resolution of that House of the 30th of January, I consider it my duty to invite the attention of Congress to a very important subject, and to communicate the sentiments of the Executive on it, that, should Congress entertain similar sentiments, there may be such cooperation between the two departments of the Government as their respective rights and duties may require.

That message was addressed to both the Senate and the House. He then went on and stated the condition and gave it as his opinion that all those republics should be recognized. The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, discussed deliberately, an elaborate report was made, and a resolution was passed declaring it to be the opinion of Congress that those republics should be recognized, concurring fully with the President in his opinion. To carry out the views jointly entertained by Congress and by the Executive, I find that an appropriation was made on the 4th of May, 1822. I read from the Statutes at Large, volume 3, page 678:

> Be it enacted, etc., That, for such missions to the independent nations on the American continent as the President of the United States may deem proper, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, a sum not exceeding $100,000, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The President and Congress went on hand in hand, the President year after year communicating to Congress the condition of things, communicating to Congress the fact that he had allowed both parties equal privileges in trade with us; that he had observed a strict neutrality, informing them year after year in his message of the progress of events in those colonies, and when he thought they had matured he called upon Congress for cooperation, and said if they concurred with him in opinion, the republics would be recognized. The President contemplated joint action, and there was joint action and perfect harmony. There was not a word said about prerogative.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Nevada to read again the first clause of the statute?

Mr. STEWART. It reads as follows:

> That, for such missions to the independent nations on the American continent as the President of the United States may deem proper, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, a sum not exceeding $100,000.

The President said he would go ahead if Congress saw proper; and then they turned around and appropriated the money and told him to go ahead if he thought proper. He told them in his message what he thought. There was no cranky prerogative suggested in that proceeding.

President Jackson has been alluded to in the debate. With all that has been said about the stubbornness of Jackson, he was not an Olney, but he was a Jackson. There is a wide difference between them. It is very interesting to see how this matter was treated by Andrew Jackson. In the case of Texas, President Jackson sent a message to Congress in December, in answer to a resolution, in which he stated the condition of Texas and then negatived this prerogative business. This is what he said with regard to his prerogative. I read now from the third volume of the Messages, page 267:

> In the preamble to the resolution of the House of Representatives it is distinctly intimated that the expediency of recognizing the independence of Texas should be left to the decision of Congress. In this view, on the ground of expediency, I am disposed to concur, and do not, therefore, consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the strict constitutional right of the Executive, either apart from or in conjunction with the Senate, over the subject. It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the Constitution, and most safe, that it should be exercised, when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body, by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils must be furnished. Its submission to Congress, which represents in one of its branches the States of this Union and in the other the people of the United States, where there may be reasonable ground to apprehend so grave a consequence, would certainly afford the fullest satisfaction to our own country and a perfect guaranty to all other nations of the justice and prudence of the measures which might be adopted.

President Jackson said there never had been a case where there had been any strife over prerogative; that if the case was likely to lead to grave consequences Congress must be consulted; and to show his perfect willingness, although in this message he thought the time was premature, he said in conclusion he would be guided by the views of Congress even on that subject. In concluding the message he said:

> Having thus discharged my duty by presenting with simplicity and directness the views which after much reflection I have been led to take of this important subject, I have only to add the expression of my confidence that if Congress shall differ with me upon it their judgment will be the result of dispassionate, prudent, and wise deliberation, with the assurance that during the short time I shall continue connected with the Government I shall promptly and cordially unite with you in such measures as may be deemed best fitted to increase the prosperity and perpetuate the peace of our favored country.

This was the pledge he made to them in the message when he suggested it was premature. He left the matter to Congress to cooperate with him.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that that is the case now?

Mr. STEWART. I was applying my remark to the prerogative I have heard claimed for the President, that owing to the international character and the magnitude of the question we have nothing to do with it. I have heard too much of that claim, and it has led to all this trouble.

Now, let me follow it up. How did the question terminate with reference to Texas? On the 3d of March, 1837, the last day of his service as President, Andrew Jackson sent the following message to the Senate:

In my message to Congress of the 21st of December last I laid before that body, without reserve, my views concerning the recognition of the independence of Texas, with a report of the agent employed by the Executive to obtain information in respect to the condition of that country. Since that time the subject has been repeatedly discussed in both branches of the Legislature. These discussions have resulted in the insertion of a clause in the general appropriation law passed by both Houses providing for the outfit and salary of a diplomatic agent to be sent to the Republic of Texas whenever the President of the United States may receive satisfactory evidence that Texas is an independent power and shall deem it expedient to appoint such minister, and in the adoption of a resolution by the Senate, the constitutional advisers of the Executive on the diplomatic intercourse of the United States with foreign powers, expressing the opinion that "the State of Texas having established and maintained an independent government capable of performing those duties, foreign and domestic, which appertain to independent governments, and it appearing that there is no longer any reasonable prospect of the successful prosecution of the war by Mexico against said State, it is expedient and proper, and in conformity with the laws of nations and the practice of this Government in like cases, that the independent political existence of said State be acknowledged by the Government of the United States." Regarding these proceedings as a virtual decision of the question submitted by me to Congress, I think it my duty to acquiesce therein, and therefore I nominate Alcée La Branche, of Louisiana, to be chargé d'affaires to the Republic of Texas.

That is very different from the treatment of the resolution of the two Houses of Congress which passed more than two years ago declaring in favor of the recognition of the independence of Cuba. We heard nothing from the Executive direct, but from his Secretary of State we heard that we were meddling with what was none of our business; that to attend to this matter was executive and not legislative business. That was the first time we heard prerogative set up and the assertion that the Executive would have no cooperation with the legislative branch in dealing with the belligerent rights or the independence of Spanish-American republics.

Now, what would have been the result if we had not departed from the course pursued by Monroe and by Jackson and by every other President previous to the time when we commenced dealing with Cuba? If we had followed in the case of Cuba the precedents established for a hundred years, what would have been the result? Cuba would have had the same rights in our markets that Spain had. You would not have had the whole Department of Justice, with all its deputy marshals, and Secret Service agents hunting down friends of Cuba wherever there was any suspicion that they would send aid to the patriots of that island. We would not have had to spend $2,000,000 to police the sea, to blockade Cuba, and cut off supplies. It would have been impossible, in my opinion, for Spain to have starved hundreds of thousands of her own subjects, the Cubans, to death in a war of extermination if we had not assisted Spain in cutting off supplies.

The Secretary reminds Spain that if they had done as much as we did in cutting off supplies, they would have been much more successful. Why was this departure taken? I say it is a warning to the Executive that it is better to go along with Congress and cooperate with the legislative body than to set up the question of a prerogative. Prerogative has driven us into this war, whereas cooperation with Congress in treating with Cuba and respect for the opinions of the majority of Congress and the whole country would have relieved us of all responsibility, and Cuba would have been free.

No one questions but that Cuba would have acquired her freedom if she could have had the same privileges in our ports to purchase supplies that Spain had. No one doubts that at all. Why was the departure made? I say those who claim these prerogatives for the President ought to point out some beneficial result from the new departure. While I will follow as loyally the flag of the country in my support of the President as any other Senator here, I do not want it conceded for one moment that the Executive in this matter has been wiser than his predecessors or that he has been wiser than Congress. He took a new departure, and there ought to be some fruits to indicate the wisdom of it before we hear prerogative lauded. All the great and good Presidents before the question of Cuba came up said that in such a case there would be no conflict on that subject. There were many cases where cooperation was absolutely necessary, cases that would involve war and require immediate legislation, and Congress must be consulted.

Where it is a mere matter of form, and where there is no necessity for it, Congress does not want to be consulted. But the recognition of governments is a question to be considered by the whole power of this Government, and every department of it should be brought into exercise. That course is necessary for harmonious relations and to accomplish the result desired. Jackson and Monroe did not feel themselves above consulting Congress. They did not propose to go forward and take the question in their hands as a prerogative. Both recognized that the President, in carrying out a scheme of this kind, needed the lawmaking power, which had to make appropriations and pass laws, and which, in case of war, must furnish the sinews of war.

They recognized in Congress such a thing as the power to declare war, the power to make appropriations, and other powers high and sacred, more specifically granted than the mere inference that the matter of receiving diplomatic agents gives the President a prerogative. That may be, and in many cases is, a mere matter of form. The President does that, but cases may arise, as suggested by the great Presidents and all the statesmen of that period, where something more than a matter of form is involved, and in all such cases it is the duty of the President to cooperate with Congress. In the case of Cuba this has always been his duty. There has always been a threat that if we would recognize the independence of Cuba Spain would resent it, and there might be war.

The President, under those circumstances, with those threats staring him in the face, has no right, if there is a probability of war, to recognize Cuba and plunge this country into war. He has no right whatever, by indirection, to assume the war-making power. This new scheme of prerogative, which was thundered forth by the Secretary of State when Congress passed a resolution almost unanimously for Cuban independence, was a departure which ought not to have been followed, but President Cleveland followed it and President McKinley followed it. If it had been departed from and the old policy had been adopted at any time before the blowing up of the Maine, everybody knows we would not have been involved in war with Spain.

From this hour I hope there will be cooperation, and that the President will realize that he is not the entire Government; that he will recognize that there is, in addition to the Executive, the legislative department, and that they must cooperate in the great concerns where legislative and executive action are both required.

I hope there will be no more statements made here such as were made on Saturday night, accusing us of interfering with the prerogatives of the President, because we participate in this matter. The President never has replied to the resolutions of Congress recognizing Cuban independence. Congress has been ignored by the executive department in that regard, and that is a great misfortune for the country, and has occasioned the sad results we now see; but we can not remedy them now by crimination or recrimination.

I simply rose to protest against the suggestion that this was a matter of prerogative and not a matter of joint action of both the legislative and executive departments of the Government, which are necessary to carry on war and to maintain the recognition of Cuba.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a word right there?

Mr. STEWART. I am through.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree entirely with what the Senator has said, but I learn from the Washington Star of this evening the following:

The President in his ultimatum to the Spanish Government transmits a copy of the resolutions passed by Congress, which resolutions he states he has signed. He demands that Spain withdraw her army and navy forces from Cuban waters as required by the terms of the act of Congress (no date for the withdrawal being mentioned), and then states that if a satisfactory answer is not received here "before Saturday next" he will proceed at once to carry the resolution of Congress into effect.

Now, I suggest to the Senator from Nevada whether we ought not, under these circumstances, whatever past differences have arisen among us, to let them pass by without further discussion and stand by the President, who is going to carry these resolutions into effect on Saturday next by a general movement of the Army and Navy of the United States to give independence to Cuba.

Mr. STEWART. I most certainly shall stand by the President in his movement to carry out the resolutions of Congress, but I shall regret more and more as time passes that those resolutions did not include the essential point of the recognition of the Government of Cuba. I shall regret that; the President will regret it; and Senators on the other side will regret it. It is a departure leading to the same difficulties which were inaugurated by Mr. Olney's prerogative letter. It is a departure, I say, because in all cases heretofore when a determination had been reached to sustain a government not as strong as the government of the Republic of Cuba, it was done by the cooperation of the Executive and Congress recognizing their political rights; and without a recognition of their political rights, as I said before, if we go upon that island, we go as conquerors. If my country declares war and goes as a conqueror, I am with my country, but I will not say that I advise my country to filibuster or to conquer Cuba and to divide the patrimony of that country. I will not say I advise that, for I do not.

The President of the United States has already before him in the resolutions a sufficient indorsement of Congress for action on his part; he has got before him as much as any President need have, for the resolutions show that the legislative department is in favor of the recognition of the Republic of Cuba; and if the President will rise now above party and recognize that government before he invades the island, the whole world will bless him and foreign nations and everybody else will say the act was right and patriotic. But whether he does that or not, whether he pursues such policies as I think he ought to pursue or not, I shall stand by him in carrying out the resolutions, wrong and unjust as I think they are without the recognition of the Cuban Republic—fraught with difficulties and consequences which may be lamentable. Still it is my country; and if that is the decree, let it be executed, no matter what the result may be.

I have no doubt that we shall all regret it. I have no doubt that it will lead to complications which will make us all sorrowful; but we can not afford to have any division of sentiment amongst the people or any division amongst ourselves as to the support of the Executive in the war which is probably before us.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think the President of the United States stands in more danger from his friends than from his enemies. When we adjourned Monday night, after taking the final vote, I supposed there was a general good feeling in the Chamber and that no one would find that it comported with self-respect to seek partisan advantage from the circumstances or history of this question in the Senate. I supposed we were all, in what we said and did, actuated by a lofty sense of patriotism. I did not suppose it possible that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] would join the jingoes at this late hour and make the heroic leap he has made to reach the political band wagon before it moved off.

I do not like to talk of a Senator in his absence, but the Senator from Maine seems to have voluntarily retired; but if any man has been consistent, open, and notorious in his hostility to Cuba and the Cubans and every interest held sacred by that people, that man is the senior Senator from Maine.

Mr. President, at the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, I think it was, we passed what are commonly known as the Cameron concurrent resolutions by a vote of fifty-odd to six, recognizing the belligerent rights of the insurgents of Cuba. There was, as I recall the fact, but one Senator in this chamber who saw fit to contest on the floor of the Senate the propriety of those resolutions, and that was the senior Senator from Maine. He was the open and avowed sympathizer of Spain and Spanish policies at that time.

Again, Mr. President, when a year ago we passed a concurrent resolution on the same subject—the resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] the Senator from Maine opposed it, and in every instance in the history of the Cuban question in this chamber, where a vote has been taken, he has voted against any proposition looking to the recognition of the Cuban Republic.

From the opening of the war in Cuba to this moment there has not been a time, nor a vote taken on the subject, that the Senator from Maine has not spoken and voted against everything and every resolution, including the one we passed on Monday last.

Now, under such circumstances, it seems to me remarkable that the Senator from Maine should shy his castor into the ring and claim to be the only champion of the people of Cuba at this time.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator state that the Senator from Maine voted against the resolution passed on Monday?

Mr. ALLEN. I do. I say he voted against the resolution passed on Monday. There is not a word or syllable in the resolution passed on Saturday, and again brought before the Senate on Monday, which the Senator from Maine voted for. He voted against the whole proposition at all times.

Mr. President, when a man sets himself up as a public teacher he ought to possess some experience or have done something to qualify him to instruct others.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. SEWELL. On his statement that the Senator from Maine did not vote for anything of that character, I will ask what does the Senator call voting for concurrence in the conference report? Is not that a vote for the resolution?

Mr. ALLEN. That was not a vote for the resolution; no, sir.

Mr. SEWELL. I maintain that it was.

Mr. ALLEN. I maintain that it was not, and I will submit it to arbitration. [Laughter].

Mr. President, on Saturday last we took a direct vote on the passage of the resolution which has to-day become a law by the signature of the President. The Senator from Maine voted against every word and line in it. The Senator from New Jersey knows that fact. The Senator from Maine antagonized it; he wanted to defeat it, and he would have defeated the House resolution, wishy-washy as that is, if he could have done so. In other words, it has been manifest to the Senate and the country all through the contest, from its inception to the present time, that the Senator from Maine has been pro-Spanish, to put it in plain and unequivocal words.

Now, what did the Senator do on Saturday night? When the conference committee reported in favor of adhering to the House amendment to the Senate resolution against the recognition of the existence of the Republic of Cuba, the Senator from Maine voted to sustain that report and reject the amendment, and that was as near as he ever came to voting for the resolution in favor of the recognition of Cuba.

Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Maine are sinister and carry with them a purpose which neither he nor any other Senator ought to have under the circumstances. There has never emanated from the other side of this Chamber, from the commencement of the war in Cuba to this moment, a resolution recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba; not one. Out of the forty-odd Republican Senators on the other side not one of them has ever introduced or advocated—I will not say have not advocated—but not one has ever introduced a resolution to recognize the existence of the present Republic of Cuba.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] did the other day, did he not?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know, but I will make an exception; but that was within two or three weeks. Yes, I will make an exception as to that Senator.

Mr. CARTER. How about Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Cameron never introduced a resolution to recognize the Republic of Cuba. He introduced a resolution to recognize belligerency and tendering the good offices of this Government, but that resolution was not permitted to pass the House of Representatives. It passed here, it is true, but it fell asleep on its road to the other branch of Congress, then, as now, in the hands of the Republican party. The resolution which was passed last May has never been permitted to see the light of day in the other branch of Congress.

The Senator from Maine, who has attacked the opposition, as he calls us, has never yet uttered a word in favor of Cuba or introduced a bill or a resolution for the relief or recognition of the Cuban people; yet he comes before the world and the political footlights here and poses as the only and great champion of Cuban recognition at the last hour!

Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has a peculiar faculty for extricating himself from difficulties—a faculty I admire. He reminds me very much of a distinguished Union general during the recent civil war—I do not know but that he is yet alive—he never won a battle in his life—not one, and he was in many of them—but he had a peculiar genius for extricating himself from critical situations. So, Mr. President, it became known in the Army that General So-and-so was "not much in action, but was hell on retreat." (Laughter.) So he will pass down into history, so far as those who were in the Army are concerned, as a great man on retreat.

The Senator from Maine is a great man on retreat. Within the last two days, for the first time in the long struggle for Cuban freedom that has been going on in Congress, we find the open and avowed champion of Spanish sentiment in this Chamber coming to the front at the last hour and claiming that victory belongs to him and his party. I am glad to know that there is not another Senator on that side of the Chamber who feels he could consistently, in the light of what has transpired, make that claim, or sustain the Senator from Maine in his claim.

I have no desire to gain political advantage from this question. If I did, I could say, and say truthfully, the first and only resolutions that were ever offered in this body looking to the recognition of political independence for the Republic of Cuba, until the last two or three weeks, came from Populists. Those resolutions were introduced over two years ago, and have been introduced at every session of Congress since then, and sometimes two or three have been offered during a session—not for the recognition of belligerent rights of the insurgents, but recognizing the existence of the Republic of Cuba.

I am not claiming superiority in this respect, but I want to see enough dignity, enough manhood, and enough of ordinary decency, if I may be permitted to use the expression, manifested here so that every man will be perfectly willing to give every other man due credit for patriotic motives in his votes and speeches; and I regret exceedingly that anyone should feel himself at liberty to take a partisan advantage of the situation presented.

Mr. President, I have never thus far during the present Administration uttered a word of disrespect for the President of the United States. I shall not do so. If I can not win a political battle without belittling the President or questioning his motives, I will fail. I do not agree with him on many of his policies and I rejoice in the fact that I do not. It is a source of satisfaction to me to know that I do not. But he is the President of the United States, and, as such, charged with grave responsibilities—a man, I believe, having an honest purpose to serve his country as best he can, although mistaken in his policies. We have reached that peculiar crisis in the history of our country when it becomes my duty, as it will be my pleasure, to support the President in all lawful measures in waging a successful war against Spain and her colonies, if war unfortunately must come; and yet, Mr. President, speech after speech has been made by Republicans within a day or two in defense of the President when he has not been assailed, and when no one has questioned his capacity to deal with the subject, and a stranger would suppose in listening to them the President was on trial for some great offense.

No Senator will go further to strengthen the arm of the President in what he may do in this great crisis than I will. I will not lay a straw in his pathway. I will stand by him because I am an American citizen and a patriot, and I have not reached the low-water mark of intellectuality or morality where I would be willing to make peanut politics out of the gravity of a situation like this.

And, Mr. President, what more can be offered? When Democrats, Populists, and Free-Silver Republicans come forward, honestly tendering their services to the President at this time, because our common country and institutions are at stake, are we to have it insinuated from the other side that we are opposing the President in waging war against Spain? Can not our professions be taken in the same spirit of honesty and disinterested patriotism in which they were made? Is there a man so lost to a sense of the situation, so lost to patriotic motives and purposes, that he is willing to stand in the Senate Chamber of the United States, under such circumstances, and charge "the opposition," as the Senator from Maine sees fit to call us, as being opposed to the President?

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I will listen to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in coming up through the streets of the city some sixty minutes ago, I observed that the patriotic citizens were hanging flags in nearly every window and on every flagstaff in the city. The evening papers announce that troops are concentrated on our southern borders. It is said that the Navy of the United States is ready for action, and that Saturday will probably be the day when the first blow will be struck, if it is not struck before. The sundry civil appropriation bill is pending before the Senate; the naval appropriation bill has not been passed; and it seems to me that these great appropriation bills to defend and strengthen the Army and the Navy——

Mr. ALLEN. I think I can understand what the Senator is going to say.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. These facts being conceded, everyone admitting that the thirty-five Senators who have voted against this conference report made a mistake perchance, I propose that we agree to accept their apology and say nothing more about it, merely leaving with them the admonition that they say no more, but proceed to enact the sundry civil bill this evening.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator could not retire from his interruption without leaving a slight sting and misrepresentation in his question. It was impossible for that Senator, even with his usual sense of justice, to interrupt and ask a question and retire without the question carrying with it an imputation, which I think in his less merry moments he would not make.

Mr. President, the Senator speaks about the flags being hung up in this city. I am glad to know they are hung up from Maine to Texas and California.

Mr. President, the flag of the United States is an emblem of our national sovereignty. It unifies the people, and I know what the flag means as well as the Senator from Montana; in fact it means more to me than it does to him, for I have taken it in my hands in the grim smoke and carnage of battle, and I do not think the Senator from Montana ever did. I know what it means. I have carried it in action when riddled with shot and shell, and it has a peculiar significance to me and not a mirthful one either. I have stood by it when it could be dimly distinguished in alternate clouds of smoke and rays of sunshine, and guarded it when thirty-one of my own comrades fell dead or desperately wounded in action, and under such circumstances there is no mirthful feeling in me when referring to the flag of my country.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I imagine the Senator misconceives the spirit in which the suggestion was made. His devotion to the flag no one has questioned and no one can question. The disposition of the thirty-five Senators who voted against the conference report on Monday evening to do that which was right and just and patriotic and proper no one questions or can question.

I do regret that the Senate on that occasion did not present that solid front which another branch of this Government presented in dealing with the question. I believe it would be better now to prepare for the event that our action has induced rather than to undertake mutual explanations or exculpatory remarks or criminating or incriminating suggestions on the floor of the Senate, whatsoever may be the effect upon the fortunes of political parties hereafter.

Mr. ALLEN. No one has made any incriminating remarks that I know of, or at least no one on this side of the Chamber has. If I have made any I want to say I am unconscious of it and that I am so obtuse I can not see it. But I will call attention to a little history, for time is not so valuable, Mr. President, but that it is proper to take up and consider this matter in the light of the fact that this discussion has been thrust upon us without our invitation.

On the 14th instant House joint resolution No. 233 was laid before the Senate by the Vice-President in the following language:

The Chair lays a joint resolution from the House of Representatives before the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 233), authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, was read the first time by its title.

It was at the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] read in full. The Senator from Minnesota then said: I move that the joint resolution lie upon the table.

And then ensued a brief discussion, in which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and I participated.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] at that time, or shortly after, moved an adjournment. The motion was defeated. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] did not vote, I think.

Mr. President, I will ask to put in the RECORD the various yea-and-nay votes in their chronological order, without stopping now to read them.

On the motion of the Senator from Maryland to adjourn, the following vote was taken:

YEAS—10.

Bate,	Clay,	Elkins,	Wellington.
Caffery,	Daniel,	McBride,
Chilton,	Deboe,	Turley,

NAYS—61.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Allen,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Rawlins,
Allison,	Gear,	Mallory,	Roach,
Bacon,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Sewell,
Baker,	Gray,	Martin,	Shoup,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Harris,	Mills,	Teller,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Money,	Thurston,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Penrose,	Turner,
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Vest,
Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Davis,	Kenney,	Pettus,	Wilson.
Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Platt, Conn.
Faulkner,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Foraker,	McEnery,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—18.

Butler,	Mitchell,	Platt, N. Y.	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Morrill,	Smith,	White,
Hale,	Murphy,	Spooner,	Wolcott.
Hanna,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Kyle,	Pasco,	Walthall,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

On the Turpie-Foraker amendment "that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island," the following yea-and-nay vote was taken:

YEAS—51.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Roach,
Bacon,	Harris,	Mills,	Smith,
Baker,	Heitfeld,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Bate,	Jones, Ark.	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Thurston,
Butler,	Kenney,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Kyle,	Pasco,	Turley,
Chandler,	Lindsay,	Penrose,	Turner,
Chilton,	McEnery,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Clay,	McLaurin,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Mallory,	Pettus,	White,
Daniel,	Mantle,	Quay,	Wilson.
Foraker,	Martin,	Rawlins,

NAYS—37.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Frye,	McBride,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Gear,	McMillan,	Warren,
Carter,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Wellington,
Clark,	Gray,	Morrill,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.
Davis,	Hanna,	Platt, N. Y.
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Pritchard,
Elkins,	Hawley,	Proctor,

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted nay. The amendment was agreed to and became part of the Senate resolution.

The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] moved to strike out of the first line of the joint resolution the words "are, and", so that if amended the paragraph would read:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free and independent, etc.

On motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to lay the proposed amendment on the table, a yea-and-nay vote was taken with the following result:

YEAS—55.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Mallory,	Quay,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Mantle,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Roach,
Bate,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Smith,
Berry,	Harris,	Mills,	Stewart,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Money,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Tillman,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Nelson,	Turley,
Clark,	Kyle,	Pasco,	Turner,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Penrose,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Lodge,	Perkins,	Vest,
Daniel,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Davis,	McLaurin,	Pettus,

NAYS—33.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Allison,	Gear,	Morgan,	Warren,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Wellington,
Caffery,	Gray,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Carter,	Hale,	Platt, N. Y.	White,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Pritchard,	Wilson.
Deboe,	Hawley,	Proctor,
Elkins,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Fairbanks,	McBride,	Shoup,

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So Mr. FRYE's amendment was laid on the table.

In this instance also the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted in the negative again.

And the Senator from Maine voted against the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

On motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to strike out all of the House resolution but the enacting clause, and substitute the Senate resolution as amended, containing a clause recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba, the vote was as follows:

YEAS—60.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Quay,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Roach,
Bate,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Shoup,
Berry,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Smith,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Stewart,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Teller,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Thurston,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Clark,	Kyle,	Pasco,	Turley,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Penrose,	Turner,
Cockrell,	Lodge,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Cullom,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Daniel,	McLaurin,	Pettus,	White,
Davis,	Mallory,	Proctor,	Wolcott.

NAYS—28.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Frye,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gear,	McBride,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Warren,
Carter,	Gray,	Morrill,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Hale,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Elkins,	Hanna,	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson.

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So Mr. DAVIS's motion was agreed to.

The Senator from Maine voted against recognition again.

On motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives striking out recognition of the Republic of Cuba, a yea-and-nay vote was taken, as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hansbrough,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Hawley,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Frye,	Hoar,	Shoup,
Carter,	Gear,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Clark,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Warren,
Cullom,	Gray,	Morgan,	Wetmore,
Deboe,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Elkins,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NAYS—46.

Allen,	Foraker,	Martin,	Roach,
Bacon,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Stewart,
Baker,	Harris,	Mills,	Teller,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Thurston,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Turley,
Caffery,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Turner,
Cannon,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Clay,	McLaurin,	Pettus,	White.
Cockrell,	Mallory,	Quay,
Daniel,	Mantle,	Rawlins,

NOT VOTING—11.

Chilton,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.	Walthall,
Davis,	Mitchell,	Sewell,	Wellington.
McBride,	Murphy,	Smith,

So the motion was rejected.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted in the affirmative again, thus again showing his absolute and consistent hostility to the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The conference committee finally agreed to strike out Cuban recognition, and so reported to the Senate.

On motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], the Senate further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House resolution recognizing independence. Upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], that the Senate ask for a further conference, a yea-and-nay vote was taken, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Faulkner,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Hoar,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quay,
Carter,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Sewell,
Clark,	Gear,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Mason,	Spooner,
Davis,	Gray,	Morrill,	Warren,
Deboe,	Hale,	Penrose,	Wilson.
Elkins,	Hanna,	Perkins,

NAYS—40.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Harris,	Mantle,	Roach,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Mills,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Mitchell,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Kenney,	Money,	Turley,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Nelson,	Turner,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Clay,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—10.

Morgan,	Smith,	Walthall,	White.
Murphy,	Tillman,	Wellington,
Platt, N. Y.	Vest,	Wetmore,

So the motion was rejected.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] again putting himself on record against the recognition of Cuba.

Another conference was had with the same result, and another yea-and-nay vote was taken to adopt the conference report, striking out recognition of Cuban independence, with the following result:

YEAS—42.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Baker,	Foraker,	McBride,	Quay,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Gear,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Clark,	Gray,	Morrill,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hale,	Nelson,	Wilson,
Davis,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Elkins,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.

NAYS—35.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Roach,
Bate,	Harris	Mantle,	Stewart,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Mitchell,	Turley,
Caffery,	Jones, Nev.	Money,	Turner,
Cannon,	Kenney,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	White.
Clay,	McEnery,	Pettus,

NOT VOTING—12.

Gorman,	Murphy,	Thurston,	Walthall,
Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	Tillman,	Wellington,
Mills,	Smith,	Vest,	Wetmore.

So the report was agreed to.

And again the senior Senator from Maine put himself clearly on record against the recognition of Cuban independence.

And, Mr. President, this is the end of the history of the resolution so far as yea and nay votes are concerned. The resolution was then concurred in and went to the President, was signed and became a law.

All through the history of the resolution it is made obvious that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] antagonized recognition in every conceivable form and resorted to all parliamentary tactics to encompass its defeat. Under such circumstances, when it is known to the Senate and to the country that the opposition to the resolution in this Chamber came from the other side, with the exception of three or four on this side—every vote cast against it was an Administration Republican vote—it does seem to me that it requires considerable assurance, at least for a Senator whose whole record has been against Cuba and to whose sympathy their condition has never appealed, to make this assault upon Democrats, Populists, and Free-Silver Republicans. I am not willing to say that those who cast their votes against the resolution were not actuated by proper motives—I do not question that. I do not believe, however, they were accurate in their conception of a proper policy. I do not question their hearts; I simply question their heads.

I believe if a year ago the question of recognition of the existence of the Cuban Republic had been taken closely in hand by the President and he had sent an agent to Cuba to investigate the conditions prevailing there, and, having found they were such as have been reported to us, he had indicated to the Spanish throne that a change in Spanish policy in the Island of Cuba must be had, we would not now be upon the verge of war.

Mr. President, that would have required a fixed and definite purpose. But the President did not see fit to do so. I am not charging him with dereliction of duty. He was in a better position, possibly, to know what course should be pursued than I was. I certainly did not have the means of knowledge he had. But I have always believed, and I believe now, the best diplomacy and the best policy in any case is to convey our ideas to the person or power with whom we are dealing in language so plain and distinct that our purpose can not be misunderstood.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly I will.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the Senator to direct his remarks to those on this side who claim to be responsible for the credit or the discredit of the joint resolution as it went to the President. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one phase of the question, in order that he may direct his remarks to it if he should care to do so before sitting down, on the part of those who have been the friends of Cuba in this Chamber from the beginning. There has been a constant desire for recognition of Cuba, which would have brought the freedom of the people of Cuba without war by the United States against Spain, and which would not in itself have constituted sufficient provocation of war by Spain against the United States.

The joint resolution as it went to the President and as it became a law was for intervention without recognition. Intervention without recognition in this case we have reason to believe does not mean the freedom of the people of Cuba. If there be any comfort on the part of those who now claim the responsibility for the joint resolution as it went to the President, I trust the Senator from Nebraska will allow them to extract that comfort. On our part we wanted recognition without war. We wanted the freedom of Cuba from that recognition. They now claim credit for having secured Cuban intervention, which means war without the absolute certainty of the freedom of the Cuban people.

Mr. ALLEN. There can be no doubt that the Senator has stated the facts exactly as they are. No member of the allied forces has ever sought to bring about an armed conflict between this country and Spain. We have all believed, as I expressed myself a moment ago, that if a firm policy had been pursued a year ago even, we would be well out of the difficulty without the slightest danger of a conflict of arms.

We have dealt with this question, and I am willing Congress should bear its portion of responsibility. We have been so vacillating and so uncertain as to the course we have pursued that I do not wonder Spain has gathered courage. There were those, sir, who would have permitted the 266 men who went down with the Maine to lie in the mud of Havana Harbor and rot without entering a word of complaint rather than bring on a conflict of arms, because to do so would be to injure commercial relations and unsettle business. I am not of that number.

I am of the number who believe it was Spanish treachery that sent our battleship to the bottom of the harbor, and I believe the war, if we have one, will date from the 15th day of February, 1898, for the blowing up of the Maine was an act of war itself. But I have never for one moment desired this Government to enter into negotiations to receive a moneyed compensation for the loss of that ship and for the loss of human life. Such a course, Mr. President, would belittle that great catastrophe.

I want to see it possible, and I pray God it may come in the next thirty days, Spain driven from every foot of the Western Hemisphere. I think we ought to drive her from the Philippine Islands, from Cuba, and from Porto Rico. I would go further, Mr. President, if I had it within my power to do so. I would drive her from every island in the sea. I would lay waste Cadiz, Barcelona, and invade and destroy Madrid itself, if war is to come. I do not want to see war. I dread it as much as any citizen can, but if Spain shall defy our power or our authority on this continent, let us give her, and through her to Europe, a lesson that will not be forgotten for a hundred years to come.

Mr. President, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] was addressing the Senate a few moments ago he referred to the fact that he supposed a demand had been made on the Spanish Government for a recognition of the Republic of Cuba before the President's message was sent to us, conferring on us jurisdiction of the question and charging us with responsibility for its settlement. I wish to say I had supposed the same thing; in fact, I had not doubted it, and I learned from that Senator for the first time this afternoon that even the Committee on Foreign Relations was ignorant of the fact at the time it acted. Is it possible the State Department is run as a close corporation, so that even the Committee on Foreign Relations, that is required to deal with this international question, is not placed in possession of accurate official information?

It would seem so. Of course those of us who are not members of that committee, and who may be, I suppose, properly classed as the groundlings of the Senate, are not expected to know anything of the fact. But is it possible that the State Department is conducting its negotiations respecting this great international question with such secrecy as not to even take the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations into its confidence to the extent of giving it the necessary information on which to properly act? Why was not a demand made on Spain for the recognition of the Republic of Cuba before the question was sent to Congress? Was everything done that could be in diplomacy to bring about an adjustment of this matter? Certainly not, Mr. President.

If I understand the situation now, there has never to this moment been a demand on the Spanish Government for the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, not even at this time. And why not? Senators say there is no government in Cuba. Mr. President, I say in all sincerity and respect that I do not believe that statement. In fact, I know it to be untrue. There is a government there. When the President speaks of there not being a government on the Island of Cuba he contradicts himself, for at other places in his message he speaks of the existence of the insurgents. "We may have to intervene," says the President, "and place hostile constraint on both parties," and how can we intervene in a controversy to which there is but one party, and how can we place hostile constraint upon the action of both parties, unless there are two parties to the controversy to constrain?

Mr. President, it is in public documents on our desks, it is in evidence before the Committee on Foreign Relations, undisputed and indisputable, that the Cuban Republic has possession of four of the eastern provinces of the island. They have occupied those provinces for the last two years and a half of the struggle now going on. They have military possession. They have their President and a full line of national officers, with a capital. They have their governors of provinces. They have as complete a judicial system as some of our Territories and States. They have a perfect system of levying and collecting taxes. They have schools and schoolhouses supported by public taxation. They print their own school books. They have as perfect a state as can be found on many of the islands of the sea.

What is there, then, about this Republic that is imperfect? No Senator has undertaken to point out wherein it is defective. I have listened with deep interest, and with the expectation that some one would state wherein the Republic whose capital is at Cubitas is defective or deficient. Sir, Senators have been as silent as the grave on that subject. They have asserted and asseverated, they have repeated the assertion time and again, but not one has pointed out in what respect the Republic was different from any other Republic in an incipient state.

During the Revolutionary struggle our capital was on wheels. The capital of the Republic of Cuba was established at Cubitas shortly after the breaking out of the war, and has never been moved since. Ours was moved, if I recollect rightly, seven different times during the Revolutionary struggle. It was on wheels with the army, and under the protection of the army, and yet we were a Republic then as Cuba is a Republic now.

What motives actuate antagonism to the Republic of Cuba? Sir, every reasonable human being acts from some motive, or refrains from acting in a given case from motive. Whenever we say or do a thing there is a motive behind it. We all understand that. Why is the President standing upon the mere technicality that is untenable, that the question of recognition is exclusively an Executive prerogative? Is it that he is particularly concerned one way or the other as to the exercise of that power? No, Mr. President, that is not it; but there is an influence existing that does not reach the President, but that does reach the politics of the country and the business interests; that has done all in its power to prevent recognition of the Cuban Republic, and that influence would coin human blood and souls into dollars if possible.

It has no patriotism wherever it exists. It would sink this, or any other Republic, to the very depths of hell if it could make money out of the act. What is behind the antagonism of the recognition of the Republic of Cuba? Have not Gomez and his patriotic followers won their spurs? Have they not shown by more than three years of successful warfare their capacity to contend with the Spaniards? Nobody can doubt it. Why are they not recognized, then? Tell me that men can fight successfully for their freedom and firesides for three years and not be competent to govern themselves! I do not believe it.

Mr. President, any government would be a great improvement on the existing conditions in Cuba. It is not because the competency of the Cubans is questioned or questionable. It is not because they have not won the right to govern themselves. It is not because God has not given to every people the right to govern themselves that this opposition is made. It is because of sinister influences behind the whole transaction.

Mr. President, I have no hesitancy in saying what I think those influences are. I may be treading on delicate ground, but I do it knowingly and fearlessly. I know that the Spanish-Cuban indebtedness—and I speak now of the bonded indebtedness, amounting to over $500,000,000, $175,000,000 of which has been issued during the present war—was held in the first instance principally by the Bank of Spain, but that indebtedness and those bonds have passed out of the hands of Spain and into the possession of English, French, and German financiers. If there is such a thing as an international innocent holder of negotiable paper, I suppose those financiers will claim they are innocent holders of this indebtedness charged against Cuba.

Every influence that syndicate can bring to bear through their American agents—and their American agents are powerfully aided and abetted by that portion of our own financiers who have some of those Spanish-Cuban bonds—has been employed to prevent the recognition of the independence of Cuba. And why? Why, sir, simply to perpetuate Spanish sovereignty in Cuba, because as long as the dirty yellow flag of Spain is permitted to float over the Island of Cuba and the mere nominal sovereignty of Spain is exercised there, just so long those bonds will be good and enforcible against the people of Cuba, principal and interest. But, Mr. President, the moment the people of Cuba overthrow the Government of Spain and establish a new one out of the citizenship there, that fact will carry down the Spanish-Cuban indebtedness and it will be lost to its holders forever.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I have heard a good deal about the Spanish bonds, but I know but very little about them. I notice the Senator says that some of them are held in this country. Does the Senator know how large an amount, or approximately how large an amount, of these bonds is held in this country?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know, except what I have seen in the press.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me further, he said that malign influences had been exerted on the part of these holders of bonds in England, France, Germany, and the United States. The Senator surely does not mean to intimate that either the President of the United States or the Congress of the United States has been influenced in that way?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, before I made the statement I thought I had disclaimed in as emphatic language as was necessary that the President was in no way responsible for or connected with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not now making a defense or an apology for anything I have done in this debate or in the votes I have cast, but I notice that the senior Senator from Ohio has made a disclaimer, it having been charged upon him that he had Cuban bonds. The same thing has been charged upon me by some irresponsible parties, that I probably had Cuban bonds or had been offered Cuban bonds.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator want to know whether I have any Cuban bonds or not?

Mr. GALLINGER. No. What I was about to say was that this talk to the effect that men are influenced by bonds, either Spanish or Cuban, is getting to be very common in the newspapers, and I do not think we ought to dignify it in the debates in the Senate. That is the way I feel about it. Now I will ask the Senator whether he has ever seen any quotations of these Spanish bonds in price lists in this country?

Mr. ALLEN. I have.

Mr. GALLINGER. And does the Senator really believe that they are held in this country to any very considerable extent?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know how reliable the information is that I have, as in the nature of things I could not have strictly accurate information of the amount, but I have been informed that from $100,000,000 to $120,000,000—I am speaking of the bonds issued by the Spanish Government against Cuba and held in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had not supposed that to be true. Of course I had no knowledge whatever, and I asked for information. I did not know but that the Senator might know something definitely about it.

Mr. ALLEN. I give it to the Senator as I received it.

Now, Mr. President, there is one influence that is opposed to the recognition of the Republic of Cuba simply because the destruction of Spanish sovereignty in Cuba at this time would destroy that debt.

There is another influence at work against the recognition of Cuba. When the Senator from New Hampshire asked me a question a moment ago, I said I disclaimed at the outset in plain language any intention of imputing that the President knows or knew anything about it. I do not think he knows. I do not think he even knows anything more than any citizen gathering his information from the press. But I am not prepared to say that influence has not affected Congress. I do not want to be misunderstood. We know that constituents exercise a powerful influence on the course of Senators and Representatives from the money States. When rightfully exercised, it is proper. I am not disclosing a political secret that the humblest citizen does not know when I say the financial and business interests of a constituency are consulted and have a powerful influence in those sections where money controls.

I say that so far as evidence goes, that so far as you can deduce a conclusion from the existence of a fact or a group of facts, this influence has been in Congress and it is now here. The world ought to know, as we do, that the agents of this syndicate have been in this Capitol and are here to-day. And what are they here for? Not for their health, evidently, and not through patriotic motives. They are here to shape the course of legislation as far as that can be done from the outside.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator name one of these men? I have not seen them.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, that is an old dodge to ask, "Will the Senator name someone?" It has become a chestnut.

Mr. GALLINGER. But as a matter of fact——

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator will name to a committee someone, if it is necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator ought to name them here.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. If those men are around here trying to corrupt Congress I think we ought to know who they are.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. None of them have approached me. Probably I am not of sufficient account.

Mr. ALLEN. They have not approached me, I am glad to say, but I see them. It is not necessary that a crow should approach me that I should know that it is a crow. When it flies over we can see it, and sometimes it gets in such close proximity that we can smell it.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator would not hesitate to say it was a crow?

Mr. ALLEN. But I would not want to say it was Jim Crow, or any other particular crow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is as near as the Senator is to it. He does not know whether it is Jim Crow or any other kind of crow.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator knows very well that I am treading very closely to the truth in this statement.

Now, Mr. President, there is another influence. Does any man suppose an agent of that kind has a patriotic motive. We might as well say that a jackal preying on his victim feels compassion for him, as to say such a man is inspired by patriotism. Mr. President, he knows no country and no flag; he is the enemy of all government, so far as it may conflict with his financial interests. He is a political Ishmaelite. His hand is against every government, and every government's hand ought to be against him.

Mr. President, there is still another influence. We can not shut our eyes to what we see in the press, even after making due allowance for exaggeration. Suppose we discount 50 per cent of what we read as exaggeration, just as a cautious lawyer when questioning a proposed witness before placing him on the stand will discount 50 per cent of what he says as untrue, or incapable of proof. Then we have, after the discount is made, we find we have another powerful factor in this country, opposed to the recognition of the Cuban Republic. It is represented by American and English financiers. I suppose that is the proper name to give them, for it would not do to call them a harsher name, for every man who has a spoonful of brains and a pocket full of money, though he may have robbed the dead to get it, regards himself as a financier.

These English and American financiers represent, it is said, $200,000,000, and want to buy out the Island of Cuba and set up a government of their own there, something like that of Hawaii, that will permit them to loot every poor devil from the eastern to the western point of the island. It has been stated in the press, and some Senator may know more about it than I do—I only know of it as I get it in the papers, for I am not thrown into contact with this class of men—that they have organized to purchase Cuba from Spain. They will never permit the recognition of the Republic of Cuba—never, Mr. President—as long as water runs down hill and grass grows, unless the Cubans will pledge themselves, their property, their bodies and souls, to the payment of that and an additional indebtedness. It is a gigantic international hold-up. The Cubans are told to stand and deliver, and a mortgage is to be placed on their country that will enslave them and their children for generations.

Mr. HOAR. How much is this debt that the Senator speaks of?

Mr. ALLEN. I am not speaking about a debt now. I am speaking about a syndicate that is going to purchase Cuba.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interrupt the Senator unless he is willing. The point of my question is this: I heard the debt stated by some gentleman on this floor at $500,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. I gave it from the New York Commercial a few days ago. That paper on the 4th of this month in its leading editorial stated the debt to be $519,000,000.

Mr. HOAR. What would be the value, financially, of a pledge of a people of fifteen hundred thousand at the end of this war to pay a debt of $519,000,000?

Mr. ALLEN. I am not discussing that point, but I will come to it later.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator understands the subject much better than I do. Does he not think that such a proposition would be treated by a good many people as rather ridiculous, and they would not be thought to have much financial sense if they supposed that the pledge was worth anything?

Mr. ALLEN. Let us see how accurate the Senator from Massachusetts is in his deduction.

Mr. HOAR. I merely put a question. I did not express an opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. I can not express any opinion because there is no statement upon which an opinion could be predicated. How far would financiers take the pledge of fifteen hundred thousand people in Cuba for a debt of $519,000,000? The Senator loses sight of the potential possibilities of that people and its increase of population and its development of industries in the next four or five or ten years.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to make a suggestion in this connection?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I have never seen one of those bonds, but I understand that the pledge is of the revenues from the customs duties for the payment of the interest. The interest on $519,000,000 at 4 per cent—and I understand their bonds are 4 per cent—is $20,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. No; they are five and six per cent bonds.

Mr. BACON. Twenty million dollars a year is very much less than Spain has been in the habit of collecting each year as her revenue from Cuba. So the security is not the insignificant one that the Senator from Massachusetts would suggest. I do not know that I am correct, but if that is the correct statement the Senator will perceive that the present revenues of Cuba would be a very material security for that amount.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. That would be a debt nearly double that of the most debt-burdened nation in the world.

Mr. BACON. It is an immense debt; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. HOAR. I speak with great deference, because the Senator from Nebraska is a financier in the sense of a man who has given great study to that class of questions, but not a dealer in bonds at all; and therefore I wish to get his judgment. I suppose, with great deference to the Senator, that there is not a financier on the face of the earth who would practically regard the obligation of Cuba to pay a debt of $519,000,000 at the end of this struggle as of the slightest value whatever.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. However, I should like to finish what I have to say, as it is getting late.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. ALLEN. No; go on.

Mr. MILLS. The representatives of the Cuban government state officially that the taxation they pay to Spain annually is $26,000,000. That is more than 4 per cent on $500,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. But $700,000 of that amount is spent in the Island of Cuba. All the rest is taken away.

Mr. MILLS. Of that amount only $700,000 is spent in Cuba. They pay a taxation equivalent to more than 4 per cent on $500,000,000 of debt. Of course the bondholder never wants a debt paid, but the bondholder is interested in the prompt payment of the interest. The principal is a permanent investment, and no holder of any bond in the world which pays a good interest wants to have the principal paid.

Mr. HOAR. If I may make one observation, there are a good many American States which have treated a much smaller burden of debt than that as such a burden upon their inhabitants and upon their resources as to make it utterly impossible to be borne.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not hear the Senator from Massachusetts, but I will proceed to close my remarks as speedily as possible. I had no idea of talking ten minutes when I rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question, not for the purpose of debate at all, but only for information?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I noticed in a little colloquy we had the other day on the subject that the Senator spoke of Cuban bonds, and I replied by saying Spanish bonds. The Senator understands that all of this indebtedness is Spanish indebtedness, does he?

Mr. ALLEN. It is all Spanish indebtedness charged against Cuba.

Mr. SPOONER. A large part of it is secured by an attempt to hypothecate the customs?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; the revenues.

Mr. SPOONER. There never has been any Cuban obligation, so to speak, has there?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is right. In all my reference to bonds I do not refer to any supposed bonds issued by the present republican government of Cuba or the Cuban junta, or whatever you may call it. I mean the bonds issued by Spain, the payment of which is chargeable to the revenues of Cuba.

Mr. SPOONER. What led me to ask the question in part was because, in looking over a book of statistics last night which stated the debt of Spain, there was reference to an external debt of Spain, guaranteed by Spain, and I did not know but that there might be some colonial debt or something of the sort. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was only trying to get at the fact.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. Now, Mr. President, one word in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts—I regret that he has gone—and I will return to the point where I was interrupted by him and try to finish. If the Senator from Massachusetts were permitted to put a question and answer it himself he could defeat any man in this Chamber in argument, and in this case he did put and answer his own question to me before leaving the Chamber.

Mr. President, the financiers of any country would jump at an opportunity of getting a mortgage on the revenues of the Island of Cuba for $500,000,000. The island has almost unlimited possibilities of growth in population and wealth. So the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts carries no weight with it.

But I was talking of the syndicate that was to purchase the island, the syndicate representing, as has been stated, a capital of $200,000,000. When the Senator from Massachusetts interrupted me, I was saying that influence has been present in Washington, and is now here antagonizing the Republic of Cuba. I am saying nothing more than any ordinarily intelligent reader of current news knows to be a fact.

Here, then, are two powerful influences against recognition. They have been felt in business circles. Their influence is felt in politics; it is felt everywhere, and it is due to those influences, supplemented by another I will mention briefly that has, in my judgment, resulted in the defeat of the amendment recognizing Cuban independence.

Sir, I want to speak of a third influence, and it is also of a financial character. All of them seem to be financial, for they could not be humane under the circumstances. I want to speak of another influence that has worked against Cuban recognition and that is the franchise syndicate organized in this country, the purpose of which is to control every valuable franchise in Cuba, and many could be named. That influence does not want the present Republic of Cuba recognized until it shall have had an opportunity to put its hands on Cuba and shape its government and fit and mold it to its purposes.

And so, Mr. President, there are altogether three powerful agencies or influences, every one of them sinister in their purposes, that have antagonized the recognition of Cuba. But, Mr. President, there is not a Christian organization in the United States, nor a church among the many hundreds of thousands; there is not a university, college or common school, or an honest man or woman who is disinterested, that is not in favor of the unconditional recognition of the present Republic of Cuba.

But these influences are against it. Every patriotic sentiment, every impulse of justice, every consideration that would move disinterested and high-minded men, has been and is in favor of recognition. Every Shylock, every greedy, slimy buzzard who has sought to make a fortune or assist others to do so out of the death and blood and suffering of the men, women, and children of Cuba, have been against recognition, and their influence has been felt in Congress and in this Capitol.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, unintentionally no doubt, makes his statement a little too strong. A very distinguished clergyman in my State, a man whose motives have never been impeached or questioned, circulated a petition asking the Senators from New Hampshire not to vote for the independence of Cuba, and one of the strongest letters I have received urging me to vote for it came from a distinguished banker in my State.

Mr. ALLEN. There are exceptions.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the Senator's statement is too broad. With the Senator's permission—because he is very courteous—I want to say as to the matter of the Spanish bonds that a gentleman representing one of the largest banks in the city of Boston, a man whose word would be taken by any person who knows him, has communicated to me the fact that he has never seen a Spanish bond in this country, that he never heard of one in a bank in this country, and that he does not believe that there is a Spanish bond in this country unless brought here in the pockets of a Spaniard. That is the opinion of a distinguished banker, who has business relations with other banks in all the great cities of this country, and who, it seems to me, in his business transactions would have known something on that point if there were very many Spanish bonds in the United States, and the Senator from Nebraska says there are over a hundred millions.

Mr. ALLEN. I am always very glad to be interrupted by the Senator from New Hampshire, but how valuable the suggestion is—that a banker has never seen a Spanish bond, and therefore he does not believe such a bond exists—I do not know.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLEN. The King of Siam called an English traveler a liar who said that water congealed into ice in his country, because the King had never seen such a thing in Siam. There is no force in such a suggestion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will allow me, on what evidence does he say that there are any Spanish bonds in this country?

Mr. ALLEN. Was the Senator here a moment ago when I made my statement?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was not, but I understood the Senator had stated that there were more than a hundred million of Spanish bonds in this country.

Mr. ALLEN. What I said will appear in my remarks.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I want to know the ground for the Senator's statement.

Mr. ALLEN. I made my statement upon press dispatches and press discussions.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not suppose, until the Senator made the statement, that anybody really believed that there was a Spanish bond in this country.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not suppose there was a man in the United States who doubted it, and I presume that the Senator from Connecticut is the sole exception.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have cited the fact that a very distinguished banker in Boston says he doubts it.

Mr. ALLEN. Why talk about "distinguished bankers?" Can we not talk about the common people and "common bankers?"

Mr. GALLINGER. We can talk about men who have paid special attention to such matters.

Mr. ALLEN. Can not we talk about a banker without referring to him as being "distinguished?" For what is he distinguished?

Mr. GALLINGER. Distinguished in the business world.

Mr. ALLEN. Is he distinguished for the rate of interest he charges and the discounts he makes?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all; because on the loans he made in Nebraska he has lost both principal and interest in most cases.

Mr. ALLEN. The distinguished banker has made no loans in Nebraska, or, if he has, he had a fool for an agent to make them, who probably came from the town where "the distinguished banker" lives.

But, Mr. President, aside from the remarks I have made, I desire to say but little else, and I hope I may be permitted to conclude, for the peace of mind of the Senate as well as my own, but I want to enter my protest against this namby-pamby rot that has grown up in the Senate of referring to every man as "a distinguished man." Every time we happen to refer to a man in this Chamber he is either a "very learned professor," or a "very gallant soldier," or a "very distinguished banker," or an "exceptionally bright and experienced surgeon," as the case may be.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. ALLEN. The "poor common fellow" who is just an "ordinary banker," an "ordinary soldier," or an "ordinary professor," or an "ordinary divine or lawyer," or whatever his occupation may be, is never referred to here.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, on more than a score of occasions in addressing the Senate—and when I have asked courtesies from the Senator from Nebraska he has never denied me—I have alluded to the Senator as "the distinguished Senator from Nebraska."

Mr. ALLEN. That was an error, Mr. President. [Laughter.] I have sometimes thought that some man would do this world good who would take up and discuss what the great unknown man in the world has accomplished, the man whose name, or the men whose names, have never been mentioned.

Mr. HOAR. Why do you call him the "great unknown?" [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Well, then, the unknown, if that will suit you better.

Now, Mr. President, that is a mirthful remark of the Senator from Massachusetts. There are times when men can see mirth in their own sayings when nobody else can see it. [Laughter.] But let that pass.

I want to say that these influences I have mentioned have conspired against the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, and no amount of tittering, no amount of laughter or mirth-making in this Chamber or elsewhere, will disparage or obscure the fact I have stated.

Here are Spanish-Cuban bondholders, the proposed purchasers of the Island of Cuba, and the franchise syndicate, all cooperating hand in hand to destroy Gomez and his army and the Republic and set up a plastic government of their own and place at the head of it a tool, and control its legislative and judicial and executive branches in their own interest.

Mr. President, if in the light of these facts, in the light of these circumstances, now apparent as they must be—and they will become more apparent as the weeks roll around—Senators want to defend themselves and their action denying the Cuban people recognition, I am willing they should, but I am sorry to be compelled to believe that the time has come in the history of this great Republic of ours when such sinister influences could so fasten themselves upon public men and upon a great public measure and defeat the recognition of the Cuban Republic.

And one word more, and I will yield to my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], as I see he is impatient, and when I trespass on his patience I am ready to believe I have exhausted the patience of everyone else—one word more, because this is all I will have to say on this question, so long as we hereafter keep in the beaten pathway.

I want to see a policy adopted by the United States that will go further than any that has been announced from the other side of the Chamber, from this, or from the White House. Whether I shall remain in public life or go out of it, I will always give every influence I possess to the end that this Government shall put under republican form of government every foot of the Western Hemisphere as speedily as that can be done. I have nothing to secrete about my views of that question. I would not forcibly colonize Central and South America, nor the islands, but, Mr. President, whenever any portion of the people of one of those countries should arise in rebellion, asserting the right of self-government, I would recognize them as a republic and enforce their recognition upon the world.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Nebraska wish to proceed now?

Mr. THURSTON. I wish to occupy but a few moments, and I should prefer to go on now.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a case was set for trial this evening in executive session.

Mr. THURSTON. I assure the Senator that I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments, and I should like to proceed now.

Mr. President, nothing ever comes from thrashing over old straw but chaff and dust. The joint resolution passed by the two Houses of Congress was signed by the President of the United States at 11 o'clock and 24 minutes this morning. It is now a part of the law of the land. The policy of that resolution is not in whole the original policy of the Executive as disclosed by his message; it is not, as a whole, the policy of the House of Representatives as disclosed by its first action; it is not, as a whole, the policy of the Senate as disclosed by its first vote; but, Mr. President, to-day it is the policy of all the branches of this Government and of all the people of the United States. At 11 o'clock and 24 minutes to-day, Mr. President, the time for party discussion ended. I stood here on the floor of the Senate with ten Republicans and I voted just as long as there was a hope with the Democrats upon the other side for the recognition of the Republic of Cuba. From first to last I voted my conscience and my judgment. I deprecated any action, I deprecated any speech, that could possibly be shaded with a partisan meaning.

Up to the time that this joint resolution became a law, it was a proper thing for all Senators to express their views and to criticise the views of others. I did regret that certain Senators on this side, Republican Senators, found it necessary on yesterday to charge from this floor the Democrats upon the other side with having voted against the joint resolution that is now the law. I also regretted the countercharge made upon the other side that certain Republicans on this side voted against the joint resolution which is now the law. On the first vote that adopted those resolutions in the Senate sixty-seven Senators voted for them. Those who voted against sustaining the conference report afterwards did not thereby reverse their action on that vote, and I stand here as a Republican to say that those sixty-seven men, thus committed to the resolutions which are now the law, did support them and never wavered in their support because of the vote passed on the conference report.

I also say, Mr. President, and it is true, that all but two of the twenty-one Senators who first voted against those resolutions did to all intents and purposes vote for them, and made them the law of the land on the final vote upon that conference report; and the true record stands that the Senators on this floor, Republicans and Democrats and Populists and Free Silver Republicans, or what you please, all of them voted at one time or another for these resolutions which are now a law, except three Senators.

Mr. President, we have raised the flag of the United States, and all American hands are outstretched to keep it in the sky, to bear it to victory against the enemies of our country. Let us not weaken the upholding hands by any further partisan discussion, by charges and countercharges as to which particular party has done the most to raise on high the standard of liberty and humanity.

Mr. President, there will come a time on the hustings at the fall elections and before the people when partisan debate may be resumed. Let us wait until then. Until Cuba is free, until the single star of that republic takes its place in the diadem of nations, until the hungry women and children are fed, until Spain is driven from the Western World, for God's sake let us rally around the flag without distinction of party, stop our party quibbles, and be American citizens for the honor and glory of our common country.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope we can have an understanding now respecting a conclusion of the sundry civil bill. I believe it has been concluded with the exception of two amendments which have been reserved by the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I ask at this time that there may be placed in the bill an amendment which I think will be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator, as I understand, is trying to make an arrangement as to what is to be done about proceeding with the amendments to the sundry civil bill. We have another matter set for trial this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator had listened to me for a single moment further he would have seen that it is not my purpose to occupy any time this evening.

Mr. PETTUS. It does occupy time to consider other amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, when the arrangement to which he has referred was made last night I distinctly stated that I should object to it unless the sundry civil bill was completed before that matter should be taken up. It was then stated that the arrangement to which the Senator refers could go on to-morrow evening. Now, I am trying to so arrange as to consume as little time as possible in the completion of the sundry civil bill, which, I think Senators will all agree, is an important thing to do. The amendment which I propose to offer is an amendment which has been suggested to me by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which it is important and necessary should pass, as I believe it will pass, without amendment and without debate. It relates to the amount of the Bering Sea award to the British Government. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has made a special request, as have other Senators of the Foreign Relations Committee, that the amendment be placed on the sundry civil bill instead of on the deficiency bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I am not objecting to any amendment, but I am objecting to a violation of a positive agreement of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to state for the benefit of the Senator from Alabama, who probably did not hear—indeed, I doubt whether it was possible for him to hear—the arrangement as entered into at the time the agreement to vote upon the Alabama case was entered into. For the purpose of allowing the Senator from Massachusetts an opportunity to be heard on that case, it was suggested that it ought to be disposed of to-day. The Senator from Iowa in charge of the pending bill suggested that he would not object to that arrangement if it did not interfere with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and he was assured that such interference would not occur, and, if it did, that the Alabama case would go over until Thursday. I believe the Senator from Alabama did not hear that portion of the conversation.

Mr. PETTUS. I was here and heard everything that was said.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will yield to me a moment—I certainly wish no controversy with any Senator about the agreement which was made last evening——

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire the Senate, if it will, to pass upon the amendment, and then I shall desire to ask unanimous consent that the two reserved amendments now pending be voted upon to-morrow at 1 o'clock without further debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want just three minutes to explain my position on those amendments.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he say ten minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, I will say that ten minutes debate be allowed, five minutes on each side, and that then the vote be taken on the reserved amendments.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not understand that there are any amendments reserved. I do not understand that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been adopted in the Senate, and there is one particular amendment about which I desire to make an explanation, which will not take long.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up to-morrow at the close of the routine morning business, and that we proceed under the five-minute rule of debate without interruption until it is completed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to allow his amendment to be adopted before making that request.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 141, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

BERING SEA AWARDS.

To enable the President to pay to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty the amount awarded by the commissioners appointed pursuant to the stipulations of the convention of February 8, 1896, between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the settlement of the claim presented by the latter against the former in virtue of the convention of February 29, 1892, $473,151.26. This appropriation is made without the admission that any liability exists for any loss of prospective profits to British vessels engaged in pelagic fur sealing or for interest on the sums awarded to Great Britain, and without admitting the authority of the arbitrators to make any award on the basis of damages for the arrest or detention of vessels not included in the submission contained in the treaty.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he insert the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. ALLISON. I modify the amendment by inserting the words "to be immediately available" after the amount appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made, and the words "to be immediately available" will be inserted after the amount "$473,151.26." The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that the money will be due under the stipulations of the treaty on the 16th of June next.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may be proceeded with to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business shall have been concluded, and that the amendments to it shall be considered and debated under the five-minute rule, what we know as Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Iowa for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTUS. I think the five-minute rule is too short. I do not expect, myself, to make any argument at all, but I have an amendment to propose to the bill, which may require more time than that.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Alabama may have an important amendment, I am perfectly willing that an exception shall be made as to the amendment to be offered by him, and that he may have such time as he may desire to present his argument for the amendment. I do not know, however, what the amendment is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa with the modification made in reference to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]? The Chair hears none, and that is the order.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 21, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 20, 1898.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Louis W. Eldridge, of Lewistown, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Lewistown, Mont.

John Horsky, of Helena, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Helena, Mont.

Andrew J. Edsall, of Bozeman, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Bozeman, Mont.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Frank D. Hobbs, of Salt Lake City, Utah, to be register of the land office at Salt Lake City, Utah.

Edward Brassey, of Lewistown, Mont., to be register of the land office at Lewistown, Mont.

George D. Greene, of Boulder, Mont., to be register of the land office at Helena, Mont.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY—TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Artillery arm.

Sergt. Samuel C. Vestal, Company E, Second Infantry.
Corpl. Thomas H. R. McIntyre, Company E, Fifth Infantry.

Sergt. Maj. Robert McCleave, First Infantry.
Corpl. Richard H. McMaster, Company D, Tenth Infantry.

Infantry arm.

Sergt. John Robertson, Troop C, Second Cavalry.
Private James V. Heidt, general service.
Sergt. Joseph D. Bradley, Company D, Twelth Infantry.
Sergt. Charles S. Lincoln, Company B, Second Infantry.
Corpl. Patrick H. Mullay, Troop B, Sixth Cavalry.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPROVAL OF CUBAN JOINT RESOLUTION.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution of the following title:

On April 20, 1898:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 283) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

[The announcement of the approval of the joint resolution was received with applause.]

PRINTING OF CERTAIN MILITARY PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 150, and put the same upon its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE in the chair). The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized to print, in excess of the 1,000 copies authorized by the act of January 12, 1895, such extra number of copies of the military publications of the War Department as may be necessary for the instruction of the National Guard of the various States.

Resolved, That there be printed for immediate distribution by the Secretary of War to the National Guard of the various States the following manuals, regulations, and drill books:

Three thousand copies of Infantry Drill Regulations.
One thousand copies of Cavalry Drill Regulations.
One thousand five hundred copies of Light Artillery Drill Regulations.
One thousand copies of Manual of Drill for the Hospital Corps.
Three thousand copies of Manual of Arms, Infantry Drill.
Three thousand copies of Army Regulations.
Five hundred copies of Regulations Pertaining to Uniforms.
Five hundred copies of Military Laws of the United States.
Five thousand copies of Manual for Army Cooks.
One thousand copies of Handbook of Subsistence Stores.
One thousand copies of Manual for Subsistence Department.
One thousand copies of Manual for Medical Department.
One thousand copies of Manual for Quartermaster's Department.
Five hundred copies of Paymaster's Manual.
Two hundred copies of Manual of Photography.

Also, that there be printed the following:

Three thousand copies of Infantry Drill Regulations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Six hundred copies of Cavalry Drill Regulations, of which 200 shall be for the use of the Senate and 400 for the use of the House of Representatives.

One thousand five hundred copies of Light Artillery Drill Regulations, of which 500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Two thousand copies of Manual of Arms, Infantry Drill, of which 650 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Three thousand copies of Army Regulations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Two thousand copies of the Military Laws of the United States, of which 650 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I desire to have the following letter read.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 19, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the necessity of passing Senate joint resolution No. 150, which passed the Senate yesterday (page 4453, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD). As you will see by my letter (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4426), these publications are at present neither for sale nor for distribution. Both Houses of Congress, as well as the War Department, are deluged with applications from hundreds of officers and men of the militia, who are in great want of drill tactics, etc.

Yours, truly,
A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. GEORGE D. PERKINS,
Chairman Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. PERKINS. The publications called for under the resolution are regarded as urgent by the War Department, and the letters referring to the publication and which were submitted in the other body in connection with its passage will be found on the pages of the RECORD indicated in the letter that I have just had read.

Under the law, however, of 1895, in all cases where Congress orders additional copies printed it is provided that the "usual number" shall be printed. In this case it is not necessary to print the usual number, and I wish to submit an amendment to the resolution which I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add on page 3, after line 18, the words:
"Under this resolution the usual number not to be printed."

There being no objection, the amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 227) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. Res. 150. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department;

S. 4420. An act providing for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed concurrent resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, and the testimony and reports of consuls, 7,500 for the use of the Senate and 12,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Also:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 6,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2768) for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion and to grant him an honorable discharge; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 140. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3111. An act granting a pension to Cornelia M. Mason—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4420. An act providing for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Printing.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 34—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 6,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 36—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence and the testimony and reports of consuls, 7,500 for the use of the Senate and 12,500 for the use of the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the bill for the reorganization of the Army, but is a bill to authorize the President to call for volunteers. The bill has been considered in committee, the report is being written, and there are only a few amendments, which the committee can explain in a minute. As the report can not be read at this moment, I will say that the amendments simply provide for changing the bill as submitted by the Department so that the governors of the States shall absolutely commission all regimental and company officers and organize the companies and regiments before they can be mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend allow me to suggest that this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest that it be first read before unanimous consent is given for its consideration. I ask that the bill be reported.

Mr. HULL. Of course it is right for it to be read. I will say that I have had a letter from the Secretary of War urging its immediate passage. I have had a telephone message from the White House this morning, urging that it be adopted to-day, and a dispatch has just been laid on my desk from the Secretary of War, saying that it is imperatively necessary for this measure to be at once considered.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa if it makes any change in existing law, except to authorize the President to call for volunteers?

Mr. HULL. None at all.

Mr. BAILEY. And leaves the volunteers——

Mr. HULL. That is, as the committee amends it, it makes no change in the methods by which volunteers have always been organized under our laws.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the committee report unanimous?

Mr. HULL. A unanimous report, as I understand it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question for information about this bill. Does not this bill give the President of the United States the right to commission the colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, and so forth, in the volunteer service, which right has always been given heretofore to the governors of the States?

Mr. MARSH. It does not.

Mr. HULL. The bill as submitted gives the President that right, on the nomination of the governors of the States, but the committee have unanimously changed that so as to leave it entirely in the hands of the governors of the States.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this the bill which was recommitted the other day?

Mr. HULL. This is not the bill which was recommitted the other day, but a bill that was submitted by the War Department and introduced by me for the first time yesterday.

Mr. HENDERSON. An entirely new bill?

Mr. HULL. An entirely new bill, on different lines and for entirely different purposes.

Mr. McEWAN. I should like to ask whether this bill provides for a permanent increase in the number of men in the Regular Army and the number of officers?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has nothing whatever to do with the organization of the Army. It simply provides that the President may call for volunteers and commission major-generals, brigadier-generals of volunteers, and staff officers, as he must have the power to do before he can go on.

Mr. LOW and Mr. COOPER of Texas asked that the bill be read.

Mr. HULL. I suggest that the Clerk read the bill as amended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be so read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all able-bodied male citizens of the United States, and persons of foreign birth who shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States under and in pursuance of the laws thereof, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, are hereby declared to constitute the national forces, and, with such exceptions and under such conditions as may be prescribed by law, shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the organized and active land forces of the United States shall consist of the Army of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States: Provided, That in time of war the Army shall consist of two branches which, shall be designated, respectively, as the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the Regular Army is the permanent military establishment, which is maintained both in peace and war according to law.

SEC. 4. That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force: Provided, That all enlistments for the Volunteer Army shall be for a term of three years, unless sooner terminated, and that all officers and men composing said army shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished, or on the conclusion of hostilities.

SEC. 5. That when it becomes necessary to raise a Volunteer Army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for: Provided, That all men received into service in the Volunteer Army shall, as far as practicable be taken from the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population.

SEC. 6. That the Volunteer Army and the militia of the States when called into the service of the United States shall be organized under, and shall be subject to, the laws, orders, and regulations governing the Regular Army: Provided, That each regiment of the Volunteer Army shall have one surgeon and one assistant surgeon, and that all the regimental and company officers shall be appointed by the governors of the States in which their respective organizations are raised: Provided further, That when the members of any company, troop, battery or battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, as such company or regiment, the regimental and company officers in service with the militia organization thus enlisting may be appointed by the governors of the States.

SEC. 7. That all organizations of the Volunteer Army shall be so recruited from time to time as to maintain them as near to their maximum strength as the President may deem necessary, and no new organization shall be accepted into service from any State unless the organizations already in service from such State are as near to their maximum strength of officers and enlisted men as the President may deem necessary.

SEC. 8. That all returns and muster rolls of organizations of the Volunteer Army and of militia organizations while in the service of the United States shall be rendered to the Adjutant-General of the Army, and upon the disbandment of such organizations the records pertaining to them shall be transferred to and filed in the Record and Pension Office of the War Department.

SEC. 9. That in time of war, or when war is imminent, the troops in the service of the United States, whether belonging to the Regular or Volunteer Army or to the militia, shall be organized, as far as practicable, into divisions of three brigades, each brigade to be composed of three or more regiments; and whenever three or more divisions are assembled in the same army the President is authorized to organize them into army corps, each corps to consist of not more than three divisions.

SEC. 10. That the staff of the commander of an army corps shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 inspector-general, 1 chief quartermaster, 1 chief commissary of subsistence, and 1 chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of colonel; 1 assistant adjutant-general, who shall have the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a division shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 inspector-general, 1 chief quartermaster, 1 chief commissary of subsistence, and 1 chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a brigade shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 assistant quartermaster, and 1 commissary of subsistence, each with the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of the Volunteer Army, or may be assigned by him, in his discretion, from officers of the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

SEC. 11. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint in the Volunteer Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding one major-general for each organized army corps and division, and one brigadier-general for each brigade, and any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein: Provided, That each general officer of the Volunteer Army shall be entitled to the number of aids-de-camp authorized for an officer of like grade in the Regular Army.

SEC. 12. That all officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army, and of the militia of the States when in the service of the United States, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as that of officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Army.

SEC. 13. That the President may, upon the recommendation of the governors of States, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army: Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be commissioned in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

SEC. 14. That the general commanding a separate department or a detached army is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the Volunteer Army to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said army within his command: Provided, That each member of the board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into: And provided further, That if the report of such a board is adverse to the continuance of any officer, and the report be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from service in the Volunteer Army, at the discretion of the President, with one month's pay and allowances.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have thought of insisting on the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole, but in view of the amendments to be offered by the committee, as I understand them——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is so important and involves such a possible expenditure that it ought to have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I am entirely willing that it be considered, but think it should be considered under the rules of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. I will ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the bill is of such importance as to justify the demand for its consideration in Committee of the Whole. Is there a report accompanying it?

Mr. HULL. The report is now on the Clerk's desk. It only amends a couple of sections.

Mr. McMILLIN. Members have been unable to get the report. It provides for a very grave and important emergency, and entails necessarily a very heavy expense, and I think that for that reason it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. The report has not been printed, so that it could be on the desks of members.

Mr. HULL. I am very anxious to accommodate myself to the wishes of the House, but it seems to me that we could have it considered safely in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and if it is as important as the executive officers of the Government think it, the sooner we get through the consideration of the bill the better.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am as anxious for its consideration as my friend, and as zealous in furthering its purpose, and I speak the sentiment of all around me on the subject. But I think it is well to consider it in that way that we consider measures involving heavy expense.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does his asking unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole include considering it for amendment under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HULL. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do I understand the gentleman is asking unanimous consent to consider it?

Mr. HULL. It will take unanimous consent to consider it at all. I submit that request, for unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We will not agree to that.

Mr. HULL. Then I ask unanimous consent for its consideration, and the rule will govern it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. Ask its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no objection to unanimous consent to consider the bill. Ask your unanimous consent to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. I will ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill just read.

Mr. McMILLIN. We are entirely willing to have that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9944. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that general debate may be considered as closed, and that we proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule, with the understanding that ample time will be given to express views upon any points raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that general debate be considered as closed, and that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that, except that I should prefer the gentleman from Iowa would undertake to explain the whole bill at one time and in one connection. There is no report. Many of us are not even aware of the amendments the committee have recommended. I believe a connected explanation of the whole bill would be preferable to reserving a discussion as each——

Mr. HULL. I will say to my friend from Texas that I could do it in the five minutes, but will do it at once.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, and on the opposite side so far as politics is concerned, I claim the right to make a statement in regard to this bill, and not to be limited to five minutes.

Mr. GAINES. That is right.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the first reading of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. We have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas to ask a question.

Mr. SAYERS. From the examination of the bill, with the amendments to be proposed by the committee, which I have been able to give to it, I think it a very proper measure; but there is one point, and only one point, that I desire to have the gentleman in charge of the bill explain to the committee. I ask his attention to the closing paragraph of section 10, commencing with line 13. If I understand the provision of this section correctly, it provides that all the staff officers of the corps, division, and brigade commanders shall be appointed by the President without reference to recommendation by the governors of the States. I wish the gentleman to inform the committee why this departure from the method of the appointment of line officers.

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the organization of the regiment proper, from colonel down, was regarded as belonging to the governors of the States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That has never been the custom with general officers.

Mr. HULL. There never has been a time in the history of the volunteer force that the appointment of general officers was in the power of governors of the States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Or the members of the staff of the volunteer corps, either.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Would it not in operation turn out that the quotas of a great many of the States will not furnish enough for an independent brigade, division, or army corps, and would they not thus have to have commissions signed by different governors?

Mr. HULL. Yes. The President must have the power to appoint general officers. There is no difficulty about that, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, many of us would like to hear the gentleman from Iowa, but can not hear one word that he says.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can make no progress unless the committee is in order, and certainly the whole committee can not stand around about the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this bill in its general provisions follows the past history of the Government in the organization of the volunteer force. The governors of the various States organize the volunteer regiments, commissioning all officers of the regiment. The President commissions all major and brigadier generals and staff officers of brigade, division, and corps commanders. To deprive the President of this power would destroy the efficiency of the Army. Further, I do not believe you have the right to take away from the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, the right to appoint general officers and their staff.

It is, as reported, substantially on the line of the entire organization of the volunteer force during our civil war; it is on the line of the organization of the volunteer force for the Mexican war. The bill as originally submitted provided that the governors of the States should nominate the regimental officers, but that the President should commission them on the nomination of the governors of the different States; but the committee believed that was not the proper way to organize the regiments, and unanimously changed the language of the bill so that the governor of each State has absolute power to organize the regiment for his State and tender it to the President of the United States, to be mustered into the volunteer service.

The joint resolution passed by both Houses authorized the President to use the entire militia force of the United States, if he desires to; but his contention or theory, I think I am safe in saying, is that if we are to have a war, under that joint resolution it must be fought by the volunteer force of the United States and not by the militia. Militia can be used to repel invasion, but not to invade a foreign country. This bill was introduced as submitted by the War Department, met the approval of all of the executive officers of the Government, and was passed upon by the committee, whose amendments have been explained. This morning the Secretary of War says that the bill is of such importance that we should at once change it to meet the wishes of the committee by having the governor commission all the officers up to and including the rank of colonel.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I entirely agree, but I want to suggest to the gentleman, in the light of our experience in the last war, whether it would not be wise to place in the bill a peremptory requirement that the surgeons of the various regiments organized should keep the record much more perfect than anything which has heretofore been done, so that the condition of every soldier on every day could be ascertained and reported, under the provisions of this bill, to the Surgeon-General's Office in the city of Washington.

Mr. SAYERS. That would be a matter of regulation.

Mr. HULL. That is a matter of regulation and not a matter for legislation, but I have no objection to it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, if I remember right, in the last war the officers of the regiment were appointed by the governors of the States, and after they got into the service if an officer had to be cashiered or a promotion was to be made, that was done by the President——

Mr. MARSH. Oh, no.

Mr. HULL. No; the governor filled all vacancies.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If there was a promotion made, was it made by the governor?

Mr. HULL. Promotions were made by the governor up to and including the rank of colonel.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would not interrupt the gentleman at this time but for the fact that I have to go into a conference committee very soon. I noticed in the newspapers a statement that there was to be a civil-service examination for all officers of the State militia mustered into the service of the United States with their organizations. I see that the provisions as to that have been stricken out of the bill, but I want to call attention to section 5, where it provides:

That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for.

Now, what I want to inquire is, is it the design to compel the officers who shall be appointed by the governors of the various States to submit to an examination by some board appointed by the Secretary of War as to their competency and fitness to hold a commission which is given them by the governor?

Mr. HULL. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from New York that this section providing for an examination and organization to be received into the service means an entirely different thing than what was attempted to be provided for in section 6. When these companies and regiments are ready to be mustered in, they are examined by a surgeon as to their physical qualification.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is the same old law we had in the civil war.

Mr. HULL. It is the same provision that we had in the civil war. Section 6 provided for officers——

Mr. RAY of New York. I only wanted the gentleman to assure the House that there is nothing in that section providing for a civil-service examination as to the fitness of the officers commissioned by the governors of the several States.

Mr. HULL. It could not be subject to such an interpretation as that.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this bill, as it was sent to our committee from the War Department, provided that the officers should be appointed by the President. That has been stricken out, and the governor is authorized to appoint them. Now, the word "examining," in line 24, section 5, that he called attention to is in harmony with the original bill, which provided that the President should appoint the officers, but inasmuch as the amended bill authorizes the governors to appoint those officers, I think it would be perfectly proper, and I submit this to the chairman of the committee, to strike out the word "examining."

Several MEMBERS. That relates to physical examination.

A MEMBER. Then it ought to be so stated.

Mr. MARSH. If the word "examination" means physical examination, let some definite explanatory word be inserted so as to do away with all question as to the meaning of this language. I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] that there was no intention—far from it—on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs to establish a "civil-service reform" in the Army.

Mr. RAY of New York. I did not suppose there was. Now, if the gentleman from Iowa will allow me one question, I will not disturb him further during the entire consideration of this bill. I call his attention to section 14, which provides that—

The general commanding a separate department or a detached army is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the Volunteer Army, to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said army within his command.

Now, it is provided in a prior part of the bill that certain officers of the Volunteer Army shall be taken from the Regular Army; and section 14 does not limit in any way the places from which these examiners may be taken, so that "a general commanding a separate department or a detached army" may go anywhere through the Volunteer Army and pick out the Regular Army officers——

Mr. HULL. Absolutely not.

Mr. MARSH. It is confined to volunteers.

Mr. RAY of New York. No, it is not; because you have provided that officers holding certain grades or ranks in certain capacities shall be taken from the Regular Army and made members of the Volunteer Army. These may be selected to act on the boards of examination and they would oust the volunteer officer whenever they got at him.

Mr. HULL. I do not yield for the gentleman's statement, because it is not correct. I do not want it to come out of my time. I shall be glad to answer any question of the gentleman if he will give me a chance, or my colleague on the committee [Mr. MARSH] can answer it.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa be permitted to have the bill considered by sections, so that as we reach each section it can be separately discussed.

Mr. HULL. That is what I desire.

Mr. SAYERS. In that way we can understand the bill better.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL. I want to ask again that we consider the bill under the five-minute rule, so that we may not go over the same ground twice.

A MEMBER. That consent has been granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is stated on the floor that such consent has already been granted. Is that true?

The CHAIRMAN. Consent has not been granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then I ask the gentleman to give me a little time for general debate. We are now, I believe, in Committee of the Whole, and I desire to submit some remarks.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not take up the time in that way. In view of the statement of the executive officers as to the urgency of passing this bill, I trust the gentleman will not object to my request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have not objected to it; but have appealed to the gentleman to ascertain whether he would not afford me an opportunity to address the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am trying to get an arrangement with the gentleman if possible; but I shall not press my request if there is objection from him.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman in charge of this bill state to the House whether the President has sent word to the Committee on Military Affairs expressing great anxiety for the immediate passage of this bill in substantially the form now before us?

Mr. HULL. The Secretary of War telephoned me from the White House this morning that it was exceedingly important the bill should pass at once, and he asked me that it be reported and brought before the House immediately. Afterwards I received from him this dispatch:

I hope you will introduce your bill this morning. Time is now very valuable. On the whole, I am inclined to think that requiring commissions to be signed by the President for the militia would cause friction and opposition by the governors, who naturally might feel that this was taking some of their powers from them. Can you change that and hasten the passage of the bill as rapidly as possible?

Mr. MARSH. I simply asked the question of the gentleman from Iowa in order that this information might go before the House so that every gentleman here might see that we ought to devote ourselves to the consideration of this bill, and this bill alone, until it is finished.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to put myself in the attitude of interfering in any way with the speedy passage of necessary legislation. I would be the last man on the floor of the House who would do that, because when the die is once cast, my lot is with those who maintain the flag of my country; and I shall then be anxious to see that the war is prosecuted vigorously to a successful conclusion. But it seems to me that time is not so precious that the gentleman can not allow me from thirty to forty-five minutes in which to submit some views which I think may be found to bear on this bill. If the committee, however, thinks that the emergency is so pressing that I can not be afforded this simple privilege, I shall not stand here opposing its will.

But inasmuch as when the concrete propositions looking to war with Spain were pending it was absolutely impossible for any man who doubted their wisdom to get the floor to express his views, it is due to myself, to my posterity, to my constituents, and to the conservative sentiment of this country that before hostilities are actually brought upon us I should have an opportunity to make known the motives and reasons which induced me to take the stand I did take and to cast the vote I did on the question of peace or war.

Now, having said this much, I will not oppose the will of the committee. If the committee chooses to acquiesce in the request of the gentleman from Iowa, I will not as a single individual interpose my objection, but will cheerfully give way. I do not wish to stand in the way of making preparations to meet this unnecessary war, if it must come. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the general debate be now closed?

Mr. HANDY. Before that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation of the bill in one especial particular.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will not stand in the way or oppose the wish of the committee, whether time be given to me or not. But I would ask, in view of the fact that there seems to be a disposition on the part of the gentleman in control of the bill to refuse to yield—I would ask that time be given to me after the completion of the bill; and if a single gentleman objects to this request, I will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I object.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] be allowed thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HULL. I have asked, Mr. Chairman, that my request be submitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted, immediately after the completion of this bill by the committee, to address the committee for, say, forty-five minutes.

Mr. COX. I hope that request will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a matter for the House to determine. After the bill is reported, it will be in the House.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the present motion? The request of the gentleman from Indiana that he may be permitted to occupy forty-five minutes after the bill has been reported from the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Iowa is that general debate be closed now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will not object, if the gentleman from Iowa sees fit—having the right to grant me time—to refuse me my request.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody has the floor. The gentleman from Iowa has submitted a request that general debate be now closed, and the Chair is trying to get the sense of the committee upon that request.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee I wish to say that general debate on the bill can do no harm. In fact, I am opposed to cutting off anybody who desires to express his views on the bill. I think, therefore, at present it would be well to proceed for a few minutes in the general discussion and see if we can not arrive at a proper conclusion without enforcing the rules of the House which would enable a majority to stifle debate. For one I desire a few minutes myself, as a member of the committee, and I think the same privilege ought to be given to other gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. HULL. I was going to say to my colleague that after we get into the five-minute debate, I would be perfectly willing to yield him such time as he desired.

Mr. COX. I think it would do no harm for members generally who wish it to have an opportunity of expressing themselves upon the bill, and of course while I do not wish to object to the views of my colleague, I hope he will allow the debate to run for a short time. I am satisfied, however, that we can soon arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. HULL. As I have stated, if we get to the five-minute debate, I will yield the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. COX. That would be a great courtesy to me and entirely satisfactory. Although other members may want to express themselves——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. OGDEN. I object.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield so much time as he may desire to my friend from Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. COX. Do not limit me. I will get through quick enough. I want such time only for the explanation of my views.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield such time as the gentleman desires.

Mr. COX. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the object of the bill, if we can get it clearly in our minds, is one that I do not think will produce any serious opposition; and yet there is a clause in the bill, or a section, to which I wish to call attention at the proper time in view of securing an amendment to it so as to make the bill consistent with the other amendments put into the bill by the committee.

Now, what is the purpose of the bill? If we get that clearly in mind, we will have no trouble, I think. It is to authorize the President of the United States to call out the volunteer forces of the United States, and the amount or number he desires to call out, the limit, is left to his own discretion. Now, then, if there is an emergency here and the President shall decide that there is such an emergency, I do not hesitate a moment to give him full authority in the premises. If you are going to war, go to war and fight it out as quick as possible. The trouble about it in the minds of some men, however, lies in this—that is, the mode of calling out the troops—and it seems to have arisen in the minds of some gentlemen that the President is going to appoint the officers over the volunteer forces.

Now, the original bill provided that in calling these forces into the service the commissioned officers, which would include colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, and lieutenants, were to be appointed by the President. That is eliminated from the bill. There is no such provision in it. It is clear and distinct. Why was that taken out of the bill? It will be perfectly plain to anyone who will reflect for a moment. The purpose was to leave the State organizations and their officers to be commissioned by the governors of the States. That is the law of the States. I for one earnestly opposed taking away the power from the governors of States to commission the officers of the State guards or State troops and putting it into the hands of the President.

Mr. GAINES. Does this bill propose to do that?

Mr. COX. I have said and I say again that was in the original bill; but we have taken out every vestige of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Upon that point I want to ask the gentleman if the language in lines 9, 10, and 11, on page 8, has been stricken out? The language to which I refer is as follows:

> And that all the regimental and company officers shall be appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the governors of the States in which their respective organizations are raised, subject to such an examination as to fitness and capacity as the President may prescribe.

Mr. COX. That has been stricken out by the unanimous vote of the committee. Now, let me conclude my statement. How do we stand when the forces are called out? The forces called out are officered under the laws of the States, from colonels down. Not only that, but if you will examine the amendments in the bill, you will see that organizations created under the laws of the State, companies, battalions, regiments, or troops, or other organizations of that kind, must be accepted by the President just as he finds them, and there is but one man who can change the officers of an organization, and that is the governor of the State. That is the law now in every State in this Union in regard to State troops.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. RIDGELY. Under this law can the National Guards of the various States be mustered into the Volunteer Army?

Mr. COX. Why, yes; there is no trouble about that.

Mr. RIDGELY. I did not have any doubt of it, but I wanted the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Not only can they be mustered in, but they can be mustered in with their present officers, unless the governor of the State displaces those officers. The President can not do it.

Mr. SPALDING. The board can.

Mr. COX. I will come to that in a minute. There is no doubt about the provisions of the bill. I can very readily see that if we had taken away from the governor the power to commission these officers that serious trouble might result.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL], I should like to call his attention to this language, which I think ought to go out of the bill——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Where is it?

Mr. COX. In section 5; and I will read enough of the section to make my point plain:

> SEC. 5. That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for.

Now, what is the trouble about that? That section could be very well construed to mean that the Secretary of War, under rules and regulations adopted by him, might exclude the State organizations——

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Let me finish my sentence. I was remarking that that part of that section might be construed that the State organizations, as provided for, might be excluded by the rules and regulations authorized by this bill under authority to be given to the Secretary of War, not upon the organization, but upon some other ground, and I do not think that ought to be in this bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask the gentleman if there is anything in this bill, as amended, that would prevent the volunteer troops from electing their own officers?

Mr. COX. Under the State organizations of troops all the officers are commissioned by the governor.

Mr. TALBERT. I know that.

Mr. SPALDING. In many instances by election.

Mr. COX. Almost always, I might say.

Mr. GAINES. Will my colleague——

Mr. COX. Give me one minute and I will make it so clear that there will be no trouble about it. In the civil war I know that when a company recommended a man for captain, our governor commissioned him, and when ten companies recommended a man for colonel, he commissioned him colonel, but the commission must come from the governor.

Mr. TALBERT. That is what I wanted to make plain. It will give them their choice?

Mr. COX. Why, certainly; the governor is not going to appoint men that his people do not want.

Mr. GAINES. Now, as to this provision of the Constitution.

Mr. COX. I know the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, as to the examining boards.

Mr. COX. I will come to that in a minute.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not that prevent them from making the choice of their own officers? I know the bill looks very fair upon its face?

Mr. COX. Well, just a minute. If I do not make it plain, shoot another question at me.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, right there.

Mr. COX. Let me get through with this now. Now, here is the proposition. The officers are commissioned by the governor. No act of Congress can direct the governor how or whom he shall commission, because that is a matter that belongs to State legislation and not to Congress.

Mr. TALBERT. But just here it states they are to be received under such regulations as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. COX. I just called the attention of the chairman of the committee to that and stated that it ought to go out, and I am going to move an amendment of that kind.

Mr. HAY. Will my colleague allow me to call his attention to this provision that "the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules not inconsistent with the terms of this act." If he will examine sections 6 and 7 he will see that these two sections cover the objection that is raised to the bill.

Mr. COX. I think it is plain in the bill, but a bill can never be made too plain. I think I understand it.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. In a minute. But I do not want to be understood that I will vote for any bill that confers upon the President of the United States the power to appoint officers in the volunteer service.

Mr. GAINES. Such a law would be unconstitutional.

Mr. COX. I understand the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. TALBERT. The bill might prevent the election of these officers, and in an indirect way give the power to the President.

Mr. COX. If my friend will think one moment, how will you put in an act of Congress a provision for volunteer officers of the different States when the State law controls that?

Mr. GAINES. Will my colleague allow me to read one provision in the Constitution?

Mr. COX. I understand what the Constitution provides in regard to it.

Mr. GAINES. You have not quoted it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does this bill increase the Regular Army by one man?

Mr. COX. Not a man.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are you certain of it?

Mr. COX. I know it.

Mr. KLEBERG. This is not the bill for that purpose?

Mr. COX. Oh, no; this is the bill to increase the volunteers.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman just read that for himself? [Indicating section in Constitution.] That reserves the right to the States.

Mr. COX. Certainly; and so does this.

Mr. BERRY. The bill says he shall be examined by the order of the President.

Mr. SPALDING. That is simply a physical examination.

Mr. COX. That is what it means. I will get through in a minute. I say it ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. That is as to his fitness and capacity.

Mr. COX. I think if the chairman of the committee will examine it, there will be no trouble about its going out.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. HICKS. Will my friend kindly put his interpretation upon the paragraph commencing in line 13, of page 5, as to the effect it would have on States having a National Guard, for instance?

Mr. COX. Well, if that was all there was in the bill, it might have a pretty serious effect; but other parts of the bill are for mustering in organizations of the States with their officers commissioned by the governor. Now, what else can you do?

Mr. HICKS. Will my friend point that out, and give his interpretation?

Mr. COX. I have gone over that, and if you will look through section 6, as amended, you will have no trouble about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the committee here I have no doubt is correct in another construction, that even that part is provided for in another portion of the bill. That, I think, ought to make it clear and distinct, and the reason I think so is this: That no man that is in a State organization and has been accepted in a State organization either in regiment, company, or battalion, should be examined by the United States as to whether he should go in or not.

Mr. BERRY. Does not your bill say that he shall be examined for fitness and capacity?

Mr. COX. Well, sir, I am going to strike out that when we come to it.

I will say to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] that that matter has all been stricken out by the committee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anything else that I can say.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. KLEBERG. Is it not a fact that the bill placed before the members is one that has not the amendments of the committee upon it?

Mr. COX. That may be so. I think one trouble that has got into the House is that this bill is pressed with all the earnestness our executive officers can put forth. I assume they know what they are doing, and I have no reason to think otherwise. But it has come in here, and most of the members have the old original bill on their desks and not the amended one. That is what has produced so much trouble, but we have done the best we could to explain it in the shape it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. In regard to section 11, how does the gentleman construe the word "may," in the twenty-third line? Is that mandatory or directory?

Mr. HULL. That has all been stricken out.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COX. I will.

Mr. STEELE. How many officers and how many men will constitute a company under this bill?

Mr. COX. We did not legislate on that subject. Each State has its own law as to the number of men that shall constitute a company.

Mr. HAY. Under the Volunteer Army proposed to be raised in this bill no organization has been provided for at all. That will come when the bill to reorganize the Army comes into the House. Whatever may be put in as the number of men to constitute a company of infantry in the Regular Army will have to be followed in the Volunteer Army.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to reply to him? Under the bill to reorganize the Army, one of the great questions is what shall be the size of a company. That will come up when this bill comes into the House. When we do get that bill in, the State troops, the State guards, the State soldiers I may say, will most naturally conform their organizations to the provisions of that bill.

Mr. STEELE. That is what I wanted to get at. Under the law of March 3, 1863, it was provided that where a company fell below the minimum number, at that time sixty-six men, they should be deprived of a second lieutenant. In the Regular Army to-day, as I understand it, the maximum is sixty-six.

Mr. COX. This bill does not touch that subject.

Mr. STEELE. It provides that they shall come under the organization prescribed for the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will read section 7 of the bill, he will see that that is provided for.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] if he is absolutely certain about the provisions of this bill as amended, that it leaves the appointment of the officers to the governors of the States?

Mr. COX. Yes; there is no doubt about that, and no bill would ever get my vote that did not provide for that—that did not leave the appointment of the officers to the governor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Section 4 provides:

> That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force.

I want to ask the gentleman whether it will require further legislation after this?

Mr. COX. I do not think so.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Where does the authority come from, then, to organize the volunteer force?

Mr. COX. We authorize the President to do it.

Mr. HAY. And it says "while war is imminent."

Mr. SPARKMAN. But only after Congress has authorized the President to act.

Mr. SULZER. We have authorized the President to act.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the gentleman from Tennessee any information as to the probable course in relation to the volunteer officers of militia above the rank of colonel?

Mr. SULZER. That will depend upon how many are called out.

Mr. BENNETT. Will they be called out?

Mr. HAY. That will depend upon whether the President chooses to appoint them as brigadiers or not.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no intention, as far as the gentleman from Tennessee knows, as to the President calling out the brigade and their staff officers above the rank of colonel?

Mr. COX. I do not know what is in the mind of the President, except that he urges the passage of this bill.

Mr. BENNETT. This bill does not call for it.

Mr. SULZER. No; it does not.

Mr. McCULLOCH. In section 6 you provide that the President shall appoint the regimental and company officers on the recommendation of the governors of the States.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; everything that goes to the appointment of the officers, the commissioned officers, is left to the governors of the States, up to and including the rank of colonel.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I want to ask this question: Where a State from its quota furnishes a sufficient number of its own to constitute a brigade, why not allow the governor to dictate the appointment of the brigadier-general?

Mr. SULZER. I think that ought to be so.

Mr. COX. I do not think it ought to be so, but I will not object to your amendment. It never has been the law.

Mr. GRIGGS. It never ought to be.

Mr. SETTLE. I should like to be informed as to the status of the National Guard under this bill. Is it intended that the President shall leave to the governors of the several States upon whom he will call——

Mr. COX. Oh, no; there is a section in the bill providing that the President shall call upon each of the States for its proportion of troops——

Mr. SETTLE. And that the governor shall exercise his discretion?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have taken more time than I ought to have done; and I yield the floor.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed, and that we proceed under the five-minute rule, which will give every gentleman an opportunity to discuss the bill or present any amendment.

Mr. HANDY. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa that there is a feature of the bill proper to be discussed in general debate which has not been touched upon—which has not been brought at all to the attention of the House. Before the general debate closes I should like to be heard briefly on that part of the bill. This bill, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HANDY. I shall object if I can not get an opportunity——

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HANDY (continuing). To present that phase of the question. If I may be heard a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has the floor.

Mr. HULL. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH].

Mr. MARSH. I simply wish to ask the gentleman from Delaware upon what phase of the bill he wants information?

Mr. HANDY. This bill comes into the House as an emergency bill—to meet a present emergency—but it is in fact a permanent piece of legislation, to remain upon our statute books indefinitely—not only during the present emergency, but for all future occasions when war may be imminent.

Mr. HAY. I object, and call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thought the gentleman from Delaware was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH], who asked the gentleman from Delaware a question. The gentleman from Delaware was proceeding by unanimous consent. Objection has been made to the request that general debate be closed. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. HAY rose.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] for the purpose of ascertaining what he desires.

Mr. HAY. I desire that any gentleman who wishes to speak on this bill be given an opportunity to do so. Therefore, I suggest that general debate on the bill be allowed for one-half hour, fifteen minutes to be given to each side.

Mr. HULL. I will ask, then, unanimous consent that general debate on the bill close at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HANDY. Who would control the time—two gentlemen in favor of the bill? I am opposed to the bill in the form in which it stands, because of its permanent feature. I should be satisfied with it as an emergency measure.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then clearly the gentleman from Delaware would have the right to control the time in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time would be controlled by a friend and an opponent of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. How much time would the gentleman from Delaware wish to occupy?

Mr. HANDY. I do not know just how long. I simply want to present some facts clearly to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object until I can ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. HULL. I will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask the gentleman to inform us wherein this bill differs from the law in force when we raised volunteers thirty-five years ago?

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that I have not compared this bill word for word with the law in force thirty-five years ago; but the text of this bill as approved by the committee provides for the same method of raising and equipping troops that we had at the time the gentleman refers to. But the laws in force at that time were temporary—for an emergency only. We were required, in presenting this bill, to present either a temporary measure or one which should become permanent law. We prefer a permanent law.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Has the gentleman looked at the law under which volunteers were raised for the Mexican war?

Mr. HULL. I have. That was a very short act.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman state how it differed from this bill?

Mr. HULL. It simply provided that the President have power to call out the militia of the United States and to enlist 50,000 volunteers. He enlisted the 50,000 men, largely volunteers, and called out none of the militia, as I understand. But the appointment of the general officers and the organization of brigades and divisions are the same in this bill that they were during the civil war and Mexican war.

Mr. HANDY. But the method of raising troops under this bill is entirely different.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. Does the gentleman from Iowa seek to take advantage of the trouble now existing to make this a permanent law, or is it only temporary in its operation to meet an emergency?

Mr. HULL. I hope it is a permanent law that will stand until it is repealed.

And, Mr. Chairman, the fact that we are to-day, in the face of the present crisis, when the executive officers of the Government appeal to Congress to give them power to carry out the order of Congress—the fact that we are standing here and fighting for a bill to enable them to carry out the express order of Congress for the purpose of raising troops to meet an emergency is an evidence that the bill itself should be a permanent law. [Applause.]

This Congress wants war. It passed by an overwhelming majority the resolution that it would have war if its wishes were not complied with. Now, when the executive officers of the Government come and ask authority to organize the force to execute the will of Congress and its mandates, it seems to me the time has come for us to place on the statute books some kind of a law that will enable these officers to perform the functions assigned them without coming to Congress on every occasion and fighting here to secure a provision of law to meet the emergency that we have ourselves inaugurated. If we had such a law the President would now be able to act. We want such a permanent law, so that when Congress speaks the Executive may have power to execute the order of Congress without waiting for quibbling and discussion in the National Legislature.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has it not always been the policy of this Government to give absolutely the war-making power into the hands of Congress?

Mr. HULL. And Congress does it under this bill as absolutely as it does it now. There is no change made in that regard. The President can not take action until Congress has seen fit to exercise its legislative will and gives him authority by inaugurating a state of war, as was done by our adopting the joint resolution in regard to Cuba, or as would be the case if Congress in the future should declare war against any country.

It is always in order in war to order out the militia, but the limitation on the use of the militia found in the Constitution makes the employment of this force ineffective except in case of invasion. Is it not better to have a law which will enable the President to promptly proceed to execute the mandate of Congress than to paralyze his work by the uncertainty, as now is the case?

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague on the committee from Illinois.

Mr. SULZER. I move that general debate be closed at 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] having been recognized.

Mr. HAY. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the House for a few moments, and especially the gentleman from Tennessee who sits now on my left [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman always has that when he speaks.

Mr. MARSH. Thank you. And I want his careful attention, as I have no doubt he always gives.

He raises the point that this bill, providing for the creation of this force, is a permanent law. I want to say to the gentleman that in my opinion it is not a permanent law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I simply asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] if it was a permanent law, and he said that it was.

Mr. MARSH. Well, I would be obliged to differ, as I sometimes do, I am sorry to say, with the chairman of my committee.

Now, let me call your attention, if you will give it carefully for a moment, to the fifth section of the bill from which I read:

That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation, stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law.

Now, this bill does not fix any limit, and in the absence of the fixing of the limit the President can not call out a single volunteer.

Then the gentleman says: "Where is the law that authorizes the calling out of additional men beyond the Regular Army?" I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the gentlemen of the committee that the authority is to be found in the declaration of war that we passed only a few days ago. That declaration, which is only temporary in its character, and applies only to the coming war—that declaration authorized and directed the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States, including the militia of the different States—that militia amounting to 10,000,000 men—for the necessities that may arise during the war; and under that authority, and under that alone, the President can execute the fifth section of this bill. So that when the coming or existing war is over, when the war with Spain ceases, and this act still stands on the statute books, there can be no call for troops without further action by Congress.

A MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have demonstrated beyond any question that the authority under this bill to call out volunteers is confined to the war that you inaugurated by your declaration a few days ago.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MARSH. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Section 4 provides—the gentleman read from section 5——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was just about to call attention to section 4.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). Section 4 provides, in line 7, page 2—

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force.

Now, is it not a fact that under this section—this provision for raising a volunteer army to go into service at once on the inauguration of the war—and after this war is over, while this section would remain in force for general regulations on the statute books, that what it provides in the way of raising troops could not be undertaken by the President until, in some subsequent event, the Congress of the United States has authorized it? In other words, the President would have no power in that direction without authority of Congress? We simply leave the machinery intact to carry it into execution under the will of Congress in case it shall be authorized on a subsequent occasion?

Mr. MARSH. Why, Mr. Chairman, that is the very point that I took the floor to demonstrate, because of the suggestions that had been made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. This law, so far as the power of the President to call out troops is concerned, is confined to this existing war.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague yield to me for one question?

Mr. MARSH. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Do I understand you to say that I take the position——

Mr. MARSH. No; I was talking about the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. MCMILLIN.

Mr. HULL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in my judgment the bill, with the amendments proposed by the committee, should be passed, and that, too, without delay, as has been requested by the Secretary of War and the President. We are right upon the verge of war. We have authorized the President to do things which will involve us in war. The resolutions authorizing him to do those things received the almost unanimous support of this House, and for one, with such a measure as this presented to the House, I am opposed to further quibbling. [Applause.] Let men who oppose the measure speak for themselves, and not for the Democratic side of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have three minutes left, and in that time I want to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us try to get an agreement.

Mr. HULL. We can not agree.

Mr. HANDY. You will not agree to give gentlemen opposed to the proposition any time at all for general debate. I want half an hour.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee do now rise for the purpose of closing general debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this bill; and pending that, I move that general debate be closed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. For a question, yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I think probably there are only two or three gentlemen on this side who desire to oppose the bill, and they feel that, inasmuch as they can not vote for it, they ought to have an opportunity to state the grounds of their opposition.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to being absolutely fair with them, and in the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose you close debate at half past 2.

Mr. HULL. I want to pass this bill to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. You will.

Mr. HULL. There is no certainty that we shall finish the bill to-day under any such arrangement.

Mr. BAILEY. I myself believe the bill ought to be passed——

Mr. HULL. In order to obviate the difficulty, I move that general debate be closed in thirty minutes, and I will give the opposition the entire time.

Mr. BAILEY. That is acceptable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 9944, and pending that, moves that all general debate be closed in thirty minutes.

The motion to close general debate in thirty minutes was agreed to.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9944, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate has been limited to thirty minutes. The Chair understands that all the time is to be controlled and used by those who oppose the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to know to whom to yield. I suppose to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY]. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question before the debate begins?

The CHAIRMAN. If no gentleman desires to take the floor in opposition to the bill, the Clerk will read.

Mr. HANDY. The gentleman from Delaware is occupying the floor, but yielded to the gentleman from Washington to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa, and the gentleman from Washington is striving to get the attention of the gentleman from Iowa for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. There is so much confusion it is almost impossible to hear anything that is said.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask him a question? Will the gentleman from Iowa let me know what view the committee had, or his own view, as to lines 24 and 25 of section 11, on page 5? After those lines there is a proviso—

Provided, That each general officer of the Volunteer Army shall be entitled to the number of aids-de-camp authorized for an officer of like grade in the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL. That is all stricken out. If the amendment of the committee is agreed to, we strike out the words:

Who may be selected from the line or staff of the Regular or Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

That leaves the bill without that limitation, and the President can make his selections for general officers, subject only to consent of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friends for anticipating what I intended to say, but in a minute I want to call your attention to the following strict regulation of the Army:

And any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee, if a man shall be appointed in this way, if he is to be entitled to the rank he had in the United States Army in the anticipated engagement, or if he acquires a rank in this present engagement, is he to hold it for the balance of his career?

Mr. HULL. He retains the rank that he had in the Regular Army at the time of appointment only, as they did in the civil war, if they accept a commission in the Volunteer Army, which is only temporary and is surrendered at close of the war.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It is to give him the same rank in the future engagement and any additional rank by being appointed an officer in the Volunteer Army.

Mr. HULL. The general debate is running in the time of the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I asked the gentleman a question, and he can afford to answer it without feeling that it is taking anything from him.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be put in the attitude of opposing legislation along this line. There is no man in the House who realizes more fully than myself the absolute importance of getting men ready for the field. You not only have to get guns ready, ships ready, and ammunition ready, but you must get men ready for war. In my opinion, we ought to have commenced this work of getting men ready for the field some time ago. I am not seeking the floor to-day for the purpose of delaying this bill. In this connection let me send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time a joint resolution which I offered on April 14, very nearly a week ago, and which has since been before the Committee on Military Affairs. That resolution will show that, instead of being opposed to calling out the volunteer force, instead of being desirous of delaying such legislation, I was, perhaps, the first man in the House to move in the direction of such legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 234) to authorize the employment of volunteers in case of war.

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to call for at once and to accept the services of volunteers, either as cavalry, infantry, artillery, or other branches of the military service, in such numbers, not exceeding 400,000, as he may deem necessary for the purpose of prosecuting any war that may be declared by the Congress of the United States: Provided, That the services of the volunteers herein mentioned shall be for such time as the President may direct, not exceeding three years nor less than six months, and they shall be disbanded at the end of the war. In calling for the volunteers herein provided for the President shall from time to time issue his proclamation stating the number desired, either as cavalry, infantry, artillery, or other branches of the military service, and the States from which they are to be furnished, having reference in any such requisition to the exigencies of the service at the time, and equalizing as far as practicable the number furnished by the several States according to population.

SEC. 2. That said volunteers shall be, while in the service of the United States, subject to the rules and regulations governing the Army of the United States; and the President shall be authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, such general and staff officers for the organization, administration, and command of the forces provided for in this act as may be required according to the present rules and regulations governing the Army of the United States, and in accordance with the existing statutes of the United States.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, it does not follow because legislation is important and necessary along this line that every part of the legislation brought in here by our committee is wise and ought to be passed. It does not follow because a particular form of legislation is recommended by the War Department that it is necessarily wise and ought to pass. The Committee on Military Affairs stands here with amendments to the legislation proposed by the War Department, showing that in the opinion of the committee itself the War Department is not infallible in proposing this legislation.

We have, in the bill before us, legislation which amounts to a complete revolution of the policy which Congress has pursued from the beginning of our Government in the matter of raising armies. We have had foreign wars before, and we have had a great domestic war. In every case hitherto Congress went to work to provide for and to raise an army, and fixed the terms and conditions upon which the army should be raised at that time. Now, when this emergency comes upon us, this bill is introduced simply as an emergency measure, and it is urged as something that ought to be passed without any general debate. But this bill, after meeting the present emergency, must be considered as a bill that will stay on the statute books for years and years to come. How permanent such legislation is likely to be, Mr. Chairman, may be shown by illustration. We have on our statute books to-day legislation along this line passed in 1792. In section 1625 of the Revised Statutes we find:

SEC. 1625. Every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States, resident therein, who is of the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years, shall be enrolled in the militia.

That has been on the statute books unaltered and unrepealed since 1792. The provisions of section 1642 have been on the statute books since February 25, 1795.

SEC. 1642. Whenever the United States are invaded or are in imminent danger of an invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion or to suppress such rebellion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

The first section of the bill introduced by the committee, the bill now before us, is substantially nothing more than section 1625 of the Revised Statutes. There is no particular reason why it should be reenacted. Leaving the first three sections of this bill, which do not seem to me objectionable, I come to the part of the bill to which I object, to the part I hope to see amended. Section 4, Mr. Chairman, of this bill says, and I ask attention of gentlemen around me:

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force, etc.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] pointed out that it will be necessary hereafter in order to get the advantage of this act, in case any war occurs, for Congress to authorize the President to raise such a force; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] remarked very truly that Congress could do that in two lines. The latter remark depicts the exact situation of the matter, Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes law and remains on the statute books. All that Congress will have to do hereafter to raise armies will be simply to pass a resolution authorizing the President to proceed to raise armies. Congress may simply declare war and "authorize the President to raise such a force," and the Executive will do the rest.

That is not the view of this matter taken by the men who wrote the Constitution of the United States. Section 8 of Article I declares it to be among the powers of Congress "to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water." The next clause of that section gives Congress another power, to wit, "To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years." To raise and support armies is therefore a part of the constitutional duty of Congress, not a part of the duties of the President merely. In all of the wars of the past Congress has executed that duty. Congress has passed the laws for raising armies. The Constitution does not look with favor on permanency in this matter, for to that clause which gives power to raise and support armies there is a modification and limitation:

But no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

Congress itself can not provide money for an army for a longer term than two years. The whole idea of the Constitution is that the armies are to be temporary; that armies are to be kept always within the power and within the controlling hand of Congress. Armies are not to be put in unlimited measure and unlimited numbers in the hands of the Chief Executive. Yet this bill is so drawn that hereafter—fifty years hereafter or one hundred years hereafter, for the present legislation has remained over one hundred years on the statute books—a simple resolution authorizing the President and Executive then in power would give him under this bill unlimited control to raise an army consisting of every able-bodied man in the United States, and to appoint the officers of that army and keep them in power for three years thereafter.

Why, Mr. Chairman, at the opening of the civil war Congress, July 22, 1861, passed a law authorizing the President, under well-defined limitations, to call out not more than 500,000 volunteers. Yet gentlemen come in here and ask Congress in this bill to give the President power to call out 12,000,000 volunteers. That is not wise legislation. You say he does not want 12,000,000 volunteers. Of course not. You say he will not call them out. Of course not. Then why give him the power to call them out? What is the purpose in it? I am not here in opposition to the President of the United States. I am not here asking Congress to limit unduly the powers of the President of the United States. He does not need 12,000,000 volunteers.

Let us fix a limit, as Congress has always fixed a limit in the past. Make it 300,000; make it 400,000; make it 500,000; make it any limit you choose. What is the use, and where is the wisdom of giving to the President of the United States such power as no ruler on God's green earth has to-day, save only the Czar of Russia? He does not want to use it. The present occupant of the White House can undoubtedly be safely trusted with it. I do not believe for a moment that he will misuse it, but why set such a precedent? Why make such legislation as will furnish a justification in some distant day, when some man may be President of the United States who does want to use such power and use it wrongfully?

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to legislation to call out the Volunteer Army of the United States. I am simply in favor of having wise legislation to that end by pruning and cutting down the bill before us. The first two or three sections of this bill are harmless so far as I can see. They will not change anything that exists to-day. Then comes section 4, and then section 5. Those two sections ought, if we are to do what is wise and prudent in the matter of good legislation, to be stricken out, and something definite, something temporary, something applying merely to the present emergency, put in the place of them.

Let us meet the present war. We need not this morning, in the hurry of legislation, try to provide for future wars. We need not be interested in what may happen twenty-five or fifty years from now. Let us pass an emergency bill to meet the emergency now upon us, calling out troops for this war. Let us stop there. That will be wise; that will be judicious. Even at the danger of being put in the light of opposing war legislation, which would be entirely unjust to me, I have ventured to point out the justice and wisdom of such a course.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to section 13. That section is as follows:

SEC. 13. That the President may, upon the recommendation of the governors of States, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army: Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be commissioned in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

Now, doubtless that provision is all right, but I am not so well posted upon it as to determine what is meant by the rank there of the soldier of the Regular Army. In the next place, I want to know if this is an existing law?

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that an officer of the Regular Army can only be put in the volunteer regiment by request of the governor of the State. During the civil war we had several officers commissioned as officers in the volunteer regiments. This is the same provision. They retain the rank they had in the Regular Army, and when they are mustered out of the Volunteer Army, they go back into the Regular Army with the same rank that they formerly had, subject to any promotions which may be theirs of right.

Mr. HUNTER. That is the law to-day?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not believe it is the law to-day. We have no law to-day, but it was the law in force from 1861 to 1865.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It was the law during the civil war.

Mr. MARSH. I suppose that no officer of the Regular Army has the right to-day to remain in the Army and accept a commission from the governor, without authority of law.

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly not.

Mr. MARSH. This merely confers authority to be exercised upon the application of the governor and at the discretion of the President.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy the time of the House in any discussion of the provisions of this bill. I think it is a good bill; I think the committee has prepared it with great care, and that it ought to pass and pass at once.

Mr. HANDY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS]. If he does not desire to use the whole of it, I will then relinquish the floor, as I know of no other gentleman on this side who wants to take part in the general debate.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I do not wish any time for the purpose of discussion. But a day or two since I manifested my anxiety respecting the officers of the National Guard, of whom I am one. There is a provision in this bill which I thought related to that subject; and I sought from the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, a response to what I deemed a courteous inquiry. He did not, however, find it agreeable to respond so that I might determine whether or not I desired to amend the bill. I now respectfully ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH], a member of the committee, to give me his views as a committeeman in regard to the meaning of these words beginning in the last line of page 5 of the bill and continuing on page 6:

And any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein.

If an officer should, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HUNTER], be taken from the Regular Army and put into the volunteer service, does this language mean that he shall retain his rank in the Regular Army or that he shall retain for all future time such rank as he may attain in the volunteer service?

A MEMBER. It means either.

Mr. MARSH. I do not think it means either.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then, may I ask my friend from Illinois to give me what he understands to be the meaning of this clause, which is the only thing in this bill at present which gives me any anxiety?

Mr. MARSH. I will give the gentleman my understanding of the effect of that provision.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. MARSH. Suppose there is a first lieutenant in the Regular Army whom the governor of my State desires to make a major in a volunteer regiment. That can not be done under the existing law, but under the provision of this bill, by the consent of the President or the Secretary of War, the commission may issue to that lieutenant for a majorship in an Illinois regiment. Now, that officer may be in that Illinois regiment two or three years, but under the provision of this bill he will retain his rank in the Regular Army precisely as if he had never been commissioned in the Volunteer Army; and if at the end of two years' service his rank in the Regular Army would have been that of major, he retains that rank with the right of promotion in his regiment of the Regular Army.

Mr. HUNTER. That explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. MARSH. During our recent war a large number of Regular Army officers were detailed and allowed to hold positions in the volunteer service. In such cases they retained their rank in the Regular Army. For instance, Phil Sheridan, who was a lieutenant in the Regular Army, was made a colonel in a volunteer regiment, and he retained his rank in the Regular Army while he remained in the volunteer service.

A MEMBER. And was in the line of promotion.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then there is no intention that the words "shall be entitled to retain his rank therein" should give the officer a rank in the volunteer force corresponding with his rank in the Regular Army?

Mr. MARSH. There is no such intention; and the bill can have no such effect.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I wish to express my thanks to my honorable friend from Illinois for this explanation. He has answered the query to my satisfaction.

Mr. TALBERT. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a passage in the bill, beginning in line 21, page 2:

The Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for.

Has that provision been stricken out?

Mr. HULL. No, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. When I called the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to this language, he said he was opposed to the provision; and I understood him to say that it had been stricken out.

Mr. HULL. No; he certainly did not say it had been stricken out.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman think this provision would enable the Secretary of War to prevent the organization of volunteer troops according to their own ideas in respect to the choice of officers? May he not intervene and prevent even the appointment of officers by the governor?

Mr. HULL. I ask the gentleman to listen to me a moment. This provision does not affect the officers at all. It is practically the same provision we had in force during the civil war. The Government of the United States would not accept a regiment unless the members of that regiment were examined to ascertain whether they complied with the requirements for a United States soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me that the provision authorizing the President to "issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law," covers the ground sufficiently; and that the other provision to which I have called attention gives the Secretary of War an extended stretch of power which he has not under existing law, and which might, in practice, interfere with the proper organization of the volunteer troops.

Mr. HULL. When we reach that part of the bill it will be easy to settle this question.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I understand it is agreed that when we reach section 5 we shall be allowed to insert, in connection with the word "examining," a provision that the examination shall be a medical or physical examination?

Mr. HULL. I would like to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that when we reach the various sections of the bill, each will be open to amendment, and the sense of the committee can be taken upon them.

I believe the time for general debate has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired; and the Clerk will report the bill by sections.

The Clerk read section 1 of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all able-bodied male citizens of the United States, and persons of foreign birth who shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States under and in pursuance of the laws thereof, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, are hereby declared to constitute the national forces, and, with such exceptions and under such conditions as may be prescribed by law, shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply to call the attention of the committee to the importance of making a permanent law at this time. A permanent law can be readily changed if, after an experience of the next few months, it becomes necessary, and I wish to call your attention to the present law, enacted a very long time ago.

Section 1628 is the law of the land to-day and provides as follows:

Every citizen shall, after notice of his enrollment, be constantly provided with a good musket or firelock of a bore sufficient for balls of the eighteenth part of a pound, a sufficient bayonet and belt, two spare flints, and a knapsack, a pouch with a box therein to contain not less than twenty-four cartridges suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball; or with a good rifle, knapsack, shot pouch, and powder horn, twenty balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter of a pound of powder; and shall appear so armed, accoutered, and provided when called out to exercise, or in service, except that when called out on company days to exercise only, he may appear without a knapsack. And all arms, ammunition, and accouterments so provided and required shall be held exempted from all suits, distresses, executions, or sales for debt or for the payment of taxes. Each commissioned officer shall be armed with a sword or hanger and spontoon.

What is a spontoon? The members of this House never saw one.

Mr. SULZER. When was that law enacted?

Mr. LACEY. In 1792.

Now, that is the law existing at this time; and the reason that this old law of 1792 is still in force is because in 1846 and 1847, when we were legislating for the Mexican war, we passed laws providing especially for that occasion. In 1861 and afterwards we passed laws calling for volunteers from time to time, and they were passed with reference to the particular occasion existing for calling out troops to fight in that war.

The gentleman from Iowa, my colleague, Mr. HULL, introduces a bill which proposes an entire change in the present military law with regard to calling out the militia in time of war, and provides that the old law shall be disregarded and that this shall remain as a permanent measure on the statute books, subject, of course, to amendments from time to time as the experience of the approaching war will demonstrate.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment being withdrawn, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force: Provided, That all enlistments for the Volunteer Army shall be for a term of three years, unless sooner terminated, and that all officers and men composing said army shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished, or on the conclusion of hostilities.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment or two while I address myself to one provision of this section.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me, I wish to offer an amendment to this section, and I believe it is an amendment that will cover the point, as I understand it, that he desires to address himself to.

Mr. MOODY. If that is done it will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. LACEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 10, page 2, after the word "Congress," the following: "has or;" so that it will read:

"That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent, and shall be raised or organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to raise such a force," etc.

And also, in line 11 of page 2, insert the following: "or to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States."

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] covers the criticism I am about to make with reference to this portion of the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the purpose of the last amendment?

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me to state the question in my mind, I think he will see that I meet the point in his mind.

I desire to speak to the question I rose first to speak on a few moments ago. This law, although a permanent law, is absolutely inoperative except in times when the Congress of the United States shall specially have authorized the President of the United States to act under it. That appears in the section under consideration in these words. "The Volunteer Army shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force."

The bill itself does not propose to confer any authority upon the President to act under its provisions. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is intended to remedy that defect. But I am not quite sure that it will have that effect. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] in his remarks stated to the committee that the authority to employ the machinery provided in the act has already been conferred on the President by the passage of the resolution the day before yesterday. But in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, he is clearly wrong in that respect, and I will call the attention of the House to the provision of the resolutions adopted at that time:

That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, etc.

Now, the authority conferred upon the President by the Cuban resolutions, so called, was twofold: First, to use the land and naval forces of the United States; second, to use the militia of the States; but now we propose to create a third body, the Volunteer Army of the United States, and we propose to create the Volunteer Army of the United States under the condition which I have pointed out to the House. Now, it can not be possible that the authority vested in the President of the United States by the Cuban resolutions authorizes him to act under the machinery provided for by this act, because the Volunteer Army of the United States is not a part of the land and naval forces of the United States until it shall have been raised and organized by the President, under the permission which Congress must hereafter give him.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If this bill passes, then it will become a part of the land forces of the United States.

Mr. MOODY. Now, that comes right to the vital point. If this bill passes, the Volunteer Army will not become a part of the land and naval forces of the United States, because the power given in this act to raise the Volunteer Army is conditional upon the subsequent permission of Congress to raise and organize it.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MARSH. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts hold that the militia of this country are not a part of the land forces?

Mr. MOODY. I do not hold that at all. The militia of this country are clearly a part of the land forces which can be employed under the provisions of the Constitution, and are specifically authorized to be called out by the so-called Cuban resolution. But if I understand the question, the Volunteer Army of the United States is an entirely distinct body from the militia of the United States, although when the Volunteer Army is raised and organized, it will no doubt be composed, to a large extent, of the militia.

Mr. MARSH. It can not be composed of anybody but the militia, because every able-bodied male citizen of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and every person of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, is declared by law to be a militiaman.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree——

Mr. MARSH. That is the law that has been upon the books and is there now.

Mr. MOODY. I do not agree that the Volunteer Army which shall hereafter be raised under the provisions of this special act is a part of the militia, although the men who compose the Volunteer Army may be the very men who compose the militia and who are liable to service in the militia. But the Volunteer Army of the United States is a United States organization and not a State organization, and that is the difference between the militia and the Army of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I should like just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's time will be extended a minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I am right about this subject. I feel that it would be very dangerous to send this bill to the President without at the same time sending him some specific authority to act under it, and that it would not do to rest upon the authority contained in the resolutions which passed two or three days ago.

You can not find the authority which this act proposes that Congress shall give to the President as a condition precedent to the authority conferred upon him in any act which passed Congress before this bill becomes a law. You can not get authority to act under a law passed this week by the provisions of a law passed last week. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should have proposed an amendment to this bill conferring during this emergency, the express power upon the President to act under this law; but it seems to me, as this is to be a part of the permanent statutes of the United States, that it would be a good deal safer, the moment this bill passes the House, to introduce a special bill giving the President authority to act on it and send it out of Congress to the President as the next bill which shall go from this body.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall try to answer the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts. If I understand the gentleman, the point is that under this bill the President could not raise the army which this bill proposes to raise.

Mr. MOODY. Until further authority is given.

Mr. HAY. Until some further bill is passed.

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I call the gentleman's attention to section 2 of the bill, which provides:

That the organized and active land forces of the United States shall consist of the Army of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States: Provided, That in time of war the Army shall consist of two branches, which shall be designated, respectively, as the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army of the United States.

Now, I say that the provision in section 2 makes the army which the gentleman is talking about a part of the forces of the United States.

Mr. MOODY. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Volunteer Army can not come into existence until Congress specially authorizes it to be raised and organized. There can not now be any such thing as a volunteer army. There is not any such thing to-day. If this act passes, there can not be any such thing, unless you can find, somewhere on the statute books, authority to act under it; and I say you can not find it in the Cuban resolutions.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit, I say you can find this authority in section 5 of this bill, where it provides:

And the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for.

Mr. MOODY. Let me, then, state to the gentleman that the President can not issue his proclamation until Congress authorizes it. The purpose of this bill is to create the organization of volunteer armies. That is controlled by Congress, and a very proper provision.

Mr. HAY. Then, as I understand it, the gentleman means to say that the President of the United States can not issue a proclamation of war unless he is authorized in this bill. I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. HAY. Now, in section 6, I call the gentleman's attention to this provision:

That the Volunteer Army and the militia of the States when called into the service of the United States shall be organized under, and shall be subject to, the laws, orders, and regulations governing the Regular Army.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Where is there any authority which authorizes the President of the United States to call out anybody in that? It says, "when called." I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is right about it.

Mr. HAY. There is a section in this bill, which I do not remember at present, that does provide it.

Mr. SULZER. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the Cuban resolution, which provides that the President shall use the land and naval forces and the militia force of the United States.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. But he has to have authority to call them out.

Mr. MOODY. It does not authorize the President of the United States to call them out.

Mr. SULZER. The Cuban resolution authorizes him to call them out, because it says he shall use the land and naval forces and the militia force of the United States.

Mr. HAY. Section 9 provides:

That in time of war, or when war is imminent, the troops in the service of the United States, whether belonging to the Regular or Volunteer Army or to the militia, shall be organized, as far as practicable, into divisions, etc.

So that this bill gives the President ample power to call into the service of the United States every soldier, whether he be in the Regular Army or in the Volunteer Army, and that no further legislation is necessary than that which has already been had to give the power to the President which he ought to have.

Mr. RAY of New York. It can not be possible, Mr. Chairman, that any member of this House desires an imperfect bill to go to the President, especially in such times as these; and after consultation with several members of the House who are good lawyers, I think they all agree that this bill ought to contain some provision authorizing the President to call out, call into the service of the United States, a volunteer army such as is here provided for. And I think that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has an amendment to propose that will cover the ground. It is idle to say that this bill as now framed authorizes the organization of a volunteer army aided by the provisions of the Cuban resolutions.

The only thing the Cuban resolution authorizes the President to do is to call to his aid the militia force of the several States as now organized, the militia to come to our aid if the President calls it; but there is no provision by which the President can use the militia for the purposes for which we want to use a volunteer army; and therefore I shall give way soon to my friend from Iowa in order that he may offer his amendment, which will cover the ground suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], which, it seems to me, will do the work that we intend to do; and if that is not adopted, then at the end of the bill we ought to add a provision authorizing the President of the United States to create and call into the field a volunteer force of not less than 500,000 men, to serve three years or a lesser time under the provisions of this act.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to section 5.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will give way in a minute. My attention has been called to that.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Now, listen to its phraseology:

That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired.

Mr. MORRIS. Read the next line.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky (continuing)—

Within such limits as may be fixed by law.

Mr. RAY of New York. And we have made the provision in section 4—

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. We have declared war.

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing)— or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized as this act provides only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Then section 5.

Mr. RAY of New York. That we have not done. We must, by this bill or some other, authorize the President to raise the force we want.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Section 5 gives him authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has been recognized.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to use the exact language of the Cuban resolutions in this amendment. It is not the language that would have been used if this matter had come up for the first time, but in order to authorize the President to call out this volunteer force, this amendment says that he may do so when Congress has authorized him to call into actual service the militia of the several States, giving the exact language of the Cuban resolution, and have supplemented that resolution with authority to call out the volunteer force. I have submitted it to the chairman of the committee, and, after examination, he thinks it would cover the case.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then how will the section read?

Mr. LACEY—

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to raise such a force or to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States.

That provides, if Congress hereafter authorizes him to call the forces in, he may do so, or if it authorizes him to call the militia, he may do so, or if Congress had authorized him, he may call those forces in. In the joint resolution approved and sent in this morning we use that language, that he is authorized to call out the militia.

Mr. MOODY. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa that the amendment as proposed will entirely cover the difficulty, and that the President will have full authority in any existing emergency; but I question, and I submit whether that would be a wise, permanent part of the law. It would cover the existing emergency very clearly, because the President is to call out the militia.

Mr. LACEY. Congress will never again pass a resolution directing the militia to be called out for a foreign war. Consequently Congress will correct the resolution hereafter.

Mr. MOODY. I think that is a complete answer to my suggestion.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. One of the very constitutional grounds upon which the President is authorized to call out the militia is in case of a foreign war.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but it requires an act of Congress to put the constitutional right into operation. In the Cuban resolution we call it the militia, and I think we ought to call it the militia here, so as to have the two tacked together and have no doubt about this power. I have conferred with several gentlemen about me, and they think the words now cover the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MARSH. Perhaps it will if there is any difficulty in the bill, but I do not think there is. I think when you have written it in you will want to write it out. It makes the law a special one instead of a general one. It simply shows the trouble which gentlemen are liable to get into who undertake to amend a pretty-well matured statute without giving it much consideration.

Mr. LACEY. The bill is only three hours old, and I have given it as much attention as my friend from Illinois. We are taking the statute on the wing, and he and I have had occasion to examine military matters a good deal.

Mr. MARSH. It is certainly thirty-six hours old, and I think it is two weeks old.

Mr. LACEY. It is too weak if it is two weeks old, and it needs a little strengthening. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I see it is provided here, if I understand it from the marks there are across some of the lines, that the governors of the States shall appoint certain officers mentioned in the sixth section.

Mr. LACEY. We have not reached that section yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I just want a minute or two to reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH]. The use of the word "only" in the second line of section 4 is what renders the amendment necessary, because you can call them out only when Congress has done a certain thing it has not done, but has done the other thing.

Mr. SULZER. But it says "where war is imminent," and it is imminent now if it ever was.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if the committee does not think it would be a proper amendment to fix the limitation at two years instead of three years. Would it not have a good effect on volunteers? None of us expect the war to last three years, or two years even.

Mr. HULL. The question as to the length of time is limited to "during the war." When the war closes, as fast as possible the volunteers will be mustered out.

Mr. HUNTER. But, as an incentive to enlist, would it not be better to have two years as a maximum instead of three years? Would it not be a wise provision at this time? I only make the suggestion. I do not want to antagonize the committee.

Mr. HULL. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa has nothing to do with that provision. I want to say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and my friend from New York [Mr. RAY], both good lawyers, that the committee as a whole regard the amendment as of no special importance, even after what has been said, but it makes more emphatic what the bill takes into consideration and provides for. I want to say that while the gentleman from Iowa may say it is a hastily considered measure, it has been considered by the law officers of the Government several weeks, is their ripe judgment, not hastily formed, but their mature judgment, where they have had all the laws of the United States before them; and I want to say that I believe this House would have done better if they had taken the bill as it came from the law officers, not my bill, not the committee's bill, but after the committee had amended it.

Mr. MARSH. And commissioning the officers.

Mr. HULL. I say we have protected the power of the governors in this respect.

Mr. MOODY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this bill was framed before the passage of the so-called Cuban resolutions?

Mr. HULL. The framing of the bill was commenced shortly after it was determined that the so-called Cuban resolutions would be enacted.

Mr. MOODY. It was framed before they were finally passed?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. Then, as it is perfectly clear that the only authority claimed for the exercise of the President's power under this measure is in the Cuban resolutions, the gentlemen who framed this statute contemplated that Congress should give an express permission to the President to exercise the authority which the bill proposes to confer upon him.

Mr. HULL. So far as I am concerned, I shall not antagonize the amendment.

Mr. MARSH. The amendment makes the language of the section read thus:

Only after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to raise such a force, or to call into actual service the militia of the United States.

Now, sir, ever since 1792 there has been, and there is to-day, a statute in force authorizing the President to call into the United States service the militia of the country. This amendment amounts to absolutely nothing; it simply repeats what is contained in the law of 1792 and what has existed as law from that time to the present.

Mr. LACEY. I concede that the gentleman would be right but for the fact that we are now about to pass a law which says that the President shall not call out any forces until authorized by Congress. Does not my friend lose sight of that clause of the bill?

Mr. MARSH. No, sir. We are passing here a law authorizing the President to call out troops. Now, I will read the section with the amendment; and let me say that in the remark I made a little while ago about gentlemen undertaking to amend a statute without having given it much consideration, nothing was further from my thoughts than to impugn in the least degree the professional standing of my friend from Iowa, because professionally as well as personally I have a very high estimate of him. Now, let me read the first clause of section 4:

SEC. 4. That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force.

That is the text of the bill. The amendment is in these words:

To call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman has not stated the proposed amendment.

Mr. MARSH. The gentleman says I have not stated the amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have stated only a part of it.

Mr. MARSH. Now, will the gentleman listen? I took this bill up to the Clerk's desk and required the Clerk to interline the identical amendment of the gentleman from Iowa; and I do not believe that the Clerk has misled me.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman omitted the words "has or," after "Congress," in the tenth line. In the amendment that clause reads: "after Congress has or shall have authorized," etc.

Mr. MARSH. The suggestion of the gentleman simply reenforces my point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MARSH. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MARSH. I have no professional pride about this section, but I desire the House to understand it. The section as amended would read:

That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States.

Now, the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] does not affect my point. There has been, as I said, upon the statute books since 1792 a provision giving the President authority to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, and this authority was given for the purposes prescribed in that act—to enforce the law, to suppress rebellion, and to repel invasion. Those are the three grounds on which the President is authorized to call the militia into the actual service of the Government.

Now, the resolution which we passed here declaring war or providing for armed intervention in the Cuban matter authorized in so many words the use not only of the land and naval forces, but of the militia of the United States. This amendment of the gentleman from Iowa puts nothing into this bill that is not in it already, that is not already the law.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then it does not hurt it.

Mr. MARSH. I know it does not hurt it, but what is the use of repetition? What is the use of attempting to make the House believe that the amendment embraces something new, something which is not already the law? That is all I have to say.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. HANDY. Not on the paragraph; on the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Very well; on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that all debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The amendment was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 294. An act for the relief of Robert Spaugh;

H. R. 4929. An act extending the time for the completion of bridge across St. Lawrence River; and

H. R. 8569. An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 371. An act granting a pension to Sarah E. Campbell.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, before reading the next section of the bill I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill if he does not think the best interests of the Government will be subserved by fixing the limit of the time of enlistment at a shorter period than three years—that fixed in the bill? I for one feel that there is very much in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois concerning the inexpediency of requiring enlistments for three years. There is no man in the United States, and probably no man outside of the United States who does not live in Spain, who believes that this war can possibly last two years, much less three.

Mr. SULZER. It will not last thirty days.

Mr. McMILLIN. I agree with my friend from New York that it will last but a very short time. And it strikes me, therefore, that possibly many young men might be hampered, who desired to enlist, by this three-year clause, because business and other engagements require them to shorten the time, possibly; and where there is no need for such a long enlistment it seems unwise to drive, and this possibly would drive, a great many young men from entering the service.

I do not know that I have sufficient repugnance to the length of the term provided to induce me to offer an amendment myself; but I think the gentleman in charge of the bill might offer an amendment to reduce the limit here, which would have no effect upon the bill otherwise than to possibly enable many men to enlist who could not otherwise do so.

Mr. HULL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the term of three years is entirely conditioned on the war lasting that long. The bill provides that they shall be discharged from the service of the United States—mustered out—immediately on the conclusion of hostilities.

Now, we did learn one thing in reference to enlistments during our late civil war. That is, that short terms of enlistment were demoralizing and exceedingly expensive to the Government. I fully agree with my friend that the war will not be of long duration; but if it should be kept up in a desultory manner by carrying on an isolated or guerrilla warfare, as some of the papers in Spain threaten, it may take longer than the gentleman suggests, and the three-years term of enlistment would certainly do no harm. These men would be discharged from the service as soon as the war ends. I do not think it would be terrorizing to the young men of the country even to assume that they would be needed for three years in this service.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, my suggestion to be misunderstood. So far as the danger is concerned, I do not believe there is a young man in the United States who is able to enlist who would be terrified by the possibility of the struggle being prolonged for three years. But my suggestion was that many young men who could and would enlist under all circumstances for one or two years might by business surroundings be prevented from entering the service for a period of three years. If one year or two years is made the term, a great many persons could enlist who would otherwise be unable to do so; and I only made the suggestion in view of the fact that there are many thousands of young men who would be glad to enlist if they could enter for short terms.

I ask the chairman of the committee to consent to modifying the provision here to one year.

Mr. HULL. I would not do that. I do not think it economy, wisdom, or good policy.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not wish to antagonize the committee by offering an amendment——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will test the sense of the committee myself. I move to strike out "three years" and insert "two years" in this section. The chairman of the committee himself does not believe the war will last three years.

Mr. CANNON. Why not put it "thirty days," if it is only to last until breakfast time?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not seek any such amendment as that. The gentleman from Illinois may if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 2, strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not want to advertise to the world that we expect the war to last for three years. It will not. We will prosecute it in such shape that it can not possibly last two years or one year; for there will be no enemy to meet by that time.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, a word on the amendment.

I am not very tenacious myself on the question of making the change from three years to two, as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, but I do want to say here that I believe we had better retain the term of three years as fixed in the bill. The question of getting volunteers for a three-years term of enlistment, so far as that is concerned, does not afford me any serious consideration. The State of Kansas alone will furnish all of the three-year volunteers that may be needed in this war, if you will give us a chance; we are ready, let us pass this bill and act promptly. I hope the debates may be cut short, and that this bill may be passed within the next hour and sent on to completion.

Having told the President to drive Spain out of Cuba, let us hold up his hand and hasten the good work. Let us retain the bill as the committee reported it, and save the three-years clause. I am opposed to cutting it down. Having at last ordered Spain to stop its butchery and starvation at our very door, let us hasten every preparation to enforce the order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say that we should, if necessary, fight it out on this line for the next three years. I do not think it will require so long myself, but this provision in the bill seems to be a wise and economical provision, and I hope it will be retained. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McMILLIN, it was rejected.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

Mr. HANDY. I should like the attention of the committee to the reading of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to call for at once and to accept the services of volunteers, either as cavalry, infantry, artillery, or other branches of the military service, in such numbers, not exceeding 400,000, as he may deem necessary for the purpose of prosecuting the impending war: Provided, That the services of the volunteers herein mentioned shall be for such time as the President may direct, not exceeding three years nor less than six months, and they shall be disbanded at the end of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this substitute is to make this legislation apply to this impending war instead of applying to all future wars. I take it to be the part of wisdom for us to legislate for our own time. We do not have wars every year. Let us hope they will be less frequent in the future than in the past. We have a right to anticipate that after the war upon which we are now entering there will not be another war for thirty or forty years. It is not necessary for us here and now to pass legislation that can not come into force and effect for thirty or forty years. Let us content ourselves in meeting the present emergency.

I confess I think the limitation put in my proposition is perhaps wider than need be. I have said 400,000. Probably 100,000 would be enough, but the 400,000 are certainly enough. That is a good deal smaller number than the bill itself authorizes. There is no limit in the bill this side of the whole 12,000,000 men in the United States capable of bearing arms.

The House will have before it in this substitute a chance to vote directly as to whether it wants at this time to legislate for this war or whether it desires to legislate not only for this war but for all future wars.

I do not care whether this bill is five hours old or thirty-six hours old, or even whether it is two weeks old. I question, even with its enormous age of two weeks, suggested by a member of the committee, whether it has been sufficiently considered to be certainly wise for all future time. If we are able to-day to do the wise thing for our present situation, that is enough. I desire that Congress should keep its hand immediately on the armies to be raised, yet I want to give full, ample, complete, and immediate power to the President in this matter. Let us be satisfied with that. The substitute authorizes 400,000 men to be called for at once, put into camp at once, trained at once to take care of themselves, learning how to cook for themselves, how to camp out in the open air, how to take the life of a soldier, getting hardened to it. These soldiers are to be enlisted for not less than six months and not more than three years, in the discretion of the President, to be disbanded at the end of the war. That substitute seems to me wise.

I wish to say to the House that the substitute is not based upon my own very meager military knowledge. It was drafted after consultation with one of the first military intellects in the United States. It is taken from a bill which I prepared and submitted to some soldiers whose names I do not care to mention, but who have reputations throughout the country as of the first order of military intellect, long before the present bill was known to me. So it is not merely my own idea in regard to the matter, but it meets my approval because it has a limit, because it is for the present occasion, because it provides without any doubt or hesitation that the President may act at once. I should like to see volunteers called for to-morrow.

Mr. HULL. I hope the amendment will be voted down. The committee could not accept such an amendment as that.

Mr. COWHERD. Let us have the amendment reported again.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does not the gentleman from Delaware know that they have a Corps of Engineers in the Army?

Mr. HANDY. That is provided for.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You leave that out.

Mr. HANDY. The engineers are not left out. My substitute says:

Cavalry, infantry, artillery, or other branches of the military service.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for: Provided, That all men received into service in the Volunteer Army shall, as far as practicable, be taken from the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, after the word "law," in line 21, page 2, all down to and including the word "for," in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, strike out, after the word "law," "and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into the service the men called for."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I think these words entirely unnecessary. The first part of section 5 provides:

That when it becomes necessary to raise a Volunteer Army, the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law.

Mr. RAY of New York. The words are absolutely necessary.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, possibly I differ with the gentleman, distinguished and intelligent as he is.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me ask my friend how would you get these men into the service if you do not under rules and regulations?

Mr. TALBERT. It says within such limits as may be fixed by law. If this bill is not passed at all, there is sufficient law on the statute books to prosecute the war with vigor. I do not see any necessity for it; and I for one am opposed to legislation when it is even doubtful or unnecessary.

Gentlemen upon this floor have spoken very lightly about the war in which we are about to engage. But let me tell you, gentlemen, men spoke very lightly about the last war. I heard men speaking of drinking all the blood that would be spilled or shed and taking all the powder in their coffee that would be used during the last war. But they would have had a considerable turn of it before they got through. [Laughter.] Now, to use a homely illustration, when two dogs get into a fight, every dog who hears the barking and yelping will make for that scene and will enter into the fight. You are beginning a war with Spain. How do you know but what when the fight begins every nation upon this earth may possibly get into it before it is ended.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then we ought to hurry.

Mr. TALBERT. I am in favor of legislation to prepare us for war. I do not want to hamper the President in anything pertaining to it. I want to strike out these words here because it gives the Secretary of War power which, in my humble judgment, may hamper the volunteers of the United States, and may prevent them, possibly, from electing or naming their own officers. They do not go in as servants, but as soldiers and men, and they would like to have something to say about the election of the officers who are to command them. They do not wish to be put into the hands of a Regular Army officer. They wish to be kept separate and distinct from the others.

I maintain, sir, that if these words are not stricken out it gives additional power to the Secretary of War, if he sees proper to hamper them in their organization, and possibly in the last may enable him to put such officers over them as may not be acceptable to them. Let them go in unhampered. Let them go in not as servants but as soldiers, having ample opportunity to name the officers under whom they are to serve. They will be more efficient. They will feel like soldiers and not like servants. I hope that this amendment will prevail.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, in section 5——

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, section 5——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MARSH. Which gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman on the right of the aisle.

Mr. HUNTER. This section provides:

That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law.

Now, in this bill there is no limitation fixed by law for the number of men that is to be called for. He might call for several millions. It seems to me that there ought to be an amendment inserted fixing the limitation, so that the President may call within that limitation, if this law is to be properly construed.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. COX. Now, the point that you are making there is that the President ought to be restricted in the number of men that he calls for?

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir.

Mr. COX. This section, if you read it carefully—you are a member of the committee, I believe——

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will permit me, this refers to an act——

Mr. COX. I want to get at the point now. Now, it is not your idea that the President shall be restricted to a certain number of men that he shall call for?

Mr. HUNTER. According to the construction I place upon it, that section says in plain terms that when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired within such limits as may be fixed by law. Now, this law we are creating to-day fixes no limit except the entire militia of the States, which would be 10,000,000 or 12,000,000.

Mr. COX. Now, your meaning is that the President shall call them all out at once?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Now, why not? If you are going to war, go to war.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to that construction. With that construction of the law I am perfectly willing that it shall stand, and I shall not offer the amendment I contemplated. But my view is that there should be a limitation of 400,000 or 500,000 men, and that he shall call for such proportion as he may require.

Mr. STEELE. Was that section 6?

Mr. HUNTER. Section 5.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman offered no amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "Columbia," in line 2, page 3, these words: "and the Indian Territory."

And after the word "population," in line 3, page 3, add the following language:

"And any company, troop, battalion, or regiment from the Indian Territory shall be formed and organized under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the amendment reported again, as there was so much confusion that I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HULL. The only objection I have to that is that you would have to wait an indefinite time for the apportionment to know whether they could fill the quota or not. The other Territories have governors and can act at once.

Mr. LITTLE. This country to which my amendment applies embraces a large territory—as large as many of the States of this Union. It embraces a population of 400,000 people, more than 300,000 of whom are whites and 80,000 Indians. I know from communications received from these people that they are anxious to bear their part of the burdens of this war, if one is to come. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the Secretary of War can easily name a colonel, and they can have the regiments by the time they could have them from the States. There is no governor of this Territory to appoint them, but according to the amendment it is left to be organized under such rules and regulations of the Secretary of War as he may prescribe.

I insist that these people ought to have an opportunity to participate in the struggle that is to come. They are as brave and courageous as any you will find in the States of this Union, and are loyal to the flag of our common country. They have no representative upon this floor to speak for them, but knowing many of these people personally, I bear cheerful testimony to their courage and loyalty, and I feel at this momentous period in our history that I can speak for them, and in any regiments that may be formed in that country you will find the white man and Indian standing side by side, vying with each other as to who shall render the most loyal service to the country and do the highest acts of courage on the field of battle. Shall they be denied this privilege?

I hope not, Mr. Chairman, and if allowed to participate in the coming conflict, when the war is over and the roll of honor is called you will find the troops from the Indian country standing side by side with the gallant sons of the States of this Union. Let the amendment be adopted and place these people on a footing of equality with the people of the several States, and give them this opportunity to add new glory and additional fame to our national arms, and you will have done simple justice.

Mr. HULL. Let us have a vote on it, and it will probably be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the word "Alaska" be added to the amendment just adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Oh, we could not get our reindeer up there in time to get the troops back. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the word "Alaska" be added after the words "Indian Territory."

Mr. HULL. I object to that, as it would delay the raising of troops. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think Alaska ought to be represented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "Territories," in line 2, page 3, the words "and Alaska."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 3, page 3, after the word "population," the following: "Provided also, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the various companies and regiments of the Volunteer Army from electing their officers."

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that is a very valuable amendment. I may be mistaken, of course, as I have not a great deal of experience in war matters. However, three years as a private soldier in the war convinced me that there is nothing that attracts and commands the admiration, even of the very bravest men of the citizen soldiery, more than the privilege and right of electing their own officers. Now, the amendment suggested by the member from South Carolina had more in it than many members suppose. In my opinion the bill vests in the Secretary of War the power to prescribe such regulations as will have the effect of preventing companies of citizen soldiers from electing their officers. I wish to exclude by this amendment any such conclusion as that.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the tyranny of the Army, the discipline of the Army, is more to be dreaded than the bullets and the bayonets that are used by the adversary. Soldiers have felt it and dreaded it to a greater extent than they dread the actual conflict on the battlefield; and if you would render the Army service popular, if you would encourage the young men of the country to volunteer—and there is not going to be such a rush on the part of the volunteers as many gentlemen suppose—you should adopt this amendment. I believe the young men of North Carolina are as brave as ever existed on God's green earth; and yet, if it is known that they are not to have the privilege of electing their officers or to have the privilege by ballot of saying who shall be their colonel and captain, it will have a very strong tendency, at least, of deterring the young men from enlisting in my State, and I have no doubt it would to the citizens of other States of the Union. I hope the gentleman will concede that this amendment is necessary and allow it to be adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if I were going to plant in the organization of the volunteer force a seed of sin that should grow up to death, if I wanted to make the Army that is to go forth to fight a caucus of ward politicians, I would adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina. The original organization of the regiments will be under the command and direction of the governor of the State, and, as in 1861, they will be entitled to choose their own officers, but from that time forward to inject into the force of men that ought to be a disciplined organization a caucus, held every time a lieutenant resigns or a captain is killed, would be to perpetuate a system of disorganization that would absolutely destroy all organization and all discipline whatever.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the distinguished gentleman from Ohio allow me a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. LINNEY. I ask the gentleman whether he does not know that such men as General Pender—men who stood at the very head of the best officers of the Republic—were elected by the vote of their regiments? Many of the most efficient officers in the Southern army were elected by their companies and regiments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know this. I entered the Army in the early days of 1861, and I know what the ex-soldiers around me will testify to—that between that time and the end of 1862 more than one-half of the officers who had been elected were sent home, either upon their own recognition of their total unfitness or by the action of these examining boards that every army must have. There never was a volunteer force organized in the world that was not compelled to have in it the power to get rid of its political soldiers who had worked their way into official positions. Why, sir, there was a colonel of an Ohio regiment—this is a matter of record—who was elected by the overwhelming vote of the ten companies of his regiment; he went into the battle of Shiloh, and after the battle wrote a letter, telling General Sherman that he had discovered he was totally unfit to command troops or to stay in a battle. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. He was an honest man, at any rate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And he went out of the service. The same thing was true of a considerable percentage of the volunteer officers who went into the service under the elections of that day.

Mr. RAY of New York. That man was from Ohio, I believe. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am willing to certify that it was not the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Now, then, after a while there come these vacancies. How are they to be filled? They are to be filled by the governors of the States, upon the recommendation—of whom? Upon the recommendation of the commanding officers of the troops in the field. The method of appointment amounts to a system of rewards for efficiency and bravery that you can not have under any other system. Do you want to call a caucus of a regiment on the eve of a battle to see who shall be colonel of it? If the lieutenant-colonel has proved himself fit for the place, he will be promoted upon the recommendation of the general commanding, through the governor of the State. If he is not fit for the place, the major of the regiment will be promoted over him. You can not have a caucus of a military organization in the field without demoralization.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I hope with a great deal of earnestness that this proposed amendment will be voted down. The experience stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was, I believe, the experience of every officer who served during the war. This scheme was tried in 1861, and it was found to be absolutely destructive of all discipline and efficiency.

The first thing that you must have in order to render an army efficient is impartiality on the part of officers of regiments and companies toward their men, and that impartiality you can not have under the system proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. Without consuming further the time of the Committee of the Whole, I beg gentlemen to vote this amendment down.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I can not say anything as to the experience of the gentleman from Ohio or the experience of the gentleman from Missouri, because during the war they were in a different section of the country from where I was—that is, most of the time. [Laughter.] If their experience was that they had untrue soldiers in the Army—men who were hospital rats, men who sought the first opportunity to get excused from the service on account of physical disability and go home—I want to say we had no such officers in the Confederate army. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It may be you had men in your Army [addressing the Republican side of the House] fighting for this thing and that thing and the other thing. I know that you had some fighting, as has been frequently charged, for "dirdeen dollars a month." It may be that such men ought to have no voice in electing their officers. But we had none such in the Southern army.

I rose to say that the best officers we had, and about all we had, on the Confederate side during the late war were men who had been elected by the vote of the soldiers who served under them. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will be adopted. I repel the insinuation that it will work disorganization and give us an undisciplined and unworthy army. I will say again that if you want the men of this nation, whether from the East or the West, the North or the South, to volunteer, you must not lead them to believe that after they have volunteered they must serve under a martinet, under a tyrant, but you must give them ground to believe that they will be allowed to select the men whom they are to follow.

You must let them believe and understand that no bill or legislation will be introduced or passed which will bar them from having a free expression of opinion as to who they shall follow in time of danger and in time of battle.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will obtain. I shall vote for it.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent, before he takes his seat.

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly, I will yield for a question. You know that you may ask a question that I can not answer, for certain classes of people can do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRIS. I wish to ask the gentleman simply a question for information.

Mr. TALBERT. I would be very glad to answer the gentleman, if I can.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it not a fact that early in the war, during the organization of the Confederate armies, the officers were elected by the privates?

Mr. TALBERT. They were elected all through the war; that is to say, at the beginning of the war and toward the end of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it not found out very soon after the beginning of the war to be an entirely impracticable system, and the custom soon ended?

Mr. TALBERT. No, sir; it was not found to be an impracticable system. It continued all through the war; and the very best officers in the Confederate army were men chosen from the ranks in that way.

Mr. MORRIS. But did not they abandon it early in the war?

Mr. TALBERT. No; they did not. They always elected the officer.

Mr. MORRIS. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TALBERT. What I mean to say is that no such appointments as are contemplated in this bill were made. Of course officers were promoted for gallantry and heroic conduct and efficient service.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill is recognized.

Mr. HULL. I yield a minute to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN].

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I happened to be a Confederate soldier in the late war, for the purpose of throwing some light on the history of that struggle in regard to the election of the officers of the army, I wish to state that regiments were organized and went into the service under officers whom they elected for themselves, but after they were in the service no officer was ever elected above the grade of third lieutenant.

Everything went up by promotion or seniority. No such thing could have occurred in that service as this provision for the election by the soldiers themselves of an officer holding the rank of captain or colonel, because as vacancies occurred the officers were promoted in the order of their seniority; that is to say, the major went up a step, the captain went up a step, and so on; and the only man who was elected when a vacancy occurred was the third lieutenant, who was taken from the minor officers or from the ranks. It was found in this case that an election was better than appointment, because the third lieutenant was chosen from the best and brainiest soldiers in the ranks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question for information.

Mr. HULL. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I see it is provided that these officers shall be subject to such examination as to fitness as the President may require. That will not preclude the military education?

Mr. HULL (interrupting). I understand the gentleman's question, but he will see that that is all out of the bill by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Very well.

Mr. HULL. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I only rise to say that from my limited experience in the civil war I know that an army which elects its officers will be wholly inefficient. I do know the fact that the election of the officers of the regiment will ruin the discipline of any army and its efficiency, no matter where it may be in the world.

It is not worth while to say that all men are brave. All men are not brave; and while all men will fight when properly led and disciplined, if they are not properly led and not properly disciplined you can not count upon them in the hour of danger.

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking of the rule of the Confederate army, I do not recollect how far that went in all the States, but do know that in the command I served in during most of the time officers were promoted by orders and not by election. It might not have been strictly according to law, but in war the law is silent, and I do know that the commands that were most efficient were officered by men who were promoted for bravery and for efficiency in the service.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LINNEY. Who is the best judge of the good conduct and bravery of the soldier in the ranks—the governor of the State at home, the President of the United States, or the man's comrades?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I would answer that the best judge is the officer in immediate command. The best judge of the proper conduct of the soldier in the ranks is the captain of the company; the best judge of the proper conduct of the captain and the minor officers is the colonel, if the colonel performs his duty properly, and the best judge of the efficiency of the colonel is the brigade commander.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, simply a word in conclusion of this debate. The next section provides that the governor of the State shall have absolute control so far as the officers of the various regiments of the State are concerned, and this amendment to this section is not pertinent, because it belongs properly in the next section. This section provides only for the mustering into the service of the regiment, and does not affect the question of officering them at all.

I move that all debate on the section be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. LINNEY, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Volunteer Army and the militia of the States when called into the service of the United States shall be organized under, and shall be subject to, the laws, orders, and regulations governing the Regular Army: Provided, That each regiment of the Volunteer Army shall have one surgeon and one assistant surgeon, and that all the regimental and company officers shall be appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the governors of the States in which their respective organizations are raised, subject to such an examination as to fitness and capacity as the President may prescribe: Provided further, That when the members of any company or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, as such company or regiment, the regimental and company officers in service with the militia organization thus enlisting may be appointed by the President, subject to such an examination as to the fitness and capacity of said officers as he may prescribe, to be officers of corresponding grades in the same organization when it shall have been received into the service of the United States as a part of the Volunteer Army.

Mr. HULL. The committee have proposed certain amendments to this section. I ask the Clerk to report those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. COX. I want to know how that section will read when amended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. COX. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the following words: "President upon the recommendation of the;" so that it will read: "shall be appointed by the governors of the States."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. KITCHIN was read, as follows:

Insert in line 12, page 3, after the word "raised," the following:

"Under the same regulations, terms, and conditions under which the governors of the several States now appoint or commission such officers in the military forces of their States."

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order that that is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask that it be withheld for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina is not in order until the other amendment is acted upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman has asked that his amendment be withheld.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question for information. Who is to appoint and commission the officers of that part of the Volunteer Army to be raised from the District of Columbia?

Mr. HULL. I suppose without any question the President of the United States would do that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He occupies a position with reference to the National Guard of the District similar to that occupied by the governor of a State.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no provision in reference to it in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The President now appoints all the officers of the National Guard in this District.

Mr. DOCKERY. The general statute fixes that.

Mr. HULL. There is a general statute fixing that.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. The committee submit another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 12, 13, and 14, strike out the following words:
"Subject to such an examination as to fitness and capacity as the President may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is another amendment further down.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, after the word "company," insert the words "troop, battery, battalion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 19, after the words "by the," at the beginning of the line, strike out the remainder of the section and insert "governors of the States."

So that it will read:

May be appointed by the governors of the States.

Mr. HULL. I want to add to that the words "and Territories."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Do you not think that in line 17 you ought to put in the words "troop, battery, battalion?"

Mr. HULL. Yes; but we can not do that until we adopt the committee amendments, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] will move that amendment.

Mr. MARSH. I will move that.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the concluding words of this section ought hardly to be stricken out. Why ought these words in line 20, and ending with the section, be stricken out? It seems to me these words, beginning in line 20, "to be officers of corresponding grades in the same organization when it shall have been received into the service of the United States as a part of the Volunteer Army," when we make this amendment, ought to remain.

Mr. HULL. He would have to require an examination by the governor, and we might find that very irksome. It was in the bill originally, but now it is provided that the President prescribe rules and regulations.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The chairman of the committee does not seem to understand my suggestion. I am not speaking about the examination of the officers. I am speaking of striking out these words at the end of the section, which declare the position these officers shall have after being appointed by the governor. Why ought they not to remain? I think your amendment ought to be confined in line 19 to striking out the words "subject to such examination as to fitness and capacity of said officers as he may prescribe," and then insert these words that I have spoken of.

Mr. HULL. I would have no objection to that, but they would have a corresponding grade in any event when mustered into United States service.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think these words ought to remain.

Mr. HICKS. Why not start in at the word "subject?"

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think by striking out this provision for examination and leaving the remaining words in the section it will be all right.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me? The provision as it now stands, with the committee amendment, will allow these National Guard regiments to go into the service with the same officers and character of officers that they now have prescribed by their State laws. For instance, in Illinois we have three battalions and three majors. But under the general law you probably have but two majors. So that with the provision as it now stands not only do they have three majors in the Illinois National Guard, but each battalion has an adjutant, and under this provision they go in with their battalion adjutant and their three majors; and if you insist upon putting back into the bill the language that you have indicated, you will simply require them to conform in their organization to the regular troops, which is not desirable, I think. Better leave it where it is. The National Guard is well protected and cared for in that provision.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think this language would not be subject to the objection suggested. It seems to me that these officers received into the volunteer service as enlisted men according to this phraseology would be officers of corresponding grades in the same organization when it shall have been received into the service of the United States as a part of the Volunteer Army. I think it simply declares that when they go in, they shall occupy the same position as before.

Mr. GROUT. Do you think that language is necessary? Would it not be sufficiently clear when they are already in their organization covered by the term "thus enlisted," may be appointed by the governor of the State?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It may be, Mr. Chairman. I merely wish to call attention to it, thinking that these words could be left in with profit.

Mr. GROUT. They could, with propriety, be left in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and the amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that you have got the governors of the States and Territories in there, but you have made no provision for the appointment of troops in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HULL. But the amendment itself covers that. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] has an amendment to offer which I think ought to be offered.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 6, line 9, by striking out the word "and," between the word "surgeon" and "one," and insert after the word "surgeon" where it occurs the second time in said line the words "and one chaplain."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for me to ask the gentleman a question? Now, in the various States there are such officers, for example, as "adjutant-general of the State" and of the rank of "brigadier-general." When these volunteers go into the service of the United States, with what rank do they go into the service?

Mr. HULL. They do not go in at all. They are State officers only.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

At the beginning of line 17, on page 3, I move to insert the words "troops, battery, battalion."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the beginning of line 17, page 3, insert the words "troops, battery, battalion."

So that it will read:

"As such company, troops, battery, battalion, or regiment," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is on the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 12, page 3, after the word "raised," the following:
"Under the same regulations, terms, and conditions under which the governors of the several States now appoint or commission such officers in the military forces of their States."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment I have just offered is to qualify or modify the powers of the governor. It is right for the governor to be authorized to appoint the company and regimental officers, but I think he should be restrained by the same regulations which govern his appointment and commission of such officers in the State militia. I understand that in some of the States the governor has unqualified authority to appoint any man he sees fit to these positions; that is, the official positions of the company and the regiment. In other States the privates of the companies elect their commissioned officers, and these commissioned officers elect the officers of the battalions and regiments.

Of course this does not apply, and my amendment can not apply to the Regular Army of the United States, but only to the Volunteer Army. This pending bill maintains the distinction throughout between the Volunteer Army and the Regular Army. The Volunteer Army is practically the same class of troops as the State militia; and in my opinion the laws regulating the appointment of officers in the militia should apply to these State forces that go into and make up the Volunteer Army. I think this amendment is a proper one and is absolutely essential to the general and enthusiastic enlistment of volunteers. It is certainly not subject to the objections that were made a few minutes ago against the amendment offered by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], because there will be more favoritism displayed and more danger of acquiring incompetent and unsuitable men for officers in an unqualified power in the governor to select them than there will be in allowing the privates to select the commissioned officers of the company and these officers to select the officers of the regiments and the battalions.

These men who volunteer to defend their country's rights are not conscripted, and should not be subjected to the ironclad rules of the United States Army in the appointment of their officers. As volunteers they should have the right to name their immediate superiors. If it is known that the governor has the absolute power to make the appointments in his own discretion, without ascertaining the wishes of the privates, I fear there will be hundreds of men who would be glad to answer the President's call for volunteers, but who would be deterred by the fact that they would have no voice in the selection of the officers who were to command them. I feel sure that such will be the case in my State and in others where the privates elect their officers in the State militia.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, let us just think a moment upon this. The organization of the militia under the governor of a State is just as decided and emphatic as any laws can make it. Now, then, if we can not trust the governor of the State in the appointment of officers, whom can we trust? Now, a friend on my right suggests, Suppose we have a partisan governor. Suppose we have a Republican governor, suppose we have a Democratic governor, it will work just as well for us as it does against us. Now, are we going to try to organize an army upon the idea as to whether the governor is a Republican or a Democrat? I never thought of that before, and I do not think of it now.

Mr. KITCHIN. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. COX. No; one word first. You are trying to go to war, and if your Republican governor will not fight or do right, it is no fault of ours. If our Democratic governor will not do right, it is no fault of ours. I do hope that we shall keep this political question out of this, and I do hope, further, that if we go to war there will be no Democrats and no Republicans and no Populists in the fight. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. We are not trying to go to war, though it seems inevitable now; but the gentleman from Tennessee seems to have the impression that my amendment has something political in it. This is what I desire to correct, for in this he is wrong. I will state that it does not apply to a Populist, to a Republican, or to a Democrat as such, but to every governor of every State alike. It proposes to make every governor conform in his appointments to the same regulations that are prescribed by the people of the State that elected him for the militia. It has no politics in it, and can not be so construed.

Mr. COX. That is very handsome, but it is not very solid.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then the gentleman does not comprehend it.

Mr. COX. Matters of comprehension are matters of comparison. I am not going to vote in this Congress on a question of war upon any political consideration whatever. Now, I think we mean war, and I am for fighting it out right square up, quick and fair. I want no advantage for my people more than I concede to anybody else.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will consent that the State of Tennessee be excepted, if the gentleman so desires.

Mr. COX. You need not except Tennessee. She will furnish more soldiers than your State will in any war.

Mr. KITCHIN. The record does not show that she has done it.

Mr. COX. Yes; it does.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina can not be objectionable. It simply prescribes for the officering of this volunteer force, whose officers are to be appointed under this bill by the governors of the respective States, the same regulations precisely as apply to the governors in the discharge of their duties with respect to the officers of the militia. If this amendment be adopted, the governor of each State will appoint the officers in the volunteer organization as he appoints those of the militia who may be incorporated in the Army.

I do not think that the amendment is unreasonable. I believe it will be beneficial. The National Guard, known as such, and the volunteer forces raised otherwise are practically the same thing. They are all citizen soldiers, all volunteer soldiers. If there is reason why any part of them should select their officers, it seems to me there is equal reason why the other part should have the same privilege. Why should the militiamen select their officers and the governor appoint the persons thus selected, and at the same time the volunteers not have the right to select their officers, while the governor, not the President, is given the power to appoint?

If the bill had remained as it was, with the President making the appointments, I see clearly how, conforming it in that way to the regulations of the Regular Army, there would not be a selection of the officers by the privates in the ranks. But when you lodge the appointing power of the two organizations in the same place, why should not the men who may volunteer in those organizations yet to be formed—State organizations, to be officered by the State—have precisely the same control and authority in the selection of their officers as those who are now members of State organizations already formed? That is all that this amendment does. I really believe it ought to be adopted, if the militiamen, the National Guardsmen, are to be permitted to select their own officers, and everybody concedes that they should be.

Mr. HANDY. Has the gentleman noticed the effect of the word "now" in the amendment? As offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, the amendment requires that the appointments made by the governors of the various States shall be in accordance with and under the conditions under which they now appoint officers of the militia. This bill is to be a permanent bill. Before the war is over the laws of the various States may be different from what they are now. I think that the word "now" should at least be stricken out.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am inclined to think that the word "now" should be stricken out. I suppose there would be no objection to that.

Mr. HULL rose.

Mr. KITCHIN. If I can have——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from North Carolina wishes to modify his amendment by striking out the word "now," I have no objection, but I do not wish to yield the floor.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is all that I desire.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be modified by striking out the word "now."

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. In this bill we have gone as far as we ought to go in recognizing the power of governors of the States. This amendment is intended to circumscribe the power of the governors and seems to presuppose that they will not act from high motives or will not obey the laws of their States if they have special laws on the subject. I do not believe it is competent for us in this bill to undertake to go to work and vitalize all the laws of the different States for perfecting the organization of the National Guard and militia so as to make those laws apply to the volunteer force which may be mustered into the service of the United States.

I think we can safely trust the governors with some power in this matter. Let the governor commission every officer from colonel down to and including second lieutenant for all vacancies that may occur during the war. But the militia laws might be entirely out of place as to the manner in which the governor should exercise that discretion and might force the governor to appoint an incompetent man.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KITCHIN, it was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. KITCHIN)—ayes 58, noes 90.

Mr. HULL. I send to the desk an amendment, which is not a committee amendment, but has been agreed to by several members of the committee in the last few minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 6 the following:

"And shall when so appointed be officers of corresponding grades in the same organization when it shall have been received into the service of the United States as a part of the Volunteer Army."

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I move to amend by adding, after the word "company," in line 17, section 6, the words "troop, battery, and battalion."

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri has already been adopted in two places, but it needs to be adopted here to complete the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the amendment again.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. After the word "company," in line 17, add the words "troop, battery, and battalion."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask if the words "and Territories" have been added after the word "States" in line 11?

The CHAIRMAN. They have been inserted.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I move a further amendment, to strike out the word "and" between the words "regimental and company" in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "may," in line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall;" so that it will read:

And company officers in service in militia organizations thus enlisted shall be appointed, etc.

That conforms with the provision in the early part of the section, in line 8.

Mr. HULL. I would like to call the attention of my friend from Missouri to the fact that in line 10 of this provision it is provided that the governor shall have the right to appoint. But if you put instead of the word "may" the word "shall," you limit his discretion as to the power of appointment and as to whom he shall appoint. The word "may" is better there, unless you want him to appoint a certain man regardless of his capacity.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think this part of the provision relates to a different matter. From line 10 down to line 14 the provision relates to the volunteers. So far as the beginning of line 14 the provision relates to the incorporation into the service of the United States as a part of its Army of the organized militia of the States. But the provision here is as to the appointment of militia officers to go into the service of the United States.

Mr. HULL. That is my objection—the very point of it. There may be militia officers that the governor may see are not fit to go into war in command of troops, being over age or for some other reason unfit for the service—may not be qualified mentally. Now, if you put in the word "shall," you force the governor to take every incompetent man in the militia and make the appointment. That is to say, you make it imperative upon him to put them all in. It is a dangerous thing to do. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. DE ARMOND; and it was rejected.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know of the gentleman from Iowa if we ought not to amend this bill in section 6 to provide for more than sixty-five men total in each company? The present law provides for only that number in the company, including the noncommissioned officers, the quartermaster-sergeant, the wagon master, and all others.

Mr. HULL. That, Mr. Chairman, opens up a question very different from that dealt with by the bill, and if presented now will precipitate, no doubt, a long and needless discussion. Another provision of law will doubtless be considered at some time in the near future with regard to that matter, and it seems to me better at this time that we should not incorporate such a provision in this bill, but take that up on another occasion and dispose of it. This bill does not treat of regimental or company organization.

Mr. STEELE. You allow here only 650 men to a regiment, being 65 to each company. The act of March 3, 1863, provides that companies which have fallen below the maximum shall be deprived of their second lieutenant. Now, the result of this provision will be that when your regiment goes into service with its 650 men, in ten companies, perhaps the very first engagement, or even before the regiment is actually in the field at all, a company would find itself below the minimum, and would lose an officer who may have won his spurs in action, and yet could not be promoted under the law.

Mr. HULL. That is a matter that we would have to deal with separately and when we come to a bill for a better organization of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That all returns and muster rolls of organizations of the Volunteer Army and of militia organizations while in the service of the United States shall be rendered to the Adjutant-General of the Army, and upon the disbandment of such organizations the records pertaining to them shall be transferred to and filed in the Record and Pension Office of the War Department.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add in line 13, page 4, after the words "War Department," the following: "And regimental and all other medical officers serving with volunteer troops in the field or elsewhere shall keep a daily record of all soldiers reported sick or wounded, as shown by the morning calls or reports, and shall deposit such reports, with other reports provided for in this section, with the Record and Pension Office, as provided herein for other reports, returns, and muster rolls."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. That the staff of the commander of an army corps shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 inspector-general, 1 chief quartermaster, 1 chief commissary of subsistence, and 1 chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of colonel; 1 assistant adjutant-general, who shall have the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a division shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 inspector-general, 1 chief quartermaster, 1 chief commissary of subsistence, and 1 chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a brigade shall consist of 1 assistant adjutant-general, 1 assistant quartermaster, and 1 commissary of subsistence, each with the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of the Volunteer Army, or may be assigned by him, in his discretion, from officers of the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to amend this section by adding the words "Chief Engineer," in line 24. The engineer battalion is an important one, and this officer on the staff, the Chief Engineer, should not have been omitted in this section, in my judgment.

I move to insert, therefore, the words "one Chief Engineer" after the words "Adjutant-General," in line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

On page 4, line 24, after the words "Adjutant-General," insert the words "one Chief Engineer."

Mr. HAY. Ought not that to come in in another part of the bill?

Mr. HULL. You refer to section 10?

Mr. HAY. Yes; that provides not only for the staff of the Commander of the Army, but also for the brigades and divisions.

Mr. HULL. This provides only the Chief Engineer for the Army Corps. We are not providing for brigades and divisions at all.

Mr. HAY. All right; I only wanted to know if this was the proper place for it.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be an inspector-general for a brigade?

Mr. HULL. This is for a corps. The staff of the commander of an army corps shall be so and so.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. The bill says:

The staff of the commander of a brigade shall consist of one assistant adjutant-general, one assistant quartermaster, and one commissary of subsistence, each with the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law.

I do not see anything about an inspector-general.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman from Iowa is talking about another thing. Let him get through with that.

Mr. HULL. This is on page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill as printed does not provide for a judge-advocate for each corps. I move an amendment. After the word "subsistence," in line 1, page 5, I move to insert the words "one judge-advocate."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 1, after the word "subsistence," insert the words "one judge-advocate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I move to insert, in line 10, after the words "adjutant-general," the words "one assistant inspector-general."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, page 5, after the words "adjutant-general," insert the words "one assistant inspector-general."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no!

Mr. HULL. I do not believe we need him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LACEY. I move to insert before the word "colonel," in line 2, page 5, the word "lieutenant."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 5, before the word "colonel," insert the word "lieutenant."

Mr. LACEY. Upon that amendment I wish to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. The rank provided for these corps officers, quartermaster, inspector-general, and adjutant-general, in the late war was the rank of a lieutenant-colonel. I do not see any reason why we should give them a higher rank in this war than that which was found adequate in the last war. A little later on, if this amendment is adopted, it will necessitate a further change in line 8, by reducing the rank of division officers to major instead of lieutenant-colonel. I will move that later, provided it is the sense of the committee that this change ought to be made.

Mr. EVANS. It ought not to be made.

Mr. LACEY. This provides for a large number of full colonels upon the staff of the commander of a corps. The rank that heretofore has been found sufficient is that of lieutenant-colonel. That was fully adequate in the four years' war through which we passed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. LACEY. No; I am not mistaken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not only was the rank that of colonel, but in the division staff the assimilated rank, under a special act of Congress, was given to captains, so that they had pay of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. LACEY. A man was either appointed as a lieutenant-colonel, or they could take a second lieutenant and detail him to act as the adjutant-general of a corps, and when this detail was made, that made him a lieutenant-colonel as long as he served in that position. The rank was lieutenant-colonel whether he held it by assignment or by commission. It was not above that in any instance.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LACEY. We had an adjutant-general with a higher rank who was assigned to that duty, but that was not the rank properly attaching to that particular position. This is a proposition to increase the rank of all these officers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL] if the present organization of the Army provides for officers of this rank in these positions?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that this follows what the Regular Army could now have if they had an army corps. It is to give the volunteer officers the same rank that the Regular Army officers would have, as I understand it, under the general statute. I do not believe this ought to be cut out.

Mr. LACEY. Where is there any statute providing that the adjutant-general of a corps in the Regular Army shall have the rank of colonel? There is no such authority. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the amendment should prevail, the adjutant-general of an army corps, if he happened to be a volunteer officer, finding himself in contact with an adjutant-general of the Regular Army, would be outranked by that officer, notwithstanding he may have been much longer in the service. This operates to put them upon exactly the same footing, so that we may not have these questions of rank that we had so often during the war.

Mr. LACEY. There is no provision at all for any colonel in the regulations. The gentleman is drawing upon his imagination. We are providing for a colonel, and providing for a higher rank of the staff than we did in the late war; and I say we ought not to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANDY. I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 2, on page 5. I move to strike out the words "one assistant adjutant-general, who shall have the rank of captain." I would like the chairman of the committee to explain the necessity for that officer. If he is necessary, I am willing that those words should stay in. The adjutants-general seem to be more amply provided for than other staff officers in the bill. In each corps there is an adjutant-general on the staff. There is an adjutant-general on the staff of each brigade commander. Then, in addition to the adjutant-general of the corps and the adjutant-general of every brigade, this gives an assistant adjutant-general on the staff of every corps commander.

Now, there is no assistant inspector-general, there is no assistant quartermaster-general, no assistant commissary-general of subsistence, no assistant chief engineer; but the adjutant-general, who is simply the clerk through whom the orders go out, has this assistant. If the other chiefs of staff do not need an assistant, the adjutant-general, perhaps, does not need one either.

Mr. CONNOLLY. He is pretty nearly the whole thing.

Mr. STEELE. The adjutant-general has more work to do than all the others put together.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He is a very important officer, and he is an active, working man. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HANDY. I wanted an explanation from the chairman of the committee, if he would be kind enough.

Mr. HULL. The motion is to strike out the words "one assistant adjutant-general, who shall have the rank of captain." No man who has ever been in the Army will state that the adjutant-general is little more than a clerk. Now, he may be able to get along without an assistant adjutant-general's help, but the War Department do not think so; and I think this bill, so far as it goes in that respect, is a very good one. Every man who served in the late war knows that the adjutant-general's office needs an assistant, if we have an adjutant-general of a corps. I simply hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HANDY. I did not mean to say, if I did say it, that the adjutant-general was "little more than a clerk." What I meant to say was that his duties are of a clerical character.

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. HANDY. The adjutant-general is the man through whom all the orders go out. That is enough to make him a busy man. The inspector-general is the eyes and ears of the commander. He inspects everything. The adjutant-general is, for the commander, the hand that writes the orders and sends out all military papers. If the chairman thinks that this assistant adjutant-general is needed, I will withdraw the motion.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint in the Volunteer Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding one major-general for each organized army corps and division, and one brigadier-general for each brigade, who may be selected from the line or staff of the Regular or Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States, and any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein: Provided, That each general officer of the Volunteer Army shall be entitled to the number of aids-de-camp authorized for an officer of like grade in the Regular Army.

With the following amendment:

On page 5, line 23, after the word "brigade," strike out the words "who may be selected from the line or staff of the Regular or Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. JETT. I want to ask the gentleman if that amendment has been adopted?

Mr. HULL. It has not.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the President may, upon the recommendation of governors of States, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army: Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be commissioned in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is intended to leave this section in that form?

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in considering this section took this view of it that an officer of the Regular Army might be called for by the governor of a State, but the President had no power of his own motion to commission one. We regarded it of so little importance as to whether he shall be commissioned by the governor or the President that we let it stand where it is.

Of course he will be the only officer to receive the commission from the President. The governor might want to appoint an officer of the Regular Army the colonel of a regiment. Now, if the idea of the gentleman from Vermont is offered as an amendment, so that the governor should not commission him without the consent of the President, I have no objection to it, because if the governor should commission a Regular Army officer as a volunteer officer without consent of the President the man would lose his rank in the Regular Army. He would be discharged.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. So far as the action of the committee was concerned, and my friends on the committee will correct me if I am in error, the idea was, this being a Regular Army officer, he might be commissioned by the President, if the governor of the State requested it, without impairing the general principle of the bill, that the governor must retain the entire control of the organization of the regiment.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Does not the Constitution give to the governor the right to appoint all these officers?

Mr. HULL. That is a question some have raised; I think not.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It is not a question, when you come to consider the matter.

Mr. MARSH. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that that change had better be made.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. MARSH. That these officers of the Regular Army going into the Volunteer Army should be commissioned by the governor. This provision is evidently a new feature, and the reason for it I have never heard. It is the first time that it has been provided that the President may commission a volunteer officer.

Mr. GROUT. I then move this amendment: In line 12, after the word "the," strike out "President may upon the recommendation of the;" and after the word "States" insert the word

"may;" so that it will read: "That the governors of States may appoint officers," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 6, after the word "the," strike out the words "President may upon the recommendation of the;" and after the word "States" insert the word "may;" so that it will read: "That the governors of States may appoint officers," etc.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a further suggestion there, that the governor of any State may, "with the consent of the President."

Mr. HULL. That is right. Offer that amendment.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, if we pass this law authorizing the governor of the State to appoint an officer from the regular service in this volunteer force, and provide that he shall not lose his rank in the Regular Army, it will be done with the consent of the President, his consent will be obtained under the provisions of this bill, and it is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. MARSH. It would give the governor a chance to make a raid on the Regular Army officers.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not object to putting in the words "upon consent of the President," because without that you may ruin the efficiency of the Regular Army entirely. You limit and destroy the power of the President as Commander in Chief.

Mr. GROUT. I think practically there would be no invasion of the Regular Army; but if the gentleman thinks it is necessary to cut that off, I will not object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Your amendment seems to give the governor concurrent jurisdiction with the Executive, and I might add, almost exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. GROUT. No, it simply gives him the opportunity to appoint some officers of the Regular Army without their losing their rank.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the purpose of your amendment?

Mr. GROUT. To authorize the governor to appoint from the Regular Army officers, if he sees fit, to the volunteer forces, and that they shall not lose their rank in the Regular Army.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do you propose that the governor shall invade the Regular Army and make an appointment without the consent of the President?

Mr. GROUT. I do not object to having the consent of the President put in if gentlemen insist on it. I will accept the modification.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Section 13 would then read "that the governor of any State may, with the consent of the President, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers," etc.

Mr. GROUT. I will accept that modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 6, strike out the words "that the President may, upon the recommendation of the governors of the States," and insert "that the governor of any State may, with the consent of the President."

So that the same shall read:

That the governor of any State may, with the consent of the President, appoint officers of the Regular Army, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding after the word "States," the words "or Territories;" so as to harmonize with what we have done heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, after the word "States," insert the words "or Territories."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the proper construction of the proviso to section 13:

Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be commissioned in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

Mr. HULL. The idea of the Department is that in any State organizing a regiment, with no officer of sufficient intelligence and experience to drill them, an officer of the Regular Army may be sent there; and to distribute the officers among as many organizations as possible, it is provided that only one officer shall be commissioned in any one regiment at the same time.

Mr. DOCKERY. If that is the idea the gentleman seeks to express in his proviso, it seems to me the language used is somewhat confusing.

Mr. HULL (reading)—

Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be commissioned in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

I think it clear.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It should be that "not more than one officer from the Regular Army shall be in commission."

Mr. DOCKERY. That phraseology is certainly not clear. I think I understand what the chairman of the committee desires to accomplish, but the language is faulty.

Mr. EVANS. It should read that "not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be in commission in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is it.

Mr. DOCKERY. If that is the proper and technical phrase, all right, but there should be some change.

Mr. SPALDING. An officer is not "in commission;" a ship is said to be "in commission."

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that the construction of the War Department would be the same if you put in the words "shall not be in commission."

Mr. DOCKERY. I know the chairman of the committee desires to have his bill explicit and not misleading, and I suggest that he amend it. Mr. Chairman, I will move to strike out the word "commissioned," in lines 17 and 18, so that the section shall read "that not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall be in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time."

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to amend it so that it will read "not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall hold a commission in any one regiment," etc.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is better, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the amendment I offered and accept the one offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, after the word "shall," strike out the words "the commission" and insert the words "hold a commission:" so as to read: "Not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall hold a commission in any one regiment," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire proviso, and I wish to give this reason for it: When the President of the United States and the governor of a State concur I think that is sufficient restriction. So I move to strike out the proviso entirely.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was impossible for me to hear what my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] said in explanation of his amendment. I should like to hear his reason for offering it.

Mr. GIBSON. My reason is that under the section as amended the governor and the President of the United States must concur in appointing a Regular Army officer; and I say the concurrence of the President and the governor is a sufficient restriction.

Several MEMBERS. That is so.

Mr. DE ARMOND. As I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, his suggestion is that the appointment can not be made at all except with the consent of the President.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to strike out the entire proviso.

Mr. DE ARMOND. As I understand, the appointment can not be made at all by the governor except with the concurrence of the President——

Mr. GIBSON. That is it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And therefore the gentleman thinks the proviso is unnecessary, owing to the other amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. Precisely.

Mr. HULL. I hope the amendment will not prevail, because the proviso which the gentleman proposes to strike out will at least serve the purpose of preventing a great deal of pulling and hauling to get these commissions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to hear the section read.

The section was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GIBSON, it was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he thinks it wise to retain the limitation in this section to field officers alone. The effect of the restriction, if I understand the section correctly, would be to exclude company officers. It would not permit the appointment of any officer below the grade of major. Is that correct?

Mr. HULL. It would not be possible to get a line officer of the Regular Army to leave his company command in order to accept a line appointment or commission in the volunteer force. It seems to me that the provision in its present form is a wise one. The chances are that the applications for places of this kind would be mainly to command regiments, as was the case in the beginning of the civil war.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that very well; but it occurred to me that possibly there might be second lieutenants of the Regular Army who would be very glad to take an assignment to a captaincy in the volunteers.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe the efficiency of a regiment would demand such a transfer so much as it would to have a field officer in command to instruct the regiment. For that reason I would rather not have company officers appointed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would not like to put my opinion against that of the chairman of the committee; but it occurred to me it might be well to add after the word "field" the words "or company;" so as to read "field or company officers."

Mr. HULL. I do not think such an amendment would be desirable.

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I wish merely to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the effect of the language in line 2 and line 16 of page 6, in regard to officers of the Regular Army retaining their rank. My inquiry is whether there ought to be any provision to the effect that these Regular Army officers holding positions in the volunteers shall not continue to draw their pay as officers in the regular service. Is anything of that kind necessary to prevent the drawing of double pay?

Mr. HULL. They can not draw pay except upon the rank in which they are serving. When they accept a higher command in the volunteer service, they relinquish the pay of the lower rank in the Regular Army.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read the following:

SEC. 14. That the general commanding a separate department or a detached army is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the Volunteer Army to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said army within his command: Provided, That each member of the board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into: And provided further, That if the report of such a board is adverse to the continuance of any officer, and the report be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from service in the Volunteer Army, at the discretion of the President, with one month's pay and allowances.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move to amend by inserting after the word "five," in line 23, the word "volunteer;" so as to read: "five volunteer officers of the Volunteer Army."

Just one word of explanation.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right. Let us vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand exactly the effect of this amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will explain its meaning and the necessity for it. We have provided in previous sections of this bill for placing Regular Army officers in the volunteer organization. Now, when I was in the military service, I could not but observe the jealousy between the Regular Army officers and the volunteer officers. Therefore if a volunteer officer is to be tried as to his ability and capacity, I want him to be tried by an impartial board. For this purpose I want it clearly provided in this bill that that board shall be made up of his peers—made up of volunteer officers.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HULL. Let us vote on the amendment. There is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill, as section 15, the following:

SEC. 15. That members of the enrolled militia of the District of Columbia and of the several States and Territories employed in any of the Departments or other branches of the public service of the United States, including the government of the District of Columbia, when called into the military or naval service of the United States, shall, while in such service, be granted leave of absence from such employment without pay other than the leave of absence pay to which they may be entitled when called into military or naval service; and upon honorable discharge from such military or naval service they shall be entitled to resume their said employment as of the grade held and at the pay received by them at the time of their entry into the military or naval service. Temporary appointments, when absolutely necessary in the judgment of the head of a Department, may be made to fill vacancies occasioned by granting leaves of absence herein provided for, but all such appointments shall be temporary and shall cease and determine immediately on the honorable discharge from the military or naval service of the persons holding such positions, and on leave of absence as herein authorized. The provisions of this section shall also apply to all other officers or employees of the United States Government who shall enter the military or naval service of the United States, whether they belong to the militia or not at the time of such entry into said military or naval service.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I will not reserve a point of order on this amendment; but it occurs to me that the effect of the amendment would be to put the appointment of all temporary officials in the hands of the Department officials and take them outside of the provisions of the civil-service law.

Mr. CANNON. No; I will say to my friend from Missouri I have examined the matter and it will not affect the civil-service law at all, in my judgment. It is not intended to have, and will not have, I think, that effect.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the heads of the Departments would have the right to appoint temporarily.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the gentleman from Illinois examined the amendment carefully?

Mr. CANNON. I have.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am perfectly willing to accept the judgment of my friend from Illinois in that respect.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, there is so much confusion on the floor that we can not hear what is going on. It was impossible, in the first place, to hear the reading of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. I wish to ask to have it read again.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order. It provides for a separate class of employees not contemplated in the bill under the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is rather late to submit the point of order now, after the debate has proceeded.

Mr. HAY. I have not been able to hear a word of the debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us have order, Mr. Chairman, before we try to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will take their seats, and conversation upon the floor must cease. All business will be suspended until the committee is in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask that the Clerk read again the pending amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that section ought to be adopted. Certainly it ought not to be attached to this bill for several reasons, mainly because nobody can understand what effect it may have with reference to these various employees of the Government. Now, there may be an emergency that might possibly arise at some future time when it will be necessary to hold out some premiums or inducements for the enlistment of soldiers. I do not think it will arise. It ought not certainly to arise until at least the 12,000,000 and more of effective soldiers that we can muster now have had each one an individual opportunity of going into the Army, if he sees proper.

I do not think there is any necessity for the amendment. It will make great confusion in the management of the Departments, and is favoritism in favor of men who are already favored by the Government. I am opposed to it and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I notice the amendment relates to the employees of the Departments, and the amendment is limited to them.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point is that the Government Printing Office is not considered as a "Department" of the Government. Would this apply to that department?

Mr. CANNON. It means all Government employees.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the amendment is broad enough to take in the Government Printing Office with the rest, I do not object.

Mr. CANNON. It does.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For I want to include the employees of the Government Printing Office as well as the other employees of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. They are included.

A single word, Mr. Chairman. This amendment was prepared with some care——

Mr. HEPBURN. By whom?

Mr. CANNON. Well, by somebody who can prepare amendments better than I can, and almost as well as my friend from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Who is the beneficiary under it?

Mr. CANNON. I will show you. There are numbers of letter carriers, clerks, and others, some of whom have applied to me suggesting legislation of this kind. Now, in the States and the District of Columbia there are many of these employees already in the State or District of Columbia militia. Many of them desire to enlist and go into active service with their regiments and companies in the service of the United States in case of war. Some of them are getting twelve hundred, some sixteen, some eighteen, and some two thousand dollars a year, while some of them are getting less than that. Take the Government Printing Office, for instance, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, or take the letter-carrier force, and other Government officials, and you will find a number who are receiving much less than any of these.

Now, the object of this legislation is to allow any man that is in the public service to-day to enlist in the Regular Army if he desires to do so, or in the volunteer service if he so desires, going with the regulars or the militia company to which he may be attached, and rendering service in that connection for the Government. When he leaves his Government employment and steps out and goes into the service of the United States his pay stops in the civil office he formerly held. But if the amendment is adopted, when he comes back, honorably discharged from the service, the temporary appointment that was made necessary of somebody to fill his place while he was in the Army ceases, and he goes back into the same position that he held before—the position he held when he went into the military service of the country.

In my judgment it is all right, and therefore I will offer it and ask a vote of the House upon it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in regard to this amendment. Why would it not be wise to provide that all professional men, clerks in stores, and employees of manufacturing institutions——

A MEMBER. And members of Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And members of Congress, shall all come back and take their places, with the same property and rights?

Mr. CANNON. I will reply to that by saying that many men, from patriotic motives, if you choose—I always like to say that a man has a patriotic motive—make proclamation that all persons who leave their employment shall receive employment when they return. Many of them make the additional proclamation that the pay of the employees who go into the Army shall go on while they are absent. But the gentleman says: "Why not provide that members of Congress shall have their places restored? Why not provide that professional men can take up their practice?" Purely because we have no power to provide that, but we have the power to provide this.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would you so provide, if you had the power?

Mr. STEELE. The civil-service law holds their jobs hard enough to suit me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How can you say that a man comes back fitted for the place that he held before?

Mr. CANNON. It has not been my observation that the competent employee in civil life loses his competency by serving his country in the Army.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose he has been wounded in the service and is disabled or sick?

Mr. CANNON. If he is wounded and disabled and comes back and goes to his employment and can not perform his duties, he will be discharged the same as anybody else.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is one of the legitimate outgrowths of the present system of civil service practiced by the Government of the United States. The only surprise that I evince is that the amendment should have been proposed by the gentleman who submits it. The proposition involved is in line with keeping the favored ones in the classified service in their positions for life.

Mr. Chairman, if an amendment of this sort is to be put upon this bill, which offers and extends a premium to men who have been already greatly favored by the Government, to procure their enlistment, what shall we say to the millions of young men, just as able, just as patriotic, throughout the different States of this Union to whom this appeal will go to rally to the succor of their country from motives of high patriotism and disinterestedness? What shall we say to the young men in clerkships, in colleges, on the farms, who are expected to enlist from patriotic impulse and after hostilities take their chances again in the race of life?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, if the call shall only be for 50,000 men, the great State of Indiana will not get 2,000 of her young men in the Army, and the District of Columbia can furlough the entire outfit and send them into the Army and save their places for them to come back to.

Mr. STEELE. You do not mean from Indiana!

Mr. FARIS. The suggestion of my distinguished friend from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, discloses the ridiculousness of the proposed amendment. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to raise my voice and register my vote against any such proposition as this. We are in a crisis. Now comes the time when the Government must appeal to the patriotic sentiment of the young men of this entire nation, and I for one am not ready to meet, except with rebuke, any proposition that will confer a favor of this sort on any citizens of the United States.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that since this agitation has begun I have wondered how many of the young men protected by the civil-service regulations in their places in Government employ will rally under the appeal that the President of the United States will soon issue when this bill becomes a law. I now record my serious doubt of a generous response from that quarter to an official call for volunteers. If we are going to hold out to them such an inducement as this, such a bounty as was never before placed before men who are invited to volunteer, it will be such a disappointment to the free men of the country who have not had place and favors from their Government as may prevent, in many communities, a liberal response to an expected call to arms in succor of the Union. I wish to say in my place on this floor that I not only have no sympathy with such a proposition, but I desire to see the sentiment of this House honestly expressed in overwhelming it with a negative vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, sometimes you get oratory and expressions and sound without proper meaning. Now, you would suppose, to hear the gentleman from Indiana talk, that this was a proposition that would provide that if a letter carrier in his city of Terre Haute that belongs to the militia of the State of Indiana, and gets his little $800 or $900 a year, wants to enter with his company into the service of the United States for three years—you would suppose, to hear my honorable friend from Indiana talk, that the letter carrier would draw his pay as letter carrier.

Mr. FARIS. Oh, no!

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says "no."

Mr. FARIS. If the gentleman will yield a moment——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has just had the floor; but that is not it. I know the provision is not that way. His civil pay ceases when he enters the military service of his country. Now, what else happens? It provides that his other constituent, that does not go into the Army, may be appointed as a letter carrier in Terra Haute, temporarily.

Mr. FARIS. Under the civil-service law.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, under the civil service, and will hold that job down three years, while the soldier letter carrier is fighting the battles of his country. Now, when the war ceases and the battle-scarred soldier comes out, this provision says, "You shall have your job as letter carrier back, and the three-year temporary fellow shall go out." Whereupon my friend thinks the country is about to be ruined. Now, that is all there is of it. I am for it, and am ready to vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BRUMM. Why do you not repeal the civil-service humbug, and that will answer the proposition?

Mr. CANNON. I am not talking about the civil service. I am not seeking to repeal it or perpetuate it, but I am making that just and proper provision, that I think ought to be made for the people who hold these offices, that they may have them when they come back, and that the peace fellow may go out. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FLEMING. Let us have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been read twice.

Mr. FLEMING. I ask to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

Several members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, after the word "allowance," in line 7, amend by adding as an additional section, to be numbered section 15, the following:

"That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provision hereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9944 and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7318. An act for the relief of Frank Loyd, of Georgia.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. R. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the National Reunion Monument Association to erect a monument in the city of Washington to the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of the rebellion;

S. 3. An act to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 371. An act granting a pension to Sarah E. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CAPRON, for one week, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. WILSON, for one week, on account of death in his family.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the chief of division of stationery, printing, and blanks of the Treasury Department submitting an estimate of appropriation for that Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Court of Claims submitting an estimate of appropriation for compensation and expenses of commissioners of the Court of Claims appointed to take testimony under section 1075 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of D. C. Edmonson, administrator of Matilda O'Neal, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the cases of Washington Weir, administrator of Levi B. Fields, John W. Wright, and Hugh Murdock, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3544) to provide for submitting to the Court of Claims for determination the rights of the Delaware Indians in the Cherokee Nation, the Mississippi Choctaws in the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw freedmen in the Chickasaw Nation, and intermarried persons in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee Nations, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1118); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9281) authorizing the construction of three bridges across the Conecuh River, a navigable stream, in Escambia County, Ala., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1119); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4108) granting to the Washington Improvement and Development Company a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1117); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SULLIVAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 415) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the mutual account between the United States and the State of Florida, heretofore examined and stated by said Secretary under the authority of Congress, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1120); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SULLIVAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6816) to pay certain judgments against John C. Bates and Jonathan A. Yeckley, captain and first lieutenant in the United States Army, for acts done by them under orders of their superior officers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1121); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McEWAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1319) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1123); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Printing was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7721) for the relief of Robert F. Thompson for services rendered by him for compilation of the laws relating to Indian affairs; and the same was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STARK: A bill (H. R. 9952) to provide for calling forth, organizing, arming, and disciplining the reserve militia, and for governing them while employed in the service of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOODY: A bill (H. R. 9953) authorizing the Secretary of War to survey the harbor of Beverly, Essex County, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 9954) to provide for the better protection of railroad employees and others—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 9955) to transfer the county of Menard, in the State of Texas, from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 9956) granting the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DALZELL (by request): A bill (H. R. 9957) authorizing sale of the title of the United States in lot 1, square 1113, in the city of Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9958) relating to the military establishment of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 9994) for the reclamation of arid lands, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PEARSON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 238) to readmit Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A joint resolution (H. Res. 239) relative to rights of way for railroads through forest reserves—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 9959) granting a pension to Jessie Goldie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BODINE: A bill (H. R. 9960) granting a pension to Johnson Mize, of Laclede, Mo.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BULL: A bill (H. R. 9961) for the relief of John Corwine—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COONEY: A bill (H. R. 9962) to pension Felix G. Sitton at the rate of $30 per month—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9963) for the relief of Daniel Bentley—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9964) to pension Martha McSwain, widow of William McSwain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 9965) for the removal of the charge of desertion against Thomas Bird—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 9966) for the relief of Benjamin Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9967) for the relief of James O. Sanborn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9968) granting a pension to Sarah T. Emery—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9969) for the relief of Charles Geske—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9970) for the relief of Hiram B. Hatten—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DE GRAFFENREID: A bill (H. R. 9971) granting a pension to Elder H. Kinney—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 9972) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Lee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HINRICHSEN: A bill (H. R. 9973) for the relief of Edward L. Simpson, late postmaster of Carrollton, Ill.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 9974) to remove the charge of desertion against John Pierce—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9975) to pension David C. McMillen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 9976) to increase the pension of Nathaniel Townsend—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 9977) for the relief of John Thurman, of Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LORIMER: A bill (H. R. 9978) for the relief of Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzin—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOVERING: A bill (H. R. 9979) granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Shepard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McEWAN: A bill (H. R. 9980) granting an additional pension to Henry Van Gelder, of Jersey City, N. J.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOODY: A bill (H. R. 9981) granting a pension to Delia Kimball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD (by request): A bill (H. R. 9982) for the relief of the estate of Matilda Shields, deceased, late of Alexandria, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 9983) for the relief of Elizabeth Thomas, of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OTEY: A bill (H. R. 9984) for the relief of the heirs of Edward O. Watkins, of the State of Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 9985) granting a pension to Caleb May—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIXEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 9986) for the relief of Mrs. Marian W. Pollard—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 9987) for the relief of the heirs of Martin Matthew, deceased, late of Prince William County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 9988) for the relief of Rachel Dyer, of Fairfax County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 9989) for the relief of W. L. Bernard, of West Baton Rouge Parish, La.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: A bill (H. R. 9990) to increase pension of George W. Swift—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9991) to pension John C. Purdy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 9992) for the relief of the estate of Louisa A. Ragsdale, deceased, late of Tate County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 9993) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Jennison—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVISON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9995) for the relief of Eliza J. Richardson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 9996) for the relief of John McGowan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVISON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9997) for the benefit of the Nicholasville Baptist Church—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9998) for the relief of Mike S. Elkin—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9999) for the relief of G. W. Rogers—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10000) for the relief of Thomas W. Caldwell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEARSON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 240) for the relief of W. P. Roberts, late a consul of the United States at Victoria, British Columbia—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Resolution of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 3027 and House bill No. 6705, for pure flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELKNAP: Petition of Sprague, Warner & Co., of Chicago, Ill., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas at present in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BODINE: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Johnson Mize—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of the Young People's Union of the Church of the Mediator, of Providence, R. I., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. CODDING: Petitions of the Church of Christ and Ward Methodist Episcopal Church, of Canton, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Church of Christ and Ward Methodist Episcopal Church of Canton, Pa., to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. COONEY: Petition of the committee of the Baptist Ministers' Conference in the city of St. Louis, Mo., for the establishment of freedom of conscience in the Island of Cuba—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petitions of Adolph Striker, J. C. Harrison, and other citizens of Marshall, Mo., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of Railroad Temperance Association and 500 citizens of Sedalia, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill No. 8066, relating to appropriations for a national exposition at the city of Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Ormsby Division, No. 465, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Pittsburg, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FISCHER: Affidavits to accompany House bill No. 9525, granting an increase of pension to Ann Graves—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, affidavits to accompany House bill No. 5700, to remove the charge of desertion standing against James Hickey—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, affidavits to accompany House bill No. 5701, to remove the charge of desertion against James Hogan, alias James Henneesy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FOWLER of New Jersey: Petitions of the Presbyterian Christian Endeavor Society, Congregational Church of Christ, First Methodist Episcopal Church, and Central Council, No. 131, Junior Order United American Mechanics, all of Westfield, Union County, N. J., to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Newark Conference, Bishop Godsall, presiding, of East Orange, N. J., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the Baptist Church of Tompkinsville, Ky., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAY: Petition of the heirs of John H. Timberlake, deceased, late of Albemarle County, Va., requesting reference of his claim to the Court of Claims under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Protest of J. B. Morgan and other citizens of Davenport, Iowa, against Congressional action for the erection of a monument to the late Gen. Albert Pike—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, telegram of Myers, Cox & Co., of Dubuque, Iowa, protesting against additional tax on tobacco in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, telegram of the Fowler Company, of Waterloo, Iowa, protesting against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HENRY of Indiana: Resolutions of Camp No. 1 of Republican Camp of Veterans and their Sons, of Indiana, relating to civil service—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Petition of F. D. Boyles and other citizens of the State of Washington, in relation to arid lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KERR: Petition of citizens of Mansfield, Ohio, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Norwalk, Ohio, asking for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LENTZ: Petition of citizens of Blacklick, Ohio, in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McALEER: Resolution of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, in favor of House bill No. 8066, for an appropriation for a national exposition of American products and manufactures in Philadelphia, Pa.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MCCALL: Petition of the Boston Stationers' Association, favoring currency reform based on the gold standard—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of Peter Hand Brewing Company and sundry other brewers, of Chicago, Ill., urging as a matter of justice and fairness that in case an additional tax of $1 per barrel be imposed, a rebate of 15 per cent be allowed on all stamps bought, in order to reimburse them for stamps destroyed, lost, and used upon returned beer, so as not to compel them to pay a tax upon beer not sold—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PEARSON: Petition of Nellie Grant Sartoris, for readmission to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: Petitions of the United Brethren Congregation of Lecompton, Kans., asking for the passage of bills to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the United Brethren Congregation of Lecompton, Kans., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Petition of citizens of Menard County, Tex., asking that said county be placed in the northern judicial district of Texas and made returnable to the Federal district court at San Angelo—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: Petition of E. W. Purrett and other citizens of Toledo, Ohio, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Methodist Episcopal Church, First Presbyterian Church, Central Congregational Church, and St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, all of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and certain churches of Toledo, Ohio, in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STURTEVANT: Protest of R. S. Lewis and 45 other citizens of Pennsylvania, against the passage of the anti-scalping bill or any similar measure—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TAYLER of Ohio: Petitions of H. C. Downer and other citizens of Waynesburg; J. W. McFerron and others, of East Liverpool; J. E. Hanlon and others, of Summitville; J. A. Stambaugh and others, of Bayard, and E. J. Broderick and others, of Wellsville, in the State of Ohio, in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Ministerial Association of Lawrence and Franklin townships, Stark and Summit counties, Ohio, in favor of a bill for protection of the Sabbath in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Liverpool; Methodist Episcopal Church of Wellsville, and Favorite Tent, No. 175, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Marlboro, Ohio; Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Presbyterian Church, Favorite Tent, No. 175, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and First, Second, and United Presbyterian churches of Wellsville, Ohio, favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the First, Second, and United Presbyterian churches of Wellsville; Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Marlboro; Christian Endeavor Society of First Presbyterian Church, and Favorite Tent, No. 175, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool, Ohio, asking for the passage of bills to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF: Petition of Letts, Spencer, Smith & Co., of Mason City, Iowa, protesting against taxing stocks of coffee, tea, etc., on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VEHSLAGE: Petition of the United States Brewers' Association, protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WARD: Petition of Lodge No. 405, International Association of Machinists, of New York City, relating to a contract awarded the Brown Hoisting Machine Company, of Cleveland, Ohio—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: Petition of George Peabody Lodge, No. 213, Knights of Pythias, of Wissahickon, Pa., indorsing House bill No. 6468, praying for a lease of public land from the Government for the establishment of a national Pythian sanitarium—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill No. 6705 and Senate bill No. 3027, to prevent the adulteration of flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the General Society of Colonial Wars, Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of the purchase of Fort Ticonderoga by the Government—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. MILLS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Huntington, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Richmond, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FORAKER presented a petition of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Salem, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or other kindred devices; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Salem, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Salem, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate and mail circulation of newspaper descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church of Salem, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church of Salem, Ohio, and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Christian Endeavor Society of the Christian Church of Yellow Springs, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Garfield, Quaker City, Peebles, and Yellow Springs; of the congregations of the First Presbyterian Church of Lancaster, the Methodist Episcopal Church of New London, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pataskala, the Methodist Church and the Disciples' Church of West Mansfield, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Church of Christ of Quaker City, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy, the First Congregational Church of Troy, the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Yellow Springs, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Nelsonville, the Congregational Church of South Newbury, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tiltonville, the Port Union Methodist Episcopal Church, the Valley Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Glendale Methodist Episcopal Church, of Glendale; of Liberty Tent, No. 29, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool; of the Union Meeting of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Nelsonville; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Rushsylvania, and of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church of Salem, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Garfield, Ridgeville Corners, Quaker City, Yellow Springs, and Peebles; of the congregations of the First Presbyterian Church of Lancaster; the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Alexandria; the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Church of Christ, of Quaker City; the Congregational Church of South Newbury; the First Congregational Church of Troy; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy; the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Yellow Springs; and the Port Union Methodist Episcopal Church, the Valley Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Glendale Methodist Episcopal Church, of Glendale; of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Congregational Churchof Troy; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Rushsylvania; of Liberty Tent, No. 29, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool, and of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Salem, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Chatham Grange, No. 1437; Logan Grange, No. 3; Union Ridge Grange, No. 1470; Homer Grange, No. 691; Thurman Grange, No. 1416; Chagrin Falls Grange, No. 1439; Freeman Grange, No. 1168; Fulton Grange, No. 217; Canaan Grange, No. 857; Hope Grange, No. 406; Jackson Grange, No. 1221; Darby Grange, No. 779; Industry Grange, No. 96; Bradford Grange, No. 877; Liberty Grange, No. 223; Chesterfield Grange, No. 367; North Lima Grange, No. 1476; Washington Grange, No. 253; Oak Grove Grange, No. 1428; Montville Grange, No. 666; Harrison Grange, No. 151; Dublin Grange, No. 1409; Milan Grange, No. 342; Townsend Grange, No. 1392; Plainfield Grange, No. 1326; Wabash Grange, No. 236; Sugar Ridge Grange, No. 1482; Valley Grange, No. 1411, and Wolf Creek Grange, No. 1434, Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country the advantages of postal savings banks; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Quaker City, Yellowsprings, Darbyville, Peebles, and Rushsylvania; of the congregations of the Methodist Church and the Disciples Church of East Mansfield; the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Church of Christ, of Quaker City; the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Yellowsprings; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport Center; the Port Union Methodist Episcopal Church, the Valley Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Glendale Methodist Episcopal Church, of Glendale; the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church of Palaskala; the Methodist Episcopal Church of New London; the First Presbyterian Church of Lancaster, and the Wesleyan Methodist Church, of Alexandria; of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Disciples Church of Rushsylvania; of the Presbyterian Sunday school and 67 citizens of Troy; of the Christian Church Sunday school and 56 citizens of Troy; of the Baptist Sunday school and 45 citizens of Troy; of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school and 50 citizens of Troy; of the English Lutheran Sunday school and 34 citizens of Troy; of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church of Salem, and of Liberty Tent, No. 29, Independent Order of Rechabites, of East Liverpool, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Jackson Grange, No. 407; Fairmount Grange, No. 1458; Chatham Grange, No. 1437; Gnadenhutten Grange, No. 1486; Washington Grange, No. 1464; Bradford Grange, No. 877; Union Grange, No. 1450; Forest Grange, No. 841; Center Grange, No. 444; Newark Grange, No. 1004; Bloomingville Grange, No. 325; Freeman Grange, No. 1168; Springfield Grange, No. 499; Marlboro Grange, No. 1401; Chandlersville Grange, No. 1471; Richfield Grange, No. 1296; Oak Grove Grange, No. 1468; Gustavus Grange, No. 1417; Jackson Center Grange, No. 587; Darby Grange, No. 77; Industry Grange, No. 96; Liberty Grange, No. 223; Enterprise Grange, No. 472; Fallsburg Grange, No. 854; Burr Oak Grange, No. 541; Clyde Grange, No. 364; Jackson Grange, No. 403; Liberty Hill Grange, No. 1087; Union Grange, No. 21; St. Joseph Grange, No. 1082; Waterford Grange, No. 231; Wabash Grange, No. 236; Paulding Grange, No. 332; Labanon Grange, No. 1462; Progressive Grange, No. 1362; Hartford Grange, No. 1497; Tallmadge Grange, No. 1350, and of Fidelity Grange, No. 1333, of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the country protection against the use of adulterated food products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of Jackson Grange, No. 407; Fairmount Grange, No. 1458; Logan Grange, No. 3; Guadenhutten Grange, No. 1486; Washington Grange, No. 1454; Union Ridge Grange, No. 1470; Union Grange, No. 1450; Forest Grange, No. 841; Newark Grange, No. 1004; Center Grange, No. 444; Bloomingville Grange, No. 325; Springfield Grange, No. 499; Marlboro Grange, No. 1401; Chandlersville Grange, No. 1471; Jackson Grange, No. 1221; Richfield Grange, No. 1296; Oak Grove Grange, No. 1463; Gustavus Grange, No. 1417; Jackson Center Grange, No. 587; Fallsburg Grange, No. 854; Jackson Grange, No. 403; Enterprise Grange, No. 472; Glyde Grange, No. 364; Burr Oak Grange, No. 541; Montville Grange, No. 666; Harrison Grange, No. 151; Liberty Hill Grange, No. 1087; Washington Grange, No. 253; Oak Grove Grange, No. 1428; St. Joseph Grange, No. 1082; Townsend Grange, No. 1392; Fidelity Grange, No. 1333; Tallmadge Grange, No. 1350; Hartford Grange, No. 1479; Wolf Creek Grange, No. 1434; Progressive Grange, No. 1362; Lebanon Grange, No. 1462, and Paulding Grange, No. 332, Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country free rural mail delivery; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of sundry business firms of Evansville, Ind., remonstrating against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of the Board of Trade and the Business Men's Association of Norfolk, Va., praying that one of the new United States battle ships be named the Virginia, and that one of the cruisers be named the Norfolk; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade and Business Men's Association of Norfolk, Va., remonstrating against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on coffee and tea now in the hands of merchants; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Virginia, praying for the establishment of the proposed battlefields park near Fredericksburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of members and officers of Company E, Second Infantry, National Guard of Virginia, and a petition of the Lynchburg Home Guards, of Lynchburg, Va., praying that House bill No. 2876, to promote the efficiency of the militia, be amended so that the annual appropriation for the National Guard shall be not less than $1,000,000; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Blue Ridge Division, No. 184, Order of Railway Conductors, of Clifton Forge, Va., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Southeastern Virginia, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 133, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Richmond, Va., and a petition of the Old Dominion Lodge, International Association of Machinists, of Newport News, Va., praying for the passage of the so-called postal savings bank bill; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit, so far as the power of Congress extends, the reproduction of prize fights by the kinetoscope or other kindred devices and also the interstate and mail circulation of newspaper descriptions of the same; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Young People's Christian Union of Singers Glen; of the Baptist Young People's Union, of Singers Glen; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Singers Glen, and of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, all in the State of Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7748) to provide for a survey of Elk River, in Tennessee and Alabama, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4334) appropriating $25,000 for the repairs on the levee on the Ohio River at Shawneetown, Ill., reported it without amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2691) to amend section 9 of an act entitled, "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2016) relating to the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2799) to redeem outstanding certificates issued by the board of audit and the board of public works of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 4101) granting the right to sell burial sites in parts of certain streets in Washington City to the vestry of Washington Parish for the benefit of the Congressional Cemetery.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 9552) permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 175) for a survey of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wis.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4227) for the relief of the heirs of Charles M. Skippon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8972) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2035) for the remuster of Francisco V. De Coster as captain of Companies A and D, Mississippi Marine Brigade Cavalry Volunteers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Francis Shetais, alias Frank Stay, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MAPS AND CHARTS OF ALASKA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On behalf of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], chairman of the Committee on the Library, I report a resolution and ask that the resolution, with the accompanying document, be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution and accompanying document will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,000 copies of the Descriptive Catalogue of Maps and Charts of Alaska and Adjacent Regions now in the Library of Congress; 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Library of Congress.

WEST FORK RIVER, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. ELKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 116) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered at this time. It is short. It has passed the House and is simply a direction for a survey. It is reported unanimously by our committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia was not here last night when we arranged that after the routine morning business this morning the sundry civil appropriation bill should be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that this is a very short bill, and it is a unanimous report from the committee. It is a House joint resolution, and it will not take a moment to pass it.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely call attention to the understanding.

Mr. FAULKNER. The agreement was to be carried out after the morning business is through. It is not through yet. I understand there is no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause a survey and submit an estimate for the improvement of the West Fork River, West Virginia, from its mouth to the city of Clarksburg, W. Va., by a system of locks and dams, the proper location of necessary dams, as well as probable cost thereof.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELLIE GRANT SARTORIS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave to present the petition of Nellie Grant Sartoris, asking to have her citizenship restored. I also introduce a joint resolution to carry out the purpose, and I ask leave for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The joint resolution will explain that when she was married she took away her citizenship, and now she has been back here a resident since 1894 and desires to be restored to her citizenship. I am sure, if the Senate will hear the joint resolution read and learn the facts set forth in the preamble, there will be not a single objection to it.

The joint resolution (S. R. 156) readmitting Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas Nellie Grant Sartoris, widow, daughter of the late Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, being a natural-born citizen of the United States, married in 1874 Algernon Charles Frederick Sartoris, a subject of the Queen of Great Britain, and emigrated to Great Britain, becoming thereby, under the laws of Great Britain, a naturalized British subject, to be recognized as such by the United States, according to the provisions of the convention relative to naturalization between the United States and Great Britain of the 13th of May, 1870; and

Whereas the said Nellie Grant Sartoris has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein, and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States under and by virtue of the provisions of Article III of the convention aforesaid: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Nellie Grant Sartoris, daughter of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, be, and she is hereby, on her own application, unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of Article III of the convention relative to naturalization between the United States and Great Britain concluded May 13, 1870.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ARANSAS PASS HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MILLS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution relative to the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HALE. Under the arrangement that was made last night——

Mr. MILLS. Oh, I understand. That does not cover morning business.

Mr. HALE. I must object to the consideration of any bills that are reported.

Mr. MILLS. We have passed two this morning, and I understand that this is morning business. If the Senator says that such business was not embraced in that agreement, of course I will not violate the agreement.

Mr. HALE. Of course it is not morning business to pass bills and resolutions. It is morning business to receive them.

Mr. MILLS. Then I will not press the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 4448) to correct the military record of John W. House; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 4449) granting a pension to William L. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4450) for the relief of John H. Eggborn, of Culpeper County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4451) granting a pension to Nancy Barger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 4452) authorizing the Campbell-Lynch Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Webbers Falls, Ind. T.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NONEXPORTATION OF WAR MATERIAL.

Mr. QUAY. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it may be placed upon its passage. I will state before the joint resolution is read that it is the same that was introduced on Saturday by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and objected to at that time, I think, by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. I am informed by the Secretary of War that it is very important that the resolution should be passed at once. There was also an objection made, I believe, by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] who is not in his seat. I propose upon its passage to allow it to lie on the table until the Senator from Maryland comes in.

The joint resolution (S. R. 157) to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator from Pennsylvania propose?

Mr. QUAY. I propose to have the joint resolution put on its passage and allow it to lie over until the Senator from Maryland enters the Chamber. If he should still object, I will of course move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator will allow it to lie on the table, and call it up later. We have a unanimous-consent agreement that we shall go on this morning after the routine business with the appropriation bill. I have been compelled to object to several other matters that are in the order of morning business. Of course this measure will pass during the day.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to that course, with the understanding that it may be called up at any time when the Senator from Maryland is present.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all I desire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table for the present.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment relative to the payment of the claims of George W. McCray, M. M. Defrees, Christian M. Kirkpatrick, and of the Western Paving and Supply Company, for work done in Indianapolis, Ind., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report statements before the Committee on Foreign Relations April 7, April 8, and April 12, 1898, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the bill (S. 435) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, having been presented to the President on April 7, 1898, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.

WASHINGTON AND GLEN ECHO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet. I ask that the report be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is suggested that the conference report be considered now, I repeat, it is in violation of the agreement made yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report of the committee is being made and is being read to the Senate. No action has been asked upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. If no action is asked, very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. McMILLAN. I thought a conference report was always in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is, for presentation, but not for consideration except by consent. The order suggested will be made, and the conference report will be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the proposed sections insert the following as a proviso at the end of section 1:

"And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the power to make and to enforce all reasonable and usual regulations for the operation and maintenance of that portion of the lines within the District of Columbia."

And the House agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
A. P. GORMAN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

J. W. BABCOCK,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

ROBERT B. RODNEY.

Mr. KENNEY. I move that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3237) for the relief of Robert B. Rodney, paymaster, United States Navy, retired, introduced by me on the 17th of January last, and that the same may be withdrawn.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in the time of war, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 3) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 7318) for the relief of Frank Loyd, of Georgia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 110) authorizing the National Reunion Monument Association to erect a monument in the city of Washington to the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of the rebellion.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 342, coming over from yesterday, offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Without having the resolution read, I desire to have it go on the Calendar, that I may discuss it at length at some other time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the agreement made yesterday, the Chair lays before the Senate the sundry civil appropriation bill, being House bill 8428.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I see in the Morning Times this statement:

There will be no privateering.

A little farther down in the column there is the following statement:

The State Department announces that the United States will abide by the war regulations prescribed by the treaty of Paris.

I desire, in view of this public print which has been brought to my attention, to inquire of any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations present whether there is any knowledge that this is true, as stated in the paper?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have not been able to hear what was stated in the paper.

Mr. MONEY. It is stated in the paper that there will be no privateering; that the State Department has announced that the United States will abide by the regulations of the convention of Paris in 1856, which declared that privateering was piracy. I desire to ask if any member of the Foreign Relations Committee can inform the Senate whether this statement made in the newspaper this morning is true or not?

Mr. DAVIS. I have heard nothing about it except what I saw in the paper this morning. I have no information whatever upon the subject.

Mr. MONEY. I have no disposition to raise any issue whatever with the President at this moment, but I have thought that the urgent appeals made by the friends of the Administration were entirely unnecessary; that there is no member of the Senate at this moment who would default in the high duty which he owes to his country, but would cordially and earnestly support the Administration in the exercise of its constitutional authority to conduct the war with all the vigor possible. I do not now believe that there has been the slightest necessity for those appeals in the Senate in that behalf, but if this is true, as reported now, it is well that the Senate should take notice that the power conferred upon the President and upon the Congress by the Constitution should be distinctly defined and well understood. There is not a Senator here who does not know that the President and his Cabinet have not the slightest power over the subject-matter here spoken of, but that the power to issue letters of marque and reprisal belongs exclusively to the Congress of the United States.

I also understood (if it is not the case, it is just as well to have it stated) that the United States and Spain are the only great sovereignties which have not signed the Paris convention. I take occasion to say that while it has been repeatedly stated in the Senate in the course of the debate that the United States was not one of the grand signatories to that convention, at the same time the United States have not been properly set before the world in that regard. The United States did not sign that convention, not because she was opposed to abolishing privateering, but because she demanded more than the powers assembled in Paris were willing to grant. In everything as respects the rights of countries the United States has, to her indelible honor, taken the lead for the last hundred years. She insisted that the property of private citizens should be respected everywhere, on sea as well as on land, and it was because the sovereignties assembled at Paris refused to make that concession that she declined to sign the treaty of Paris.

Now, Mr. President, with a considerable commercial marine——

Mr. MASON. I did not understand the reason given. Will the Senator state it again?

Mr. MONEY. I said that the United States failed to sign the convention of Paris, not because she was opposed to abolishing privateering, but because she insisted upon a ground more advanced, as was her custom, than the other powers were willing to take.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if this debate is to continue, I shall insist that it shall continue in secret session.

Mr. MONEY. I propose to make a few remarks on this subject, that, as I before stated, if there was any difference between the legislative and executive branch on this question, it might be distinctly understood.

Mr. HOAR. If the President has even done something which the Senator thinks is beyond his constitutional power, we have no notice of it but in this newspaper. I submit to the Senate, as a precedent for our conduct during the time before us, that we had better avoid these discussions as far as possible in public. I ask the Senator whether he considers it worth while to declare to Spain or any other country what our policy is going to be just yet by discussion in the Senate. I submit that to the Senator's consideration. There is no doubt, of course, about the constitutional provision.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I will not interfere with the Senator, because I know his great patriotism and great wisdom.

Mr. MONEY. I had almost concluded when I was interrupted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi, but I ask if he is informed of the unanimous agreement made last evening?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed the Senator from Mississippi was talking under the arrangement made last night, under the five-minute rule. His time has not yet expired.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that I am speaking under the five-minute rule. I expected to confine myself to the agreement mentioned by the Senator from Iowa. I had no design whatever to precipitate any discussion; I do not propose to take part in any discussion; but I thought it was my duty to call attention to this statement. I supposed when I rose that some member of the Foreign Relations Committee could assure me whether it was true or not. But whether it is true or not, it certainly does nobody any injury to call attention to the fact that this proposition, if ever made at all, can not be tolerated by the Congress of the United States.

The powers to issue letters of marque and reprisal are confided by special delegation to the two Houses, and it is just as well now that those Senators who are in the confidence of the Administration and who exerted their influence over the Senate to secure a thorough cooperation should exert the same influence, which they no doubt have and are entitled to have with the Senate, upon the Executive. I say, because I realize the importance to have a thorough cooperation, that there should be no infringement by either party upon the rights and prerogatives and powers of the other.

Having submitted that much and called the attention of the Senate to this statement, I have nothing more to say, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish merely to state that the Committee on Foreign Relations have no jurisdiction of the question. The question of the conduct of the war belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, without any reference to what has been said, but as this is a convenient opportunity, to give notice that if any question be raised in the Senate in regard to the policy or the management of the United States in the conduct of the war, I shall, if present, insist on the rule which provides for dealing with such subjects in secret legislative session; and if I can find any other Senator to agree with me, that rule will be enforced.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I desire, in just one minute, to say that I intend to be entirely consistent in joining with the Senator from Massachusetts in that effort. I have taken a position that I believe to be the fair one, that there is no need of executive sessions in this body except in time of war. I am perfectly willing now to say that I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts and I shall insist in every way I can to have the private business of the Senate done with closed doors. I think it was the original intention of the framers of the Constitution that we should have executive sessions only in time of war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the committee on page 67.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first amendment on page 67, lines 7 and 8, is in the proviso, which reads:

Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and allowed per diem.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend that the words "selected by the Secretary of the Interior and" shall be stricken out and that the clause shall be left to read:

That the agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to the rules and regulations, etc.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator read the clause again as it will read if the words are stricken out?

Mr. COCKRELL. If the words are stricken out the clause will read:

That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, etc.

In other words, it leaves these officers just where the President of the United States has placed them by his orders issued in pursuance of the civil-service law. This is an attempt upon the part of the House to destroy the civil-service law entirely, to wipe it from the statute books piecemeal by piecemeal. I appeal to friends upon the other side to know whether they intend to commence encroachments upon the civil-service law in this piecemeal way, which they have indorsed from year to year and Administration after Administration. The President has the power beyond any question to-day to take these particular officers out of the control of the civil-service law, and is it possible that we are going to say to the President, "You will not listen to your staff officer, your Secretary; we will take away from you the power you have exercised and give it to the Secretary of the Interior?"

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to an inquiry?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not out of my five minutes.

Mr. President, the objection has been made in regard to the other clause, which refers to the forest reservations, that under the civil-service law there will be no time for examinations after a fire starts up. The Senators making that argument themselves contradicted that very position. How? They stated that these employees would not be needed the year round; that they would not be needed in the wet season; that they would only be needed in the dry season. Then there will be over half the year within which the Civil Service Commissioners may act and have agents ready to be appointed when the season for fires begins. It will not hold to say that the civil-service laws can not be enforced in these cases.

Mr. President, I insist that we shall stand by the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations and leave these officers just where the President of the United States has put them. He has put them there. There they are. He has the right to take them out from the civil-service law. We had a committee of this Congress to investigate this whole matter. Here is the report of that committee, signed by Senators PRITCHARD, LODGE, KENNEY, MORRILL, ELKINS, WOLCOTT, CHILTON, and HARRIS. They do not recommend that we shall legislate and abrogate what the President has done. They recommend their suggestions to the Executive for his consideration. But, oh, no; the House will not let us do that. The House is going to come by force of arms and take away from the President the right he has exercised of placing these men under the civil-service rules. The question is, Shall we concur in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations? I hope there will be a universal response of "yea."

Mr. WILSON and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Wyoming desires to take the floor, I will yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. CLARK. No; proceed.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will not concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. I think myself that we have enough officers now in the classified service without extending it any further to these very unimportant employees.

Let us examine it and see. What character of an examination would be necessary for a man simply to patrol a forestry reservation? I desire to say that I have no personal hostility to a reasonable and fair and legitimate civil service: but I have considerable hostility to one that, in my judgment, is conducted upon lines that are full of deceit and full of humbuggery, if I may use that expression. I know that the Civil Service Commission will take any advantage upon earth to secure the appointment of one of their people, whether he has been examined for the particular office or not. They say that they have a classified list for officers, when, as a matter of fact, they have no classified list for those officers. I know that in my State they certified the other day a clerk in a United States land office. They never had any examination for those positions. They just certified him from a list, and they had not asked him a single solitary question upon the duties that pertained to the office, for I examined every one of them very carefully.

Now, here we are creating a few offices of a very moderate nature. It is to be employment at a dollar and a half and two dollars and two dollars and a half a day; axmen, who must be familiar with wood and trees, with what is dead and living, and what is down and what is permitted to be sold; and it is proposed that before we can take any action whatever we have got to go to the Civil Service Commission and secure temporary employment during the summer months. They are not really offices; the employment expires from time to time.

The Senator from Missouri, a day or two ago, when he commenced his very able discussion of the Cuban question on this amendment, stated that I had made a very gross and violent attack upon the President and upon the Civil Service Commission in a statement I made here. I want to correct that. I will read the language of the Senator from Missouri when he requested me to have the letter read. It so happened that in the State of Washington at one time we had what was known as the Puyallup Indian Commission. It went along for a year or two, or perhaps three years, when we sought an additional appropriation, and one of the provisions (I stated it was in the sundry civil bill; I wish to correct that and state it was in the Indian appropriation bill) of the Indian appropriation act, on page 23 of the act for the year ending June 30, 1897, provided for an appropriation of $4,000 to be immediately available:

> And said commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of December, 1896.

The commission absolutely terminated on the 1st day of December, 1896; they went out of office. Nevertheless the Civil Service Commission at a later date appointed Mr. Anderson to be a supervising inspector of Indian schools. When I made my statement here the Senator from Missouri said it was a very gross attack upon the Civil Service Commission. Permit me to read, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired.

Mr. WILSON. I thought we had ten minutes under the agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Five minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington may proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a little less than a year ago, in traveling through a Western State, I chanced to meet a gentleman who was an agent of the Government of the United States. I fell into conversation with him and ascertained that he had been sent as an agent of the Government to investigate, as I remember it, depredations on the timber reservations of that part of the country. In conversation I asked him if he had been appointed under the civil service. He said he had not, for the reason that the Civil Service Commission had not then formulated a list of questions; that he was appointed for ninety days, at which time, as I understood him to say, his commission would be revoked, and then either he or somebody else would be appointed to perform ninety days' more service for the Government. He was traveling in Pullman cars at the expense of the Government on his way to some distant point in the country, having been sent, I believe, from the city of Washington. That illustrates the working and the economy of so-called civil service in some governmental matters.

Mr. President, I may not understand this question, but as I do understand it, here is a provision for a few men to be appointed by the Government to exercise some kind of jurisdiction over the forests belonging to the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first amendment does not relate to forestry agents, but the other does. The first one is for protecting timber on the public land and the settlement of claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity. That is the first amendment. Then the next amendment is for the protection and administration of forest reserves.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to be very exact in my statement on this point, but want simply to make a general statement concerning it. Here are two provisions for the appointment of a few men at a very small salary to perform the duties of the Government in a distant part of the country, and the proposition is seriously made to us by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that they shall be examined by the Civil Service Commission and sent out, very likely from the city of Washington, at large expense to the Government, to perform duties which from the very nature of the case they know nothing about.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to suggest to him that we have made no such proposition; that if they are not included in the present system of civil service, they will not be in.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. TELLER. And if they are in, the President can take them out if he wants them out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand all about that, and that does not in the least degree qualify my statement.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, his statement is not correct. They are not within the provisions of the law unless they are put in by order of the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. I understand that, too.

Mr. TELLER. And if we let it alone and they are not in, then they are still out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand, and I prefer to keep them out. I know of no reason why either Congress or the President should include these officers, at the pay of a dollar and a half or thereabouts a day, in the civil service, and impose upon the public service a class of men who, in the nature of things, will have no qualifications for the performance of their duties. There are men in Colorado, there are men in California, there are men in Oregon who understand infinitely more about this business than any man whom the Civil Service Commission can discover in Washington or anywhere else; and I think it is bad policy for us to extend the civil service in that direction. My judgment is that it is extended already further than it ought to be, and I think we ought to call a halt when it comes to the appointment of a few men to perform such duties as are required of these men at the meager salary which they are to receive.

For that reason I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I accept the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—I am compelled to accept it—that the object of this amendment to the House bill is to place all these officers under civil-service rules and to put them into the classified service. This would be a very serious thing if it were not so grotesque. It creates a new line of officers to be provided for from the certified list of the Civil Service Commission, who have never been thought of before, and it is extending the powers of the Civil Service Commission to a class of employees who have never yet been subject to its provisions.

The Senator from Missouri is correct in his conclusions, but wrong in his premises. Under the second amendment——

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not speak of the second amendment. I was discussing the first amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I supposed the Senator was speaking of both amendments. I will speak of the first amendment and the second amendment, and consider them together in a general way, because both are closely identified.

This provision places under the control of the Civil Service Commission men who act as ordinary laborers a hundred miles from a railway, in the depths of the forest and beyond mail facilities, out alone with a bucket by their side and a rifle upon their back, and makes them subject to the control of the civil-service authorities in the city of Washington.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office informs me that he expects to employ these men at a rate not to exceed a dollar and a half a day. Why, Mr. President, it is ludicrous to say that such men shall be selected by the Civil Service Commission in the city of Washington after passing an examination. A man never could pass a civil-service examination and at the same time be fit for the service which this amendment proposes.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States and even the Committee on Appropriations will see the situation absolutely as it is, and will see that efficient service will be marred, will see that no good can come by placing these appointments under the civil service, and will see that the very object of this provision will be prevented if the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if these men are not already under the civil-service rules by virtue of some order, it is not necessary to make any suggestion in the amendment concerning them.

Mr. CLARK. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. You may interrupt me for a moment.

Mr. CLARK. Only for a moment. I made my statement upon the statement made by the chairman of the committee who reported the bill, that the object was to place these men under the classified service, and I prefer to avoid any question as to that matter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, we are not placing them under the civil service, and we are providing that the President shall not place them there. That is what we are providing for, and that is all we are providing for now. We propose to leave that subject to the President.

Some of these people ought to be under the civil-service regulations and some, as suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], ought not to be. It would be absurd to put some of them under the regulations of that service. We propose to leave the whole matter to the Department, and the Secretary of the Interior will see what positions he thinks ought to be under the civil-service rules and what ought not to be, and the President will very likely agree with him. The whole matter will be left practically to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and we do not want to legislate here so that he can not manage it.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement, and I ask if I may be permitted to make it under the agreement under which we are acting?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not on this bill.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Washington can speak on the second amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, a single word. It is very unkind of the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to make the statement which he has made. I do not care anything about it particularly, but he took over a day to speak on my motion, and I sat here in my chair for two days and listened to the honorable Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. What statement did I make?

Mr. WILSON. He made a charge against me in his opening speech that I made a gross attack upon the Administration and upon the Civil Service Commission. That is the utterance the honorable Senator made. Then he started out with his speech—an interesting speech, covering the Cuban question and other questions—and when I have just five minutes to reply to the honorable Senator, he says, "You can not speak on this bill," whilst he has spoken an entire day upon my motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon. I did not say you could not speak.

Mr. WILSON. As the honorable Senator walked down the aisle he said, "You can not speak on this bill." I think I am quoting his exact language, and I submit to that honorable Senator, whom I esteem and admire—nay more, whom I love—that it was not fair to object to my speaking for five minutes after he had spoken an entire day on my motion, his speech involving the whole Cuban question, the standard silver dollar, and all we have got to do is to get the old Hawaiian question up again and then we shall have all our former contentions fought over again.

Mr. COCKRELL. I spoke on the first amendment. If the Senator wants to speak on the second amendment, he has a perfect right to do so. The Senator can speak for five minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I do not want to speak at all. I do not care whether I speak or not. That is entirely uninteresting. But I want to deny the statement that the honorable Senator from Missouri attributed to me two days ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment before the Senate is on page 67, in line 6, after the words "shall be," to strike out "selected by the Secretary of the Interior and." The question is on concurring in that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] who is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] who is detained from the Senate by serious illness. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] with whom I am paired is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and will permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allison,	Gray,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Hawley,	Mills,	Sewell,
Bate,	Hoar,	Money,	Stewart,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Teller,
Caffery,	Kenney,	Pasco,	Turley,
Clay,	Lodge,	Perkins,	Turner.
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,
Daniel,	McLaurin,	Platt, Conn.
Faulkner,	Mallory,	Proctor,

NAYS—24.

Allen,	Cullom,	Hanna,	Quay,
Burrows,	Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Roach,
Cannon,	Elkins,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Carter,	Fairbanks,	Penrose,	Warren,
Chandler,	Foraker,	Pettus,	White,
Clark,	Gallinger,	Pritchard,	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—32.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mason,	Thurston,
Baker,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Tillman,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Vest,
Davis,	Kyle,	Nelson,	Walthall,
Frye,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.	Wellington,
Gear,	McBride,	Smith,	Wetmore,
Gorman,	McMillan,	Spooner,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to an amendment, on page 67, line 21, after the word "persons," to strike out "to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for duty;" so as to read:

Provided, That forestry agents and supervisors, and other persons under this appropriation, shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think that identically the same question is involved in that amendment as the one which the Senate has just passed upon.

Mr. CLARK. It is not at all the same question. It applies to a different class of employees entirely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I believe I am entitled to five minutes under the rule to discuss this amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. WILSON. I am not violating, I trust, any agreement that has been made. I do not want to do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I was just about to state my reasons and reply to the statement of the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], that I have made an attack on the Civil Service Commission or upon the President. So far as the matter of an attack upon the Civil Service Commission is concerned, I hope that is true. I shall be very glad to be considered as attacking that honorable body at any time, because I have not a particle of confidence in them at any time or any place or under any circumstances. I wish to state that publicly.

When, however, the honorable Senator stated that in the statement I made I had attacked the President, he was a little hasty, because the statement that I made was with reference to the late Democratic President of the United States, and not to the present occupant of the White House.

It so happened that I said in regard to the Puyallup Commission that it expired by law December 1, 1896. Nevertheless the Civil Service Commission appointed, without any examination whatever, one of the members of the Puyallup Commission into a civil-service place, to wit, supervisor of Indian schools, a position where we need a civil-service examination, it would seem to me, if we need it anywhere. They used in this letter that they drafted and wrote to a commission of the Senate which was making an examination in regard to these matters the following language—and I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Missouri to it because he asked me to read that letter——

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date?

Mr. WILSON. February 12, 1898. The letter says:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1898.

To the COMMISSION:

In accordance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following in regard to the appointment of James T. Anderson as superintendent of the Indian school at Tacoma, Wash.:

The Indian Bureau advises this office that Mr. Anderson was originally appointed by President Cleveland as a member of the Puyallup Indian Commission, and was serving as such when the May 6, 1896, order brought into the classified service so many positions in the Indian service. The Secretary of the Interior decided that the Puyallup Commission, among others, was classified by such order.

I do not believe the Secretary of the Interior ever decided any such foolish thing, because he would not decide that certain offices were under the civil service that did not exist at the time he made his decision, for the commission had been abolished by the aid and assistance of the honorable Senator from Missouri, who assisted in framing the Indian appropriation bill, which provided that those offices should expire December 1, 1896.

Shortly afterwards, the work of the Puyallup Commission being about at an end—

It had ended December 1, 1896—

Mr. Anderson was transferred to the position of supervisor of Indian schools (section 129, Manual of Examinations, revised to January 1, 1898), which position was also classified May 6, 1896.

The commission had expired, and notwithstanding they had gone out of office, they certified, without examination, the appointment of this man as supervisor of Indian schools.

Mr. President, I submit that that was not an attack upon the present President of the United States. I submit that this commission were going very far out of their way. When they wanted a supervisor of Indian schools, they could have had an examination for that purpose. They should not have attempted to force that man into this position and then place a blanket over him and give him an office for the balance of his natural life—a gross violation of the order of May 6, 1896, and it was made by the Civil Service Commission; and the gentleman at that time occupying the position of Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Francis, was from the State that the honorable Senator from Missouri so honorably represents.

It was for that reason I made that statement. That condition has gone on, that man still holding that position. I do not know whether he is qualified or not. I only know that, without any examination or without any record of any examination, they took a man from an office that had expired, that had gone out of existence by special legislation on the Indian appropriation bill, and put him into a classified office to remain for all time. That is why I made the statement. It seemed to me to be a gross perversion and violation of the order of May 6, 1896.

I desired only to make that statement, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. The question is on concurring in the amendment in line 21, on page 67, which has been stated.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PETTUS. I propose an amendment on page 87, after line 14, by inserting the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

For dental pathologist for the Army Medical Museum, $1,800.

Mr. PETTUS. That amendment has once been passed by this body without any objection. It has been directly estimated for and recommended by the head of the Department, and I ask that it may be inserted in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the amendment is not germane to this bill, this being not a bill to provide for salaries, but for sundry civil expenses. I will not, however, object at this moment, leaving the matter to be considered carefully by the conference committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is not in order if objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 108, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For maintenance of the channel of Mobile Harbor by dredging, $30,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in the last appropriation bill for rivers and harbors there is the following appropriation:

Improving Mobile Harbor, Alabama: For maintenance of the channel by dredging, $60,000, $10,000 of which may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used for engineering and contingent expenses connected with the superintendence and inspection of the work of dredging carried on under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress approved March 16, 1896.

That fund, Mr. President, has been almost entirely exhausted. A considerable part of it has been expended in the dredging out of that channel of an English ship which got lodged there in time of storm, so that it has drawn the fund down to almost the minimum. There is no safety at all in sending any troops to Mobile to be sent out by ships through that channel unless we make some provision for keeping the channel clear by dredging.

I ask now the modest sum of $30,000, though the sum not regularly estimated for but stated by the engineer in charge is $60,000. I have, however, reduced it one-half; and I hope I can get that public service allowed. I think the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. CHILTON. There is one amendment undisposed of about which I wish to ask an explanation. It is found on page 141. It seems to be an appropriation to pay the salary of a secretary or clerk to a judge after he retired, and hence ceased to do duty as an officer of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me a moment to explain?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a small sum allowed to the late Associate Justice Field to enable him to complete a work commenced before his successor was appointed. It only covers a period of about three months. I think, while the amendment may not be strictly in order, it is a very just and appropriate expenditure for that distinguished jurist, who served so long and so faithfully as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. The amount, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, is small, and ordinarily it would not be worth while to make a contest over $397; but a small item might involve a principle which would be far-reaching. It would be unfortunate for the Government of the United States to commence paying salaries to secretaries of retired officers. The only theory on which an officer is entitled to a secretary or clerk is to give necessary assistance to the discharge of official duties, and it would be manifestly a dangerous departure to pay for the services of a secretary of a judge or any other officer after that officer had ceased to have official duties to perform.

If this amendment is not carefully guarded, it may lead to a heavy charge upon the Treasury. The next thing, of course, we will have to pay for clerks for all retired judges. It is already proposed that the circuit judges and the district judges shall be provided with clerks, and when these judges retire they can well claim the continuation of their clerks at public expense. No other retired judges have been allowed secretaries. Such jurists as Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Strong get along in private life upon the liberal salary which the Government paid them, and I do not think we should make this case one which may give us future embarrassment.

The salary referred to in this case is for three months only. If he is entitled to it for three months, it seems to me he would be entitled to it for the three following months, and so from quarter to quarter indefinitely.

If the Senator from Iowa will accept an amendment, which I have prepared, which will protect the Treasury from any future burden on a similar score, I shall make no further objection at this hour:

Provided, That hereafter no allowance or compensation for clerks or secretaries of officials of the United States retired from active service shall be authorized.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Iowa will accept that amendment. There is no objection to it.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from Arkansas asks me to read the language to which I have offered the amendment. It is found on page 144, beginning in line 6, and is as follows:

Authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of the appropriation for stenographic clerks for associate justices of the Supreme Court, to Irwin B. Linton for services as such clerk to Stephen J. Field, retired associate justice, for the months of December, January, and February last past—

These months cover a time subsequent to his retirement, bear in mind—the sum of $397.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars" in line 13, page 141, insert:

Provided, That hereafter no allowance or compensation for clerks or secretaries of officials of the United States retired from active service shall be authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HARRY EARLE.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is authorized to certify for payment out of the fund for the contingent expenses of the Senate the sum due Harry Earle for mileage and allowance as a witness before said committee, not to exceed the sum of $50.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama this morning for the payment of a witness before the Committee on Foreign Relations, directs me to report the same, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the words "out of the contingent fund of the Senate" be inserted instead of the phraseology used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MILITARY PUBLICATIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department, which was, on page 3, after line 18, to insert "under this resolution the usual number not to be printed."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in the time of war, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NONEXPORTATION OF WAR MATERIAL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the unanimons consent of the Senate to call up a brief joint resolution relating to the export of coal. It is on the table now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 157) to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not object, if it will not lead to debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has not been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it will be taken up and passed.

Mr. FAULKNER. Personally I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution, but I suggest that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], when it was read the other day, objected; and he stated to me, immediately after making objection, that he desired to make some remarks on it before it passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can add to that this statement: In a conversation following immediately after that I suggested an exception like that in the old embargo act of 1807; and with the discretion in the President over limitations, he would have no objection.

Mr. QUAY. As I understand it, the objection of the Senator from Maryland was to the measure as it was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts as a substitute for the original resolution of the Senator from Connecticut, which was absolutely prohibitory and allowed the President no discretion. The objection was that the President should have discretion, and that the joint resolution ought not to pass except in that form.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to have it understood that I make no objection to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CAFFERY. I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether it could not specify the articles the exportation of which shall be prohibited?

Mr. HAWLEY. It would be very difficult. There might have been something more of description, but it is impossible to go into the minute description of fulminates and percussion caps and primers and ramrods.

Mr. CAFFERY. Suppose we say, "Coal and munitions of war."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It does practically now.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then I should be satisfied with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose it is well known what war material is. It seems to me that discretion may be safely left to the President.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does the joint resolution say "war material?"

Mr. CHANDLER. Materials used for war.

Mr. HAWLEY. For war.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then I have nothing more to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. LINDSAY. As I caught the reading of the joint resolution, when the embargo is made by the President it remains in force until Congress acts upon it. Is there any reason why the President should not have the right to relieve the embargo, when in his opinion it can be properly done, without awaiting the action of Congress? It is a Presidential embargo, and why should he not have the power to remove it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would have no objection to a line saying that the President may, when in his judgment it is proper, remove the embargo.

Mr. LINDSAY. To be removed by the President or by Congress.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the joint resolution be again read. As I remember, it simply gives the President the right to restrict the exportation of coal and other munitions of war. There is no absolute embargo unless the President lays it.

Mr. LINDSAY. The joint resolution does not give him the power to remove the embargo. That is the point I make.

Mr. CHANDLER. He could undoubtedly put limitations upon his own act.

Mr. QUAY. There is no difficulty about that, I think.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that we insert the words "for such time as, in his opinion, may be necessary."

Mr. LINDSAY. Something of that sort.

Mr. HAWLEY. As it reads now it is until otherwise ordered by Congress. Shall we say "until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress?" It must be one or the other.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is all right.

Mr. HALE. That will cover it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the joint resolution be read as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the joint resolution will read:

Be it resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2728) for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8875) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the battle ship Maine, etc.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate, relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, etc., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 157) to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9378, being the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that in the reading the committee amendments be considered as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Pay of the Navy," on page 2, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, page 2, after the word "available," to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enlist at any time after the passage of this act as many additional men as in his discretion he may deem necessary to man the ships in commission: Provided, That the total number of men and boys in the general service and under training shall not exceed 12,750 men and 1,000 boys.

And insert:

And whenever, within the next twelve months, an exigency may exist which, in the judgment of the President, renders their services necessary, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint from civil life and commission such acting officers of the line and staff, not above the rank or relative rank of lieutenant, as may be requisite: Provided, That such officers shall serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required: And provided further, That such officers so appointed shall be assigned to duty with rank and pay of the grades established by existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 24, to insert:

That hereafter no professors of mathematics in the Navy shall be appointed, but in lieu thereof, and as vacancies occur by retirement or otherwise among the members of the present corps of professors of mathematics attached to the Naval Observatory, astronomers shall be appointed by the President, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, for such duty; and the astronomers so appointed shall, during the first five years of their service, receive compensation at the rate of $3,500 per annum, during the second five years at the rate of $4,000 per annum, and after ten years from date of appointment at the rate of $4,500 per annum. Such astronomers shall be appointed from civil life, and shall be chosen solely with respect to their fitness from among astronomers of repute, without other restriction than that they shall, at the time of their appointment, be citizens of the United States; and the number of civilian astronomers appointed in pursuance of this act shall at no time exceed five.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the amendment may be passed over for the present. I will call it up later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, after line 24, to insert:

Naval training station, Yerba Buena Island, California (for apprentices): Toward the erection of buildings for the naval training station and for the construction of a wharf and bulkhead for approach to the same on Yerba Buena Island (Goat Island), California, $50,000, said improvements to cost complete not more than $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 8, after line 11, to insert:

For repairing and improving the telephone line connecting the Navy Department and Washington Navy-Yard with the naval proving ground at Indian Head, to be immediately available, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Torpedo station, Newport, R. I.," on page 9, after line 21, to strike out:

For the manufacture of smokeless powder, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, torpedo station, $75,500;" so as to make the clause read:

Enlarging storehouse, improvements and repairs to seaman gunners' quarters, and providing more adequate accommodations for the increasing number of torpedo boats sent to the station for outfits and torpedo work, $10,500; in all, torpedo station, $75,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 7, after the word "States," to strike out "and to enable it to collect and tabulate information relative to the defense of the coast;" so as to make the clause read:

For arms, accouterments, signal outfits, boats and their equipments, and printing of the necessary books of instruction for the Naval Militia of the various States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 12, before the word "officer," to strike out "an" and insert "a line;" in the same line, after the word "detailed," to insert "temporarily;" and in line 14, after the word "officer," to insert "during such detail;" so as to make the clause read:

That a line officer of the Navy may be detailed temporarily as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance in the Navy Department, and that such officer during such detail shall receive the highest pay of his grade, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 23, to insert:

That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests require the use in the naval service of any invention or discovery covered by letters patent issued to any officer of the Navy, whether retained in his ownership or assigned to others, said Secretary shall proceed to use said invention or discovery in the manner and to the extent required by such naval service, and such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer, considering all the circumstances connected with the making of the invention or discovery, and especially all facilities in originating, working out, or perfecting the invention which the officer may have enjoyed by reason of his official position, may be recovered by suit brought by said officer in the Court of Claims. Said court shall make rules for the trial of such cases, conforming as far as may be with the rules established by the Supreme Court for the practice in courts of equity, and all cases shall be determined within one year from the filing of the petition therein unless, in the discretion of the court, upon sufficient cause shown, the time is extended, and in all such cases appeals may be allowed to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby prohibited from making any contract or payment for the use of any patent taken out by any naval officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment," on page 16, line 6, after the word "cents," to insert "and the Hydrographic Office shall hereafter be attached to and be a part of the Bureau of Equipment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 8, to insert:

For one steam water-boat for use at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 24, under the subhead of "Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa.," after the word "fund," to strike out:

And whenever any officer, seaman, or marine entitled to a pension is admitted to the Naval Home at Philadelphia, or to a naval hospital, his pension, while he remains there, shall be deducted from his accounts and paid to the Secretary of the Navy for the benefit of the fund from which such home or hospital, respectively, is maintained; and section 4813 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be commenced, within three months after the passage of this act, and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to carry on, proceedings for the condemnation of the following tract of land for the use of the United States for the Norfolk Navy-Yard, for the purpose of constructing a wet dock, and for other purposes, namely, the tract of land known as the Cedar Grove property, containing 50 acres, with a water front of 1,600 feet on the Elizabeth River, immediately opposite to the Gosport Navy-Yard, in the State of Virginia, under the act of Congress approved August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the condemnation of lands for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes," and other laws of the United States, so as to completely vest in the United States the title of said land. And all such proceedings shall be reported to Congress at its next session by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Dredging a channel from the outside to the naval station, $100,000; constructing a wharf adjoining the timber dry dock, $75,000; one locomotive crane and track for dry dock, $70,000.

On page 28, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "three hundred and thirty;" and in line 2, after the word "cents," to strike out:

Provided, That none of the above amounts appropriated for the naval station at Port Royal shall be available or used until the United States shall have acquired all right and title to the land claimed by Agnes A. Niver adjacent to the land where the dry dock now is, and involved in litigation in the United States Court of Claims, except that $1,000 of the $15,000 appropriated for the quay wall may be used to preserve the same.

So as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Port Royal, S. C.: Quay wall, $15,000; repair shop (for steam engineering), $50,000; dredging a channel from the outside to the naval station, $100,000; constructing a wharf adjoining the timber dry dock, $75,000; one locomotive crane and track for dry dock, $70,000; for the payment of the amounts awarded to the owners of the several tracts of land at the naval station, Port Royal, S. C., recently condemned for the use of the United States, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated for the purchase of land at that station, $20,325.50; in all, $330,325.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 10, to strike out:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consolidate the following sums heretofore appropriated, namely: Act of July 26, 1894, for coal shed, $10,000; act of March 2, 1895, for coaling pier, $40,000, and act of June 8, 1896, for coal shed (additional), $4,000, and to expend the aggregate, $54,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a coal shed inside the iron pier at the United States naval station, Key West, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Navy-Yard, Mare Island, Cal.," on page 29, after line 14, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to repair and reconstruct, where necessary, the buildings, including the naval hospital building, recently damaged by earthquake at the Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal., $350,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out after the word "buildings," in line 16, the words "including the naval hospital building."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 30, line 9, after the word "such," to strike out "navy-yards and stations" and insert "navy-yard or station;" and in line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Housing torpedo vessels: Hauling out and housing torpedo vessels at such navy-yard or station as may be selected, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Repairs and preservation at navy-yards and stations," on page 30, line 17, after the word "timber," to insert "granite or concrete faced with granite;" and on page 31, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to build either or all of said docks of granite or concrete faced with granite, and in such case the limit of the cost of either or all of said docks is increased $300,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Toward the construction of four timber, granite, or concrete faced with granite dry docks, $300,000 each; in all, $800,000; said dry docks to be not less than 700 feet in length, and of other dimensions sufficient to meet the present and probable future requirements of the largest vessels of the Navy and auxiliary fleet. One of these docks to be located at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., to cost, when completed, not exceeding $825,000; one at the navy-yard, Boston, Mass., to cost, when completed, not exceeding $825,000; one at the navy-yard, League Island, Pa., to cost, when completed, not exceeding $825,000, and one at the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal., to cost, when completed, not exceeding $825,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to build either or all of said docks of granite or concrete faced with granite, and in such case the limit of the cost of either or all of said docks is increased $300,000.

Mr. HALE. In line 13, on page 31, I move to strike out the words "or all" after "either;" so as to read "either of said docks."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 31, line 15, after the word "one," to strike out "double-sided;" in line 16, after the word "dock," to strike out "of the type known as the" and insert "which shall be a;" and in line 17, before the word "dock," to strike out "self-docking;" so as to make the clause read:

Toward the construction of one steel floating dock which shall be a combined floating and graving dock, $300,000, said dock to be located at the naval reservation at Algiers, La., to be capable of lifting a vessel of 15,000 tons displacement, and 27 feet draft of water, to cost, including moorings and wharf, $950,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 23, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy may employ, and pay out of the appropriations for dry docks herein authorized, such additional expert aids, draftsmen, writers, and copyists as may be necessary for the preparation of plans and specifications, to an amount not to exceed $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 5, after the word "authorized," to insert "under the limitations hereinbefore provided;" and in line 6, before the word "construction," to insert "entire;" so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized, under the limitations hereinbefore provided, to make contracts for the entire construction of said dry docks, and steel floating dock, and in each case the contract shall be awarded to the lowest best responsible bidder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 8, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of naval officers to determine the desirability of locating and constructing a dry dock of sufficient capacity to take the largest naval ship in the harbor of Galveston or Sabine Pass, Texas, or in the waters adjacent thereto; and to report such finding to the next session of the present Congress; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 22, under the head of "Repairs, Naval Academy," after the word "dollars," to strike out:

For the erection of new buildings at and for the use of the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of the character and to the extent that the Secretary of the Navy may in his judgment deem necessary and practicable under the appropriation, in accordance with plans to be determined upon by the Secretary, and for the removal of such old buildings as may in the judgment of said Secretary be necessary to be removed for the convenient and suitable location and construction of the said new buildings, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 7, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for the construction, at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of a building suitable for use as an armory, at a cost not to exceed $300,000; a boathouse, at a cost not to exceed $300,000; a power house, at a cost not to exceed $100,000; four double houses for officers' quarters, at a cost not to exceed $80,000; for grading, electric-light wiring, removing old buildings, and preparing plans, at a cost not to exceed $90,000; for constructing the line of sea wall on the river side, piling, dredging, and filling in, as may be necessary, $150,000; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated toward the construction of the public works herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 3, to strike out:

Repairs to marine barracks, Annapolis, Md., $1,500.

Mr. HALE. On page 59, line 18, after the word "ships," I move to strike out "designed to carry" and to insert "carrying."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 18, after the word "ships," it is proposed to strike out "designed to carry" and to insert "carrying;" so as to read:

Coast-line battle ships carrying the heaviest armor, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, line 23, after the word "Maine," to insert "and four harbor-defense vessels of the monitor type, each having one or two turrets, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $1,250,000 each;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract three seagoing coast-line battle ships carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 11,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,000,000 each, one of said battle ships to be named the Maine; and four harbor-defense vessels of the monitor type, each having one or two turrets, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $1,250,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 60, line 2, before the word "torpedo," to strike out "twelve" and insert "sixteen;" in line 3, before the word "tons," to strike out "three hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four million six hundred and eighty" and insert "six million nine hundred;" in line 18, before the word "contracts," to strike out "The" and insert:

And not more than 2 of said battle ships, and not more than 2 of said harbor-defense vessels, and not more than 5 of said torpedo-boat destroyers, and not more than 4 of said torpedo boats shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party, and the.

On page 61, line 9, after the word "ships," to insert "and 1, and not more than 1, of the aforesaid harbor-defense vessels;" in line 15, after the word "vessel," to insert "or either of them;" in line 18, after the word "ships," to insert "or harbor-defense vessels;" and in line 19, after the word "vessel," to insert "or either of them;" so as to read:

And 16 torpedo-boat destroyers of about 400 tons displacement, and 12 torpedo boats of about 150 tons displacement, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost in all, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $6,000,000; and 1 gunboat to take the place of the U. S. S. Michigan, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $260,000, said gunboat to be constructed on the Great Lakes or their connecting waters: Provided, That said construction of said gunboat shall conform to all existing treaties and conventions. And not more than 2 of said battle ships, and not more than 2 of said harbor-defense vessels, and not more than 5 of said torpedo-boat destroyers, and not more than 4 of said torpedo boats shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party, and the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," and amendments subsequently made thereto as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture; and, subject to the provisions hereinafter made, one and not more than one of the aforesaid seagoing battle ships, and one and not more than one of the aforesaid harbor-defense vessels, shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or in the waters connecting therewith: Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts when the same are opened and examined by him, said vessel, or either of them, can not be constructed on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean at a cost not exceeding 4 per cent above the lowest accepted bid for the other battle ships or harbor-defense vessels provided for in this act, he shall authorize the construction of said vessel, or either of them, elsewhere in the United States, subject to the limitations as to the cost hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 24, to increase the appropriation "for construction and machinery," from $7,648,473 to $13,648,473.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 18, after the word "for," to insert "the four harbor-defense vessels;" in line 19, before the word "torpedo-boat," to strike out "twelve" and insert "sixteen;" in the same line, after the word "torpedo-boat," to strike out "destroyer" and insert "destroyers;" in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five million six" and insert "seven million one;" and on page 63, line 3, after the word "tests," to insert: "and royalty for steel face-hardening process, not to exceed one-half cent per pound, whenever the United States is legally bound to pay the same;" so as to make the clause read:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894, of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895, of those authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, of the three torpedo boats authorized by the act of March 3, 1897, and of those authorized by this act, including the completion of ordnance outfit for the four harbor-defense vessels, the sixteen torpedo-boat destroyers, and twelve torpedo boats named herein, $7,162,800: Provided, That the total cost of the armor according to the plans and specifications already prepared, for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,210,000, including all cost of nickel in the same, and exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic test plates, and tests, and royalty for steel face-hardening process, not to exceed one-half cent per pound, whenever the United States is legally bound to pay the same, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel as aforesaid.

Mr. HALE. Instead of the words used in line 5, on page 63, I move to insert the words "and which can not be made use of without payment of royalty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 5, in the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "whenever the United States is legally bound to pay the same" and to insert "and which can not be made use of without payment of royalty;" so as to read:

Provided, That the total cost of the armor according to the plans and specifications already prepared for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,210,000, including all cost of nickel in the same, and exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic test plates, and tests, and royalty for steel face-hardening process, not to exceed one-half cent per pound, and which can not be made use of without payment of royalty, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel as aforesaid.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 63, line 10, before the word "authorized," to insert "and herein;" and in line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "by Congress, one," and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Equipment: Toward the completion of the equipment outfit of the new vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. On page 61, line 7, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 7, after the word "manufacture," it is proposed to insert "except that no proposal for torpedo vessels shall be considered unless the bidder is already in possession of adequate plant; and that the advertisement relating to the proposals for such vessels may be published for three weeks only."

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have that amendment read again in connection with the text.

Mr. HALE. This provision is to be inserted so that the three months' advertisement provided by law shall not apply to torpedo boats, so that contracts can be promptly made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment in connection with the context.

The SECRETARY. If amended as proposed, the bill will read:

The contracts under which they are built, except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture; except that no proposal for torpedo vessels shall be considered unless the bidder is already in possession of adequate plant; and that the advertisement relating to the proposals for such vessels may be published for three weeks only.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not objecting to that amendment, but I hope the Senator in conference will please guard against any inference that the torpedo boats may be built of any other materials than those of domestic production.

Mr. HALE. The intention of the amendment is only to save time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I fear when the word "except" is put in there it may lead to a construction that as to the torpedo boats the materials need not be of American manufacture.

Mr. HALE. That point will be looked after in conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 10, after line 24, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Experiments with armor-piercing projectiles: For conducting experiments in firing armor-piercing projectiles charged with high explosives under service conditions from naval guns at high velocities, and for the purpose of determining whether the destructive effect of shells so charged is greater than that of similar shells charged with gunpowder, and whether they can be placed on board naval vessels on the same footing as shells loaded with gunpowder, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 2, line 19, after the word "lieutenant," I move to insert "and warrant machinists."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, after the word "lieutenant," it is proposed to insert "and warrant machinists;" so as to read:

And whenever, within the next twelve months, an exigency may exist which, in the judgment of the President, renders their services necessary, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint from civil life and commission such acting officers of the line and staff, not above the rank or relative rank of lieutenant, and warrant machinists as may be requisite.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 17, after line 21, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to execute the provisions of section 1552 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish at such places as he may deem necessary suitable depots of coal and other fuel for the supply of steamships of war, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator offers another amendment, I wish to call his attention again to page 2, where an amendment has already been made, authorizing the appointment of warrant officers. I see the provision is:

That such officers shall serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required.

I wish to ask the Senator whether that clause is intended to authorize the appointment from civil life of any officers for any specified time? For instance, according to the terms of the contract, those officers are only to serve during the emergency and their authority as officers is to terminate when that exigency ceases, whatever it may be.

Mr. HALE. It is limited to twelve months, anyway. It is discretionary with the President as to the extent of the exigency, within the twelve months.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think it so reads, if the Senator will permit me. The limitation of twelve months is to the appointment.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the appointment is only for the exigency, then the amendment is satisfactory; if, however, it is intended to allow the President to make appointments for any given length of time, then it is objectionable. I think, taking the sentence as a whole, that these appointments can not be made except in general terms for the exigency.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; and they can not be made at all after twelve months.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is correct about that; and with that understanding, I do not object to the language.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

For tearing down and removing the present naval hospital building and appendages recently destroyed by earthquake at the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal., and erecting a new naval hospital and appendages at that place, to be immediately available, $100,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether if that is adopted it leaves the words "naval hospital building" out?

Mr. PERKINS. Those words have already been stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 56, after line 25, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

For repair of barracks and officers' quarters at Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal., damaged by earthquake, $5,425, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask now to go back to page 2, where we passed over an amendment beginning in line 25.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 24, the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert:

That hereafter no professors of mathematics in the Navy shall be appointed, but in lieu thereof, and as vacancies occur by retirement or otherwise among the members of the present corps of professors of mathematics attached to the Naval Observatory, astronomers shall be appointed by the President, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, for such duty; and the astronomers so appointed shall, during the first five years of their service, receive compensation at the rate of $3,500 per annum, during the second five years at the rate of $4,000 per annum, and after ten years from date of appointment at the rate of $4,500 per annum. Such astronomers shall be appointed from civil life, and shall be chosen solely with respect to their fitness from among astronomers of repute, without other restriction than that they shall, at the time of their appointment, be citizens of the United States; and the number of civilian astronomers appointed in pursuance of this act shall at no time exceed five.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I asked to have that amendment passed over because it seemed to me to make a very undesirable change. In the first place, the amendment makes absolutely no provision for Annapolis. The committee seem to have lost sight entirely of the fact that the law requires that there should be three professors of mathematics in certain departments at Annapolis, and they are there serving, as a matter of fact, at this moment. This amendment applies only to those who are detailed to duty at the Naval Observatory.

Undoubtedly, Mr. President, there have been abuses in the appointment to the corps of professors of mathematics. Persons have been appointed to that corps who had absolutely no qualifications for the position, as intended, I think, by the law, and have been assigned to duties, such as librarians and positions of that sort, for which this corps was never intended; but that fact does not seem to me in the least to militate against the inadvisability of the change that is here proposed.

I want particularly to call attention to the matter of the Naval Academy. I think everyone will admit the importance to every institution of learning of having professors whose appointment there is permanent. No university, no institution of learning could possibly go on or maintain its standing if its professors and teachers were being changed every three years, which is the ordinary time of a line officer's assignment to duty. As a matter of fact, there ought to be more professors of mathematics at Annapolis now than there are at present. At West Point, where the standard of education has been of the very highest, and which has been of the greatest possible credit to the country, the professors are a permanent body, regularly commissioned officers of the Army, with military rank and title, and the pay of professors. The professors at Annapolis, being under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, ought also to be officers of the Navy with relative rank.

Moreover, by having a permanent corps of that kind we shall have a body of scientific men who can be detailed to specific scientific duties, just as one of the professors of mathematics is now the ordnance expert, and has been for thirteen years on duty in the Ordnance Department here, where a highly scientific education is very necessary.

This proposed change will also involve an increase of expense which seems to me wholly needless. Under the present pay of the Navy these professors of mathematics get a certain increase as their time of service goes on, and that is proposed by this amendment; but the amendment increases the pay of the professors a thousand dollars a year. Yet that increase will not enable us, in my judgment, to get so good a class of men as we now get.

There is great inducement to men of high scientific attainments to enter the Navy as professors of mathematics, because they get a relative rank and recognized position in the service and a retiring pension in their old age. They had rather have that than to get much higher pay and be liable to be thrown out in their old age without anything. The roll of the men who have been brought into the naval service under the existing system contains distinguished names. It includes in our own time such men as Newcomb, one of the greatest of living mathematicians, if not the greatest; Asaph Hall, discoverer of the moons of Mars; Professor Harkness, who is at the head of the Nautical Almanac now. Names like those show that men of the highest scientific attainments are attracted to the Government service, which, although it offers very much lower pay, by giving the dignity of rank and the security of a retiring pay enables them to come in and attracts them there.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that the corps of professors of mathematics was abolished in 1866, owing to the fact that at that time, just after the war, there was a great influx of line officers for whom it was very much desired to find shore duty. The system proved such a failure that six years later, in 1872, they returned to the old system of professors of mathematics.

I object, Mr. President, and it seems to me the reasons are very strong, to the abolition of the corps. I think it will injure the service which the Navy desires to get from these men; and this amendment, in any event, makes no provision whatever for Annapolis.

The character of the education at Annapolis, that which has given it its standing, has been the work of the permanent men there, the professors of mathematics, of whom Chauvenet was the most distinguished and who by his services there gave immense reputation to the Academy. This amendment makes no provision for professors of a permanent kind at the Academy. They could throw that whole teaching force at once into the hands of line officers, who necessarily are shifted every three years. It can have no other effect than to cause the instruction at Annapolis to deteriorate; and I believe it will have the same effect in the appointments to the Naval Observatory for which other provision is made. We get better men at lower rates of pay under the present system, where we offer them the dignity of rank, than we could ever get, in my opinion, by offering them higher pay and giving them no rank and no security of tenure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, before he finishes his statement and argument, to tell the Senate what is the employment of the present professors of mathematics at the Naval Academy?

Mr. LODGE. Of course the Senator understands as well as I do that the term "professor of mathematics" is a mere technical designation. It does not mean that they shall all be mathematicians, and the law itself recognizes that, because in the act of May 21, 1864, it is provided that—

Three professors of mathematics shall be assigned to duty at the Naval Academy, one as professor of ethics and English studies, one as professor of the Spanish language, and one as professor of drawing.

It is simply under this that they have been enabled to get permanent professors in those departments, and until 1890 regular assignments were made to Annapolis. The other professors of mathematics (I think there are four or five of them, five I think) are at the Naval Observatory——

Mr. CHANDLER. They are astronomers.

Mr. LODGE. They are astronomers and mathematicians, pure and simple. I have the Naval Register here. It will give the exact duty on which they have been.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. LODGE. One is director of the Nautical Almanac. That is Professor Harkness, and that is purely a mathematical post.

Mr. CHANDLER. Those are all mathematical posts.

Mr. LODGE. One is at the Naval Observatory; one at the Naval Academy; one at the Nautical Almanac Office; one at the Naval Observatory; one at the Naval Academy; one at the Naval Observatory; one is superintendent Library and War Records Office (of course it was never intended by law that a professor of mathematics should be there); one is at the Bureau of Ordnance, whose services have been required there for thirteen years (they are mathematical and scientific services); one in the Bureau of Yards and Docks (I have not the least idea what his duty is there as professor of mathematics), and the last one is at the Naval Observatory.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts in answering my question has brought out very distinctly the anomaly that is sought to be corrected by this amendment. The professors of mathematics who are connected with the Naval Observatory are engaged in astronomical work, and there is certainly no objection on the part of anyone to terming astronomical work mathematical work; but the three professors who at the Naval Academy are engaged, one in teaching ethics and English, the other Spanish and other modern languages, and the third teaching drawing, can not with any propriety any longer be termed professors of mathematics. That is the anomaly which the Senate Committee on Appropriations wish to remove.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, that is a matter of law. That anomaly is created by the act of 1864, which provided that under the head of professors of mathematics—it is a mere question of title—there should be three permanent professors assigned to specific duties at the Naval Academy. That has been in force for thirty-four years.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a law, and the anomaly ought no longer to exist.

Mr. LODGE. What harm can it do?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts will admit that it is always a great deal better in private and in public life to call things by their right names, and there is not any sort of propriety in calling a teacher of ethics and English a professor of mathematics, or in calling a professor who is teaching modern languages a professor of mathematics, because the Senator knows that the teaching of modern languages is not the teaching of an exact science, which mathematics is.

Mr. LODGE. If it is merely a matter of change of designation, why not provide for three professors at Annapolis? What I want to save is the permanent corps of professors at the Academy. I do not care what you call them. I want to get some permanent men there, such as there have always been, who are practiced teachers. But your amendment makes no provision for the Nautical Almanac, which is purely mathematical.

Mr. CHANDLER. A professor of mathematics can go on with the Nautical Almanac. As a matter of fact, it is now being conducted by Professor Newcomb, who is a professor of mathematics on the retired list and is not affected by this amendment at all.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is not conducted by Professor Newcomb. The Director of the Nautical Almanac is Professor Harkness. Professor Newcomb has been employed there under a special appropriation made last year, which has now expired, or will soon, to conclude certain tables and computations. The Director of the Nautical Almanac is Professor Harkness, who has been for many years at the Naval Observatory, and with him is another professor of mathematics. That is pure mathematical work.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts said I was mistaken. I think he ought to withdraw that remark, because he admits himself that this work is being done by Professor Newcomb, which is all I said.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is not being done by Professor Newcomb. He has been employed in special work in that office under a special appropriation, which expires on the 1st of July.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts is better prepared to speak about modern languages and mathematics than I am, and therefore he may be correct. Professor Harkness is in nominal charge of the Nautical Almanac, but I understand the work is being done under the direction of Professor Newcomb, a retired professor of mathematics, in pursuance of a special law of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, a professor of mathematics, William Harkness, is director of the Nautical Almanac. That is the statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not denied that.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Hampshire said Professor Newcomb was in charge of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I said, or intended to say, that he was doing the work.

Mr. LODGE. He is doing a small part of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The point is so small that I withdraw it.

Now, the Senator from Massachusetts admits that we ought to get rid of this anomaly, by which three professors of mathematics are engaged in teaching ethics and English, modern languages, and drawing; and that is one thing which this amendment does, and now for the rest of it——

Mr. LODGE. Get rid of it by abolishing them; not by changing their names, but by wiping it out of existence.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is possible that that may be true, but we do get rid of that anomaly. Now I come to the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts directly. Of course, if he wished to accomplish directly the object which he seeks, he would move to strike out line 25, on page 2, and a portion of the first line at the top of page 3, which prohibits the appointment of any further professors of mathematics. The remainder of the amendment provides that hereafter as professors of mathematics at the Observatory disappear by retirement or otherwise, their places shall be taken by astronomers, so called. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts does not object to having the astronomers at the Naval Observatory called astronomers.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least.

Mr. CHANDLER. He does not insist on having them called professors of mathematics, doing duty as astronomers.

Mr. LODGE. None in the least.

Mr. CHANDLER. The provision here as to the astronomers is a very liberal one. It provides for longevity pay for them, and that longevity pay is recited in the act, and after ten years from the date of their appointment they reach the compensation of $4,500 per annum, none too large for such magnificent scientific work as these gentlemen do, but large as Government salaries go.

The further provision is that they shall be appointed from civil life, shall be chosen solely with respect to their fitness from among astronomers of repute, without any other restrictions than that they shall be at the time of their appointment citizens of the United States, and not to be more than five, and not to be appointed under civil-service rules. I wonder that the Senator from Massachusetts does not propose to provide that they shall be appointed after examination by Commissioner John R. Procter and his associates, so as to see whether they are fit to be astronomers at the Naval Observatory. This amendment makes ample provision for the work of the Naval Observatory, and no friend of the Naval Observatory ought to ask any more liberal provision than is here made.

As to the remaining point of the Senator from Massachusetts that these permanent professors ought to be appointed at the Naval Academy, I do not think so. I think it will be a great deal better to provide for professors there as we have occasion to provide for them. If vacancies occur among the professors of mathematics, who are now engaged in teaching ethics and English, modern languages, and drawing at the Naval Academy, I think it is better that Congress shall provide, if there is need, for permanent instructors in ethics and English, modern languages, and drawing, giving them such salaries as may be proper and giving them such length of tenure as may be proper.

I for one do not believe in appointing a corps of professors at the Naval Academy for life as officers of the Navy. I think it is a great deal better to wipe out this anomaly which for the first time in thirty-four years there has been an opportunity afforded to get rid of. It is a great deal better to get rid of it at this time, and if there are needed permanent professors at the Naval Academy instead of line officers, to provide by future legislation of Congress for such officers.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand the subject very well, and I suppose what the Senator says is true. I should like to ask where is the authority for supplying the necessary instruction at Annapolis now provided for by the professors of mathematics there if one of them should die and if this provision passes as it is. What is going to happen?

Mr. CHANDLER. What will happen will be that the Secretary of the Navy will detail officers of the Navy skilled in ethics and modern languages and in drawing to do the duty of those posts until Congress shall provide additional members of the regular corps of the Academy, if Congress sees fit in its wisdom so to provide.

Mr. HOAR. Then, in other words, by this sweeping clause, you abolish the existing condition, and, so far as Annapolis is concerned, if there should be a vacancy, what would happen?

Mr. CHANDLER. The three professors of mathematics engaged in doing this business, so far as I know, are very healthy in mind and body, and they are doing their duties with zeal and energy, and will hold out a great deal——

Mr. HALE. They are not abolished.

Mr. CHANDLER. They will hold out a great deal longer possibly than the Senator from Massachusetts and I will hold out doing our duties in this Chamber.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I hope if the Committee on Appropriations have any amendment by which the officers now employed at the Naval Observatory are to be improved by a longer term of service, they will adhere to it. I was delighted to hear the Senator from Massachusetts criticise the Naval Academy on account of its three years' term of service. That is the fault which has afflicted the Naval Observatory for years, and now the time has come when every good naval officer that we have should be employed on our ships of war.

It is true some members have been employed, like Asaph Hall and the other gentleman mentioned who long had charge of the Nautical Almanac, who have reflected credit on the Government, but otherwise than that the Naval Observatory has stood at a standstill. It costs now, by the employment of naval officers, with naval pay, nearly twice as much as is paid out for the London Naval Observatory. Therefore I am glad to see some approach toward employing officers who have learned something more to qualify them for the duties necessary in the Naval Observatory than merely how to navigate vessels at sea. So I hope the Committee on Appropriations, if they have any proposition to improve the Naval Observatory, will adhere to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Maine allow me one word in reply to the distinguished Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that he has created the impression that the work of the Naval Observatory is done by naval officers on three-years detail. The Senator is not quite correct in that statement. Naval officers are so detailed, and the head of the Naval Observatory has always been a naval officer, but the Senator from Vermont will remember that there have been at all times engaged in the astronomical work of the Observatory professors of mathematics who have been skillful astronomers, employed under the law of Congress provided for that purpose. The Senator does not wish to create the impression that the work of the Naval Observatory is now done by naval officers upon three-years detail.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to create the impression according to the facts, and the facts are that the leading man of the Naval Observatory has generally been changed every three years, and I desire that officers shall be employed there who will make it their life business—who will have some pride in their vocation, and not be where they are liable to be ordered off at any moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right in his present statement. The head of the Observatory has always been a naval officer, not detailed necessarily for three years, but subject to change in due time, and the reason for that has been that the Naval Observatory is a naval institution.

I understand very well the views of the Senator from Vermont, and I have the highest respect for them. The Senator from Vermont believes that the Naval Observatory should have a civilian head, and he has introduced bills for that purpose which have been carefully considered by Congress. An attempt has been made once or twice by the Naval Affairs Committee, the Senator from Maine will remember, to have appointed a commission composed of naval officers and eminent civilian astronomers to determine what shall be the scope of the work of the Naval Observatory; but although the Senate has two or three times passed such a provision, it never has passed the House of Representatives.

I agreed with the Senator from Vermont that this subject should be investigated and that there is room for discussion as to the scope of the work of the Naval Observatory, but until the scope of that work is defined and so long as the Naval Observatory is a naval institution, attached to the Naval Department, I think it ought to have a distinguished naval officer at the head of it. That is the only difference between the Senator from Vermont and me.

Mr. MORRILL. It merely has a misnomer for a name. It might just as well be entitled an agricultural observatory as a naval observatory.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether it is not his opinion that the Naval Observatory should be entirely detached from the Navy?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, but I have no objection to the employment of some naval officers there.

Mr. HALE. I was hoping talk would not break loose on little matters on the pending bill. It is a very great bill. The Senate has accepted it and practically passed it. I know the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is waiting with an important measure in relation to the military to get it through this afternoon. It is not very essential what is done about this matter. The Secretary recommends it, and in his report he discusses the reasons why it is better to do this. My impression is, the better way to be rid of it is to strike out, in line 25, at the bottom of page 2, and at the head of page 3, the words:

Hereafter no professor of mathematics in the Navy shall be appointed, but in lieu thereof, and.

So that it will read:

That as vacancies occur by retirement or otherwise among the members of the present corps of professors of mathematics attached to the Naval Observatory, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Just a word.

Mr. HALE. I do not care to argue it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to detain the Senate. My objection was to the abolition of the corps. Of course the question of transferring the observatory from the Navy is not involved in the amendment—not the least in the world. I think it would be a great blunder, but there is no need of arguing it here. This simply relates now to the astronomers, and provides that they shall be appointed from civil life. They are appointed from civil life now. If we can get better astronomers in this way, I am not in the least disposed to oppose it, and the change proposed by the Senator from Maine satisfies me entirely.

Mr. HALE. I move, on page 2, line 25, after the word "That," to strike out all of the amendment down to and including the word "and," on page 3.

The SECRETARY. After the word "That," in line 25, page 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "hereafter no professors of mathematics in the Navy shall be appointed, but in lieu thereof, and;" so that it will read:

That as vacancies occur by retirement or otherwise among the members of the present corps of professors, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only one word. The Senator from Maine was called out of the Chamber, and he asked me to defend this clause against the junior Senator from Massachusetts. I have done it as best I could. Now the Senator from Maine has given in, and so I gracefully retire.

Mr. HALE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 24, after line 19, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to grant a revocable license to the Fitchburg Railroad Company to excavate and construct, without expense to the United States, and to use, subject to the prior right of use of the United States, a dock, not less than 570 feet in length and not less than 160 feet in width, on the north side of Hoosac Pier No. 7, at the navy-yard at Boston, the land to be taken equally from the land of the United States and from land of the Fitchburg Railroad Company, in the State of Massachusetts, according to plans on file at the Navy Department, and subject to the control and approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to which I hope there will be no objection.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to consider the subject of the erection in the city of Washington of a suitable statue of David D. Porter, lately the Admiral of the United States, and to report to Congress concerning the general design, reasonable cost, and appropriate location of such a statue.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment come in on page 14, at the end of line 23.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to delay the bill or excite debate, but why should we take in reference to this distinguished officer a course different from that pursued in all other like cases? Congress has always determined the question of the propriety of so honoring a great soldier or a great sailor, and the statue has been obtained by a commission composed of the chairman of the Committee on the Library, the Architect of the Capitol formerly, and the head of the proper Department, the Secretary of the Navy in this case. It seems to me a little peculiar that in regard to a statue to honor the great name of Admiral Porter we should ask a Department officer to say whether it is expedient to erect the statue.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with what the Senator from Massachusetts says. I would be very glad to have an appropriation made by Congress for a statue to Admiral Porter. The subject has already been discussed in this Chamber. But so much difficulty has been experienced in obtaining these appropriations, by reason of discussion as to where the monument should be located and the conditions that should be imposed surrounding its erection, that I have thought a proper preliminary to the erection of a statue of Admiral Porter would be to ascertain from the Navy Department what would be a suitable design and what would be a proper location. Then, with that data before us, I think Congress will have no hesitancy in making the necessary appropriations. If the Senator from Massachusetts will move an amendment to make the appropriation at this time, I shall be very glad to have it done.

Mr. HOAR. I do not suppose the committee would consent to put into the appropriation bill at this time an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. All such appropriations go on the sundry civil or the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing to make no further objection to the amendment, though I still do not think it is the best way to do. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the words "consider the subject," etc., and simply say:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to Congress a suitable design for a statue of David D. Porter and the cost of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should prefer that language.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will modify it in that way, I will not object. I confess I do not like the way of doing it that is proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move an amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by substituting this language:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to Congress a suitable design for a statue of David D. Porter, to be erected in the city of Washington, and the reasonable cost thereof.

Mr. CULLOM. I myself think it ought to be a separate bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted as a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time?

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the naval appropriation bill is now on its final passage?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now on its final passage.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to offer an amendment which I have not quite ready. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine. On page 63 it is provided:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894.

I simply want to ask what vessels were provided for in that act. Can the Senator from Maine inform me?

Mr. HALE. That I do not recall.

Mr. BUTLER. Reference is here made to the acts of 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897; but, unfortunately, I have not looked them up. Can the Senator from Maine tell me what vessels were provided for by those acts?

Mr. HALE. In one of the acts two ships were provided for.

Mr. BUTLER. Two battle ships?

Mr. HALE. In one act; and in another act, three.

Mr. BUTLER. In the act of 1894 two battle ships were provided for. Are those the Kearsarge and the Kentucky?

Mr. HALE. It was the act either of 1894 or 1895 which covered the Kearsarge and Kentucky. I do not remember which.

Mr. BUTLER. Then three vessels were provided for in another one of the acts. There are four acts referred to here. Can the Senator tell me what ships were provided for in the acts of 1896 and 1897? Were a great many of them provided for in those acts?

Mr. HALE. They are all battle ships. This appropriation was intended to cover and clean up all of the armor contracts in reference to all the ships provided for by the different acts.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the Senator tell me how many battle ships in all are covered by these acts?

Mr. HALE. Five.

Mr. BUTLER. Five battle ships, I understand, are provided for.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from North Carolina is not heard here. If he would speak a little louder, I should like to hear what he has to say.

Mr. BUTLER. The proviso to this section fixes the sum total to be paid for armor. Is it the intention of the section to fix the price for all the vessels named in all the acts specified in the bill?

Mr. HALE. Not, of course, where contracts have been made before; but in contracts to be made hereafter, at the rate of $400. We can not interfere with contracts that have already been made, but we make appropriations to cover the armor for ships where contracts have been made, and also some provision for those that are now building and for the future. But of course we can not interfere with cases where contracts have been made.

Mr. BUTLER. And for how many of these battle ships have contracts already been made?

Mr. HALE. For the Kearsarge and Kentucky, and all before that.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, Senators in this part of the Chamber have no opportunity of knowing what is being considered.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from North Carolina propose an amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. I will propose one in a moment. For the information of the Senator from Alabama, I will state that here is a provision in the naval appropriation bill which seems to make an appropriation for armor and armament for all of the battle ships that are now being constructed or that have been provided for by law, including this act. The provision is on page 62, beginning at line 10.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will notice that the provision is "toward the armament." We appropriate something every year for armament as it is needed. As a ship is built and armor is put upon her and she is floated and goes into service, under this appropriation the Department has the authority to clean up all the old contracts and pay all that has not been heretofore paid. We put in a provision that it is for the ships provided for in the different acts in the past, and we also put in for the present. The pending bill is like all others in that respect. We do not in any one year, I will state to the Senator, appropriate enough money for the entire armament or armor of a ship, but we appropriate as it is needed and called for by the Department. The language is "toward the armament."

Mr. BUTLER. The section seems not to be clear. All that we understand is that so much money is being appropriated and that that is not enough, but it is "toward the armament and armor" of the vessels. Probably under this indefinite language the Department is given carte blanche to make a contract for armor for all the vessels at any price that it sees fit.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator look at the provision on the next page?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Maine calls my attention——

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from North Carolina kindly yield to me a moment? We are supposed to be at the verge of active fighting, of war. It is necessary to empower the President to raise troops. A bill for that purpose passed the House yesterday evening. It is here in the Senate. The Committee on Military Affairs is ready to report upon it favorably, with some amendments, regretting that it is necessary to amend it, because we should have been glad to concur in the bill exactly as it came from the House. The prolongation of this debate prolongs the hour when the President may call upon the several States for their quota of troops. You see that it is of the very highest importance. I dread a long debate on armor. That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. TILLMAN. The armor can wait. There will be no delay if the Senator from Maine will agree to let the pending bill be laid aside temporarily and let the other bill pass, as I asked him to do a moment ago.

Mr. HALE. I do not know of any bill that is more important than the one pending.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is certainly more important to call out the volunteers than to provide for vessels that can not be built in three years.

Mr. HALE. I appreciated the situation and that the Senator from Connecticut had in charge a bill of importance which ought to be considered. So during the morning, while the naval appropriation bill has been before the Senate, I have taken no time whatever, because I was desirous that it should be gotten out of the way. The Senate very generously accepted the bill as it came from the committee, and no criticism was made upon it nor attempt to change its provisions.

I should hope that under the circumstances the Senators from South Carolina and North Carolina would not insist upon bringing up the old question about armor, because I believe the committee has a fair provision, and I do not think discussion will in any way change it. I do not think that any proposition for the Government to establish an armor plant, which has been decisively voted down in the Senate, will get any lodgment upon this bill. I should be very glad to have the bill put upon its passage. I can not, of course, control the action of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. It happens, if the Senator from Maine will allow me, that the Senator from North Carolina and myself are members of the Naval Committee. The matter of armor has been before the Senate at three sessions since I have been here, and at each session the Senate by an overwhelming vote has refused to pay the exorbitant prices demanded by the armor monopoly. The Senate fixed in the appropriation act, by a vote of 2 to 1, a limit of $300, thereby expressing their view that the prices we have paid have been exorbitant and outrageous, and demanding that the armor-plate factories, which the Government itself created and presented to the present owners, should be reasonable in dealing with the Government.

But those people have seen fit to stand back, because we were in their power apparently, and have refused to yield one iota. They did come down from the amount of $425 last year to $400 this year. The Naval Committee, of course, as it did before, by the vote of a majority, recognized the claim, I suppose, that the armor-plate factory had upon them, and voted that sum; but the Senate refused to ratify it. We gave notice to the committee the other day that we must have the question of an armor-plate factory discussed. I hope the Senator from Maine will allow the Senator from Connecticut to pass his Army bill and let this bill go over until to-morrow, until we can get the facts ready to present to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I will not——

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I think this would not be a serious interruption. I have been assured on both sides of the Chamber that the Army bill will pass easily.

Mr. HALE. I was going to say that I would not hinder that bill, because I think it is important that it should be passed; but as soon as the Army bill is passed, I shall ask the Senate at once to resume the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, because there are very important matters in this bill. Three great battle ships are hung up to-day because there is no opportunity to make any contracts for armor upon them. It is a spectacle in sight——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator tell me if he expects, under any possible condition, to get those ships at once? Suppose the bill passes to-day, when will they be completed and ready for battle?

Mr. HALE. In the present grave situation, with war imminent, the United States ought not to present to the world the spectacle of three great battle ships hung up absolutely, with the work upon them uncompleted, because Congress will not give authority to make contracts. The sooner we get out of that predicament the better.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are not those the vessels being completed now, that were launched the other week?

Mr. HALE. Those are not the vessels.

Mr. TILLMAN. There are three new vessels authorized in this bill. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that I have heard him say in the committee that he would never vote for the building of another battle ship until this question of armor had been settled to the satisfaction of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Well, it is all settled in this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, it is settled simply because we do not propose here to obstruct the Government in time of war; but we are going to build a larger Navy than we now have or have ordered in the pending bill.

Mr. HALE. Let me appeal to the Senator. I am going to give way to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to give way and allow the naval appropriation bill to go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. I can not consent to that course. I must ask the Senate to take it up directly after the Army bill is finished.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, I have seen so many Senators who have had their requests granted on the suggestion that the time when they were to speak should be deferred that I am astonished the Senator from Maine should undertake to press this matter when the Senator from North Carolina and myself ask for a little more time.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will have all the time to discuss the matter that he requires. It is different from the ordinary case where a Senator who is to deliver a speech by himself says he would like time to deliver it. We are right in the midst of active and thick business. The naval appropriation bill is one of the most important of all the bills of the session, and I do not feel authorized to delay it. I shall not undertake to push the Senator to close debate, or at first to move to lay his amendment on the table, but I think we must go on with it as soon as we get through with the bill the Senator from Connecticut has charge of.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say for the information of the Senator from Maine that I am not well, else I would have been in the Senate and I would have brought this question up before the amendments were through with; in other words, before we reached the third reading of the bill. If he insists, I will inform him that he will not get it through to-night.

Mr. HALE. We will wait and see. If the Senator is unwell, I shall not press him unduly, of course; but we will take the bill up, and I hope that the Senators, either one or the other, will prepare the amendment that they propose to offer, so that we may know what is before us; and then we will see, when the time comes, what we shall do in the course of business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The naval appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HALE. For the present I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Connecticut provided the Senator from Maine will insist upon the completion of the naval appropriation bill to-night. This is what I intended to say before the Senator from South Carolina spoke of his ill health. Of course that——

Mr. HAWLEY. The naval appropriation bill will take care of itself when we get to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to take care of it now, with the permission of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose to push the business of the country for the raising of an army.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut will not deter me by any threat of that kind from saying now what I intend to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think of it. Nobody ever thought of doing that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator did not, but he seemed to have that disposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish I could.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I think it is of equal importance with the bill which the Senator from Connecticut has in hand that the naval appropriation bill should be finished before we adjourn to-day. The Senator from Maine has mentioned the battle ships. The provisions for the new battle ships, as the Senator from Maine knows, are not the only provisions in the bill which ought to be made a law immediately.

Mr. HALE. By no means.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is full of war appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Immediate appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Appropriations which are to be made immediately available, and which are quite as important as the bill which the Senator from Connecticut has in charge, although the Senator from Connecticut at this time thinks the only important measure is the bill which he has in his hand.

Now, this is what I intended to say if the Senator from Connecticut had not tried to stop me—and I believe I have said it, although he did try—had it not been for the statement of the Senator from South Carolina that his health would not permit him to go on and say what he chooses to say on the naval appropriation bill. That is another consideration. But I do ask the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from South Carolina to endeavor to stay here to-night until the naval appropriation bill is disposed of. I have helped the two Senators to make a declaration of war and now I want to spend our time in getting ready for it just as much as the Senator from Connecticut does.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not feel very kindly toward the Senator from New Hampshire. This is not my personal business by any manner of means. I do not intend to go into a comparison as to the importance of these several bills. I have always been a staunch friend of the Navy and of its enlargement. I have never voted for anything but the highest figure in that matter. But the Army bill, I think, is about as important business as we have, because the President can not call for troops until the bill shall have been passed. If there is need of preparation for war in this country anywhere, of any description, it is the raising of an army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 294) for the relief of Robert Spaugh;

A bill (H. R. 4929) extending the time for the completion of bridge across St. Lawrence River;

A bill (H. R. 8569) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi;

A joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department;

A joint resolution (S. R. 157) to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 227) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill (S. 4432) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war was referred yesterday to the Committee on Military Affairs at the same time that it was presented in the House. The House passed the bill last night. It came over here to-day, and the Senate committee has spent some hours in studying it carefully, hoping to be able to report it without any change, desiring its speedy passage, but it is obliged to make a few amendments. The Senate committee instructs me to report favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all able-bodied male citizens of the United States, and persons of foreign birth who shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States under and in pursuance of the laws thereof, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, are hereby declared to constitute the national forces, and, with such exceptions and under such conditions as may be prescribed by law, shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the organized and active land forces of the United States shall consist of the Army of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States: Provided, That in time of war the Army shall consist of two branches, which shall be designated, respectively, as the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the Regular Army is the permanent military establishment, which is maintained both in peace and war according to law.

SEC. 4. That the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war, or while war is imminent, and shall be raised and organized, as in this act provided, only after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to raise such a force or to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States: Provided, That all enlistments for the Volunteer Army shall be for a term of three years, unless sooner terminated, and that all officers and men composing said army shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished, or on the conclusion of hostilities.

SEC. 5. That when it becomes necessary to raise a volunteer army the President shall issue his proclamation stating the number of men desired, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may in his judgment be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into service the men called for: Provided, That all men received into service in the Volunteer Army shall, as far as practicable, be taken from the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia and the Indian Territory in proportion to their population. And any company, troop, battalion, or regiment from the Indian Territory shall be formed and organized under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That the Volunteer Army and the militia of the States when called into the service of the United States shall be organized under, and shall be subject to, the laws, orders, and regulations governing the Regular Army: Provided, That each regiment of the Volunteer Army shall have one surgeon, one assistant surgeon, and one chaplain, and that all the regimental and company officers shall be appointed by the governors of the States in which their respective organizations are raised: Provided further, That when the members of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, as such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment, the regimental, company, troop, battery, and battalion officers in service with the militia organization thus enlisting may be appointed by the governors of the States and Territories, and shall when so appointed be officers of corresponding grades in the same organization when it shall have been received into the service of the United States as a part of the Volunteer Army.

SEC. 7. That all organizations of the Volunteer Army shall be so recruited from time to time as to maintain them as near to their maximum strength as the President may deem necessary, and no new organization shall be accepted into service from any State unless the organizations already in service from such State are as near to their maximum strength of officers and enlisted men as the President may deem necessary.

SEC. 8. That all returns and muster rolls of organizations of the Volunteer Army and of militia organizations while in the service of the United States shall be rendered to the Adjutant-General of the Army, and upon the disbandment of such organizations the records pertaining to them shall be transferred to and filed in the Record and Pension Office of the War Department. And regimental and all other medical officers serving with volunteer troops in the field or elsewhere shall keep a daily record of all soldiers reported sick or wounded, as shown by the morning call or reports, and shall deposit such reports, with other reports provided for in this section, with the Record and Pension Office, as provided herein for other reports, return and muster rolls.

SEC. 9. That in time of war, or when war is imminent, the troops in the service of the United States, whether belonging to the Regular or Volunteer Army or to the militia, shall be organized, as far as practicable, into divisions of three brigades, each brigade to be composed of three or more regiments; and whenever three or more divisions are assembled in the same army the President is authorized to organize them into army corps, each corps to consist of not more than three divisions.

SEC. 10. That the staff of the commander of an army corps shall consist of one assistant adjutant-general, one chief engineer, one inspector-general, one chief quartermaster, one chief commissary of subsistence, one judge advocate, and one chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of colonel; one assistant adjutant-general, who shall have the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a division shall consist of one assistant adjutant-general, one inspector-general, one chief quartermaster, one chief commissary of subsistence, and one chief surgeon, who shall have, respectively, the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff of the commander of a brigade shall consist of one assistant adjutant-general, one assistant quartermaster, and one commissary of subsistence, each with the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law. The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of the Volunteer Army, or may be assigned by him, in his discretion, from officers of the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

SEC. 11. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint in the Volunteer Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding one major-general for each organized army corps and division, and one brigadier-general for each brigade, and any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein: Provided, That each general officer of the Volunteer Army shall be entitled to the number of aids-de-camp authorized for an officer of like grade in the Regular Army.

SEC. 12. That all officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army, and of the militia of the States when in the service of the United States, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as that of officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Army.

SEC. 13. That the governor of any State or Territory may with the consent of the President appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army: Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall hold a commission in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time.

SEC. 14. That the general commanding a separate department or a detached army is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five volunteer officers of the Volunteer Army to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said army within his command: Provided, That each member of the board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into: And provided further, That if the report of such a board is adverse to the continuance of any officer, and the report be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from service in the Volunteer Army, at the discretion of the President, with one month's pay and allowances.

SEC. 15. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions hereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HAWLEY. At the end of line 18, section 4, on page 2, I move to insert:

Provided further, That the existing organized militia of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the President, be mustered into the service for a term of one year.

If any explanation of that is needed, it will be found in the consideration that the National Guard are, as a rule, very well prepared, indeed a majority of the 113,000 are men who have been from one to five or six or eight or ten years in many cases members of regiments. They are very proud of their discipline and their drill, and extremely ambitious to get into the Army. They are composed of a very excellent and oftentimes of a busy class of men, and it has been doubted whether they would feel it right to go into the service for three years. They will start with what we may call a six months' advantage over the ordinary untrained volunteers, anyhow, and the committee, on the whole, thought it would be wise to give to the President this discretion to take certain troops, if he chose, for one year.

Mr. BACON. Where does the amendment come in?

Mr. HAWLEY. At the end of section 4, line 18, on page 2.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is line 17 of the printed bill.

Mr. BACON. That is correct.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not quite sure in what line it may be in the other copy of the bill.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator to still further amend, after the words "term of one year," by inserting "or until the close of hostilities;" so as to make it conform to the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. If they are disposed to go into the service they will not object to the ordinary provision as to enlistment. This is to cover the cases of a good many very excellent men who will not be able to serve three years, and at the end of one year, if they want to stay longer, there will be abundant opportunity, and they can be reenlisted as a whole battalion.

Mr. BACON. I understand the general provision in the bill looking to the discharge of this volunteer body at the close of the war would apply to this enlistment as well as to the others.

Mr. HAWLEY. No doubt there will be an opportunity given them to serve as long as they please.

Mr. BACON. In that view, I withdraw the amendment I suggested.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut spoke a little indistinctly when he moved to take up the bill, and I did not understand from his statement whether or not it had the consideration of the Military Committee, of which he is the distinguished chairman.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill has been diligently studied by eight of the eleven members of that committee for more than two hours to-day, and every one of them is a man who has been in one service or the other during the recent war.

Mr. CHANDLER. Are the amendments the Senator proposes also approved by the committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. What does the Senator think I am doing—moving my amendments? I am reporting them from the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say the Senator was a little indistinct when he started in, and I did not hear him say either that he moved to take up the bill to-day on behalf of the committee or that the amendments which he proposed were amendments which the committee had directed him to offer. If that is what the Senator means to say, I should be very glad to know it.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

Mr. HAWLEY. Shall I devote two minutes to the instruction of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], or shall I go on and read the amendment?

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read at the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; let the amendment be read at the desk, and then we can all hear it.

Mr. STEWART. We want to hear what the amendment is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will read it once more, and I know I can make myself heard. The amendment I propose is as follows:

Provided further, That the existing organized militia of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the President, be mustered into the service for a term of one year.

Mr. FAULKNER. The amendment must be reported from the desk before we can vote upon it. We might as well let that be done now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am quite willing to have it read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 18, section 4, on page 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the existing organized militia of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the President, be mustered into the service for a term of one year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 3, line 14, section 6, the Committee on Military Affairs instruct me to move to strike out the words "one assistant surgeon" and insert "two assistant surgeons." That is what we had during the late unfortunate unpleasantness in all of the regiments that I know anything about—a surgeon and two assistant surgeons.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the same section, section 6, on page 3, line 23, I move to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, on page 3, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. At the end of section 6, on page 4, I move to insert a further proviso:

Provided further, That the President may authorize the Secretary of War to organize companies, troops, battalions, or regiments, possessing special qualifications, from the nation at large, and under such rules and regulations, including the appointment of the officers thereof, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In section 10, page 5, line 13, before the word "colonel," I move to insert the word "lieutenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 16, on the same page, and in the same section, after the words "assistant adjutant-general," I move to insert "one engineer officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the same section, on page 5, line 19, after the words "rank of," I move to strike out "lieutenant-colonel" and insert "major."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 21 of the same section, and on the same page, after the words "assistant adjutant-general," I move to insert "one engineer officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 5, section 10, line 23, after the word "captain," I move to insert "one surgeon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 4 of section 10, on page 6, at the close of the section, I move to insert these words:

Provided, That when relieved from such staff service said appointments or assignments shall terminate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. These are all the amendments the committee has to offer.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the committee to what I regard as the necessity for an amendment to a portion of this bill. I will first, however, explain the circumstances which give rise to the desire to do so, in order that the Senate may see whether or not it is proper to put it on the bill. It is in reference to a portion of the bill, on page 3, relative to the volunteering of troops, companies, battalions, or regiments as organizations. As to those troops, companies, battalions, or regiments that are now in the militia service of the States, the bill provides that they may volunteer as organizations. I will say that this matter has been brought to my attention by citizens of my State who have written me on the subject.

The militia organizations of the several States—or I will speak more particularly of my own State—are composed of men who, under the law, have enlisted for a term of years. Under the State law they are regularly enlisted soldiers. They were enlisted with a view to domestic requirements and service. Therefore a number of men are in those organizations who are so circumstanced that they can not, with justice to themselves or their families, go into other kinds of service. For instance, a person writing to me states that in a certain company there are four young men, all of them sons of a widowed mother, and of course if all four of them were to go, it would be a very great hardship.

Mr. HAWLEY rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me a moment, in order that I may make the matter clear.

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly; I am not impatient.

Mr. BACON. The difficulty that is presented is this: If these were purely volunteer organizations in a State, from which one of the members could resign at will, there would be no trouble, because he could resign and somebody else could take his place.

Again, a provision in this bill looks to the volunteering of all the members of an organization as such. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] shakes his head; but the bill certainly does not say to the contrary. I will read the language of it:

Provided further, That when the members of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, as such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment, the regimental, company, troop, battery, and battalion officers in service with the militia organization thus enlisting shall be appointed by the governors of the States and Territories.

There are two points I want to make, or at least I wish to have them covered by an appropriate amendment. I suggest, in the first place, after the word "members," in line 18, the insertion of the words "or the majority." That will enable the majority of the company to control the action of the body, so that as a body its enlistment may be received, even though all of them do not volunteer. The other point I want to cover is this: In view of the fact that these men are now enlisted men under the law of the State, and can not resign from that organization, and in view of the fact that the legislature can not be called in session to change the law, I want to suggest the propriety of the insertion of an amendment here which will permit resignations from that body, so far as the matter of volunteering can be affected by such resignations, and supplying the places of those men by others.

As I have said, this is a practical difficulty which has been called to my attention by letters from my State. These organizations desire to enlist, but at the same time there are a number of members of them already enlisted under the State law who can not possibly go, and unless some arrangement is made by which those who can not go can be allowed to get out, and others who can go and who are eager to go can get in, there is going to be trouble. That is the sole purpose I desire to accomplish.

I suggest that in order to accomplish what I have suggested and to put beyond the possibility of doubt what is meant, that those two amendments had better be incorporated. One is to insert after the word "members," in line 18, on page 3, section 6, the words "or the majority;" and the other is, to provide simply where the body thus enlisted, or the organization thus enlisted, shall not be of the required number, that at or before the time of enlistment the number may be filled up.

Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. SEWELL addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut first addressed the Chair, and he is recognized.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the permission of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], I will go on with a brief explanation, which might as well be made now, though the Senator from New Jersey is perhaps the most experienced officer of the National Guard in the Senate.

Nobody can be compelled to volunteer service. That would be a contradiction of terms. This is the way it will work, in our imagination: The State of Connecticut will probably be called on to furnish a regiment. One regiment of the National Guard there says "98 per cent of the men have already volunteered;" another says "90 per cent have volunteered." That is unusual, probably; but the governor will call them together and find out very easily who wishes to be discharged from the State service and go into the United States volunteers for three years or the war. It will then leave all this matter, at any rate, in the hands of the governors of the States—in mine, certainly. Then it will be the duty of the governor——

Mr. BACON. There is so much talking in the Chamber that I am absolutely unable to hear the Senator. The Senator is speaking plenty loud enough, but other people are speaking equally as loud as he.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think there must be something in that. I never had any difficulty in being heard by 3,000 men in a grove speaking in a political campaign.

It is the business chiefly of the governor to make up his quota. When he is called on for one of his regiments, he may think it far better to take the veterans of the National Guard as they stand; and when he has called one of them to the place of muster, it will be easy to ascertain who is unwilling for whatever reason to enlist for three years, and the company or regiment is more or less reduced by those declining to serve. The governor must see that he answers the call of the Federal Government and that he sends a regiment. I think there will be no trouble in nineteen cases out of twenty in enlisting from what you may call the graduates of the National Guard, from the men who have served nine or ten years, or from other patriotic citizens. I do not know whether that answers the Senator's question or not.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, then, understands that the provision found in the sixth section, where it speaks of the members of a company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment enlisting in a body, does not require unanimous enlistment, but only such an enlistment of the organization——

Mr. HAWLEY. You never can get exactly the 1,000 men called for.

Mr. BACON. The Senator misunderstands me. I am not speaking about the number called for. I am speaking about the number of the members of the organization as it exists.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the governor of a State is told to send a regiment of 1,000, he calls together a battalion, and that in our State would not be 1,000. Even the ten companies of a regiment would not fill up the quota of a thousand men; but it is his business to make the number a thousand if the National Government calls for them. Nobody can be forced, as I have already said, to become a volunteer.

Mr. CLAY. I would like to ask the Senator, Is it not true that the State militia can not be called out at all unless they volunteer?

Mr. HAWLEY. For certain duties they can be called out. The Constitution of the United States provides for all that. They can not, however, be called out to go to Cuba or to Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that.

Mr. HAWLEY. They can not be taken out of the country. They may go of their own free will.

Mr. CLAY. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to me there is some point in the inquiry put by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and that is this: The bill says:

Provided further, That when the members of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, etc.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; they go as a body, even if they take but 750 men. They take along the regimental skeleton.

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the Senator's question. He puts the question whether the true construction of the language does not involve that the men of a company, troop, etc., shall enlist as a body, and whether, therefore, there should not be some amendment offered which induces the very elasticity to which the Senator refers, which is evidently intended.

Mr. HAWLEY. We found it in our late war.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think there is no practical difficulty about this. In every State there is some provision for the discharge of men. These companies will be filled up. It will be done by the discharge of men and the enlistment of others before they volunteer in the service. That will all be adjusted in advance naturally and properly. I think there is no practical difficulty about it as it is. That is the way it always has been. It was so in the war of the rebellion. It will all be adjusted in the hands of the Government and the local authorities. The men who can not come will be discharged and their places will be filled. Then the body will enlist as a body.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, this bill provides for three distinct classes of the Army, and if Senators will notice they will see that the difficulty which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] suggests is provided for. There is first the Regular Army. Then there is a volunteer army. The Volunteer Army come of their own accord, and are accepted or not as the War Department sees fit. If they volunteer, they volunteer for three years or until the war is closed. Then they constitute, as it were, a part of the Regular Army for the time being, being officered, however, by the governor of the State. Then there is a third class, and that is the main class whom this bill is particularly designed to induce to go into the Army, and to go in as organizations.

So far as that class is concerned, they are allowed to go into the Army for twelve months, and they are the only class allowed to be received for that length of time. They are the militia, strictly and technically the militia of the United States. They are, though, the organized part of the militia. It is considered of the utmost importance, on account of their drill, their custom of obeying orders, their knowledge of the service they have to perform, their long training, if we are to have a war, that they be part of our forces. They are more valuable than any other men you can get to volunteer. So far as I know, they compose the very best men in the United States for the purposes intended.

Now, they are allowed to volunteer for one year. They go then as volunteers and not as militia at all. When they volunteer into the service of the United States they volunteer for three years. Then they are not of the militia at all, but they are like all other volunteers, subject to the rules and regulations which are prescribed for volunteers and not for the militia. The criticism of the Senator from Georgia applies to those who volunteer, and if a man does not volunteer he can not be compelled under that clause to go into the Army at all. The governor can not supply him as a volunteer unless he chooses to go.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is versed as to the Constitution and the constitutional history of this country. Where do we get authority for making any distinction between the Regular Army, the Volunteer Army, and the militia?

Mr. PETTUS. We get it through almost every line of the Constitution. We get it from the war-making power as a whole. If a nation has the right to make war, it has the right to prescribe the rules and conditions under which it will make it. It is as clear as the noonday sun.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I must question that somewhat. The power to make war of course carries with it the incidental power to raise armies and navies, but I insist, with the Senator's permission, of course, that the distinction between a regular army and a volunteer army does not and can not exist; that the only distinction we have and can have under our form of government is the United States Army, whether regulars or volunteers, and the militia of the States.

Mr. PETTUS. That is the only distinction made in the pending bill, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. The bill speaks of regulars and volunteers and militiamen.

Mr. PETTUS. It calls them by those names, but there is no distinction between them.

Mr. ALLEN. That is what I thought. They are all one thing.

Mr. PETTUS. But the militia is an entirely different thing. The militia constitute no part of the Army of the United States except when called into actual service. That may be done. When called they must come according to the call or according to the arrangement made by the war-making power and the governor, who has special charge of them in the first instance.

I am not discussing the volunteers. When they choose to come into the Army as volunteers, they come in for the time prescribed by the law for volunteers and they can not come under that head unless they volunteer. But in reference to this class, whom it is considered of the utmost importance to have, the organized militia, it is proposed that they may be enlisted for one year. It is to be expected that the governor of each State will organize the particular companies that want to go into the war and that he desires to go into the war, in such manner as the State authorizes him to do, and in such manner as will suit. The very idea which the Senator from Georgia suggests has been considered by the committee, and it was considered very fully. The governor of each State will so arrange it that the organized militia that goes into the Army will go freely and of its own accord. They no doubt can do it. Some of the men can not go, of course. Some of the men are not expected to go. That is a matter of arrangement between the governor and the company that goes, and no doubt it will be arranged to the satisfaction of everybody by the governor of the State himself.

We ought by all means in the world to get the organized militia, if we want any addition to our Army, and we ought to get it on such terms as we can get it, and can get it all or a sufficient number of them, for we will not need all of them in all probability.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me? The question raised by the Senator from Georgia is this: Are the members of the militia of the several States, whether they are taken individually or collectively, compelled to go with their companies?

Mr. PETTUS. That is not true in reference to volunteers at all. The man who goes, no matter what company he belongs to, is not compelled to volunteer.

Mr. KYLE. I take it, if the Senator will allow me, that section 4 and also section 6——

Mr. PETTUS. Read them.

Mr. KYLE. I read from line 12:

That all enlistments for the Volunteer Army—

Meaning if they choose to enlist——

Mr. PETTUS. Yes; the Volunteer Army. That is what it refers to.

Mr. KYLE. Volunteers from the militia, as I understand it.

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly, if they want to.

Mr. KYLE. On page 3, again, section 6, it is provided further:

That when the members of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army, etc.—

Making it a voluntary act upon their part.

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. So that no individual or company is compelled to go into the service of the United States as a volunteer company unless it chooses to do so.

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir. No individual, no organization, no company, battalion, or regiment is compelled to go as a volunteer, and we do not expect that any of them will go without their full consent. But the organized militia are not compelled to go as volunteers at all. It is expected that they will consent to go, of that the great body of them will consent to go, and that the companies will be filled up by others. Such as do not want to go will stay at home and such as want to go will fill up the regiments. That is the expectation.

Mr. KYLE. As I understand, it is a voluntary act upon the part of these individuals. There are in all our militia companies in the several States numbers of persons who, because of family relations or otherwise, can not go. They will determine that amongst themselves. If parties choose to retire, the gaps will be filled by other parties who want to go.

Mr. PETTUS. As the governor may direct or consent.

Mr. KYLE. Certainly. I was talking with the Secretary of War this morning, and I learned that there are thousands upon thousands begging for the opportunity to go who can not go, because there will be no opportunity.

Mr. BACON. I have prepared an amendment, which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] as one of the committee has seen, and he recognizes the propriety of it.

Mr. PETTUS. I have the floor, and I do not like to be ignored in that way.

Mr. BACON. I was just going to ask the Senator from Alabama if he would permit me to offer it. If the Senator had given me the opportunity, that is what I proposed to do.

Mr. PETTUS. I think that ought to have preceded.

Mr. BACON. I will take it all back, and ask the Senator to permit me to offer an amendment which has been submitted to the Senator from Vermont, and ought to be submitted to all, and I want it read so that it may be understood.

Mr. PETTUS. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. BACON. Nevertheless, I will wait until the Senator from Alabama concludes.

Mr. PETTUS. I have explained this bill, I think, as far as I am able to do, and I have tried to show that no organization of the organized militia can be compelled to go under the volunteer clause. They can not be compelled to volunteer. But when you come to the organized militia whom we extremely desire to have in the Army, we give them the privilege of going into the Army for one year and not as volunteers, but as organized militia, and that will be done under the direction of the governors of the States. He will be called on to furnish so much of the organized militia. He will furnish it in such a way as the law of his State authorizes and he can furnish it in no other way. Those who do not want to go will stay at home. Their places will be taken by others and in that way we will have——

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask the Senator whether it is not necessary under his construction, with which I entirely agree, that when the militia organization presents itself for enrollment in the Army of the United States—it is not as volunteers—that each company or battalion, as the case may be, or regiment have its full complement of men under the organization of the State; whether they could present themselves, for instance, as a regiment of a less number than organized under the State organization?

Mr. PETTUS. The organization, as I understand it, is made under the State, but the number to be in the company or the number to be in a regiment is a matter of United States regulation when calling them out. The governor will be called on to furnish so many men, composed in a certain way; such a number of companies and such a number of regiments, in all to be a certain number of men from a certain State. But the point I am aiming at is, that the organization now existing need not include all the individuals of the present organization. Some of them will fall out and others will fill their places, and the regiment will be full, or about full, when mustered in.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, the War Department is very anxious, for many reasons, to get the services of the National Guard in the approaching war. The first and greatest is that these organizations have been improved in the different States in the last ten years, so that their standard to-day is very high. They are thoroughly armed and equipped. The militia of most of the States go into camp every year. They are well officered, under a system of examination, and the State governments take great pride in them and spend a great deal of money on them. In my own State we spent this year for armories and for the care of the National Guard something like three hundred and fifty or four hundred thousand dollars, while we draw $8,000 from the Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I say we in Connecticut just about spent our proportion according to population, about $150,000, on the National Guard last year?

Mr. SEWELL. These men can be put into the field in twenty-four hours. They have everything, and, next to the Regular Army, they will be the most effective troops possible. The volunteers can come afterwards, if the President calls for volunteers; but our experience in the late war was that it took six months at least to make a regiment effective, and by the time you got them on the line of battle you had about 60 per cent of them, whereas these men are accustomed to drill and accustomed to the camp. They are excellent rifle shots. In my own State, and, in fact, in all the States, there are ranges, so that the men have kept up, as far as citizen soldiers can, with the limited time they can give to it, with the Regular Army in efficiency; and the Department, recognizing that fact, wishes to secure their services now for the field.

The objection stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] practically does not exist. The call will be to the governor of the State. He will designate two regiments or three regiments of so many men. He will put his National Guard in camp. He will say to the first regiment, "How many volunteers are there here?" The organization volunteers. A few men drop out, one saying, "I can not go; I have my family to support," or giving some reason or other, or he is not physically able, or something of that kind. His place is taken by somebody from the next company. So the companies are made up by the governor, and when he presents the line of ten companies, the regiment, with its mustering officer to muster in, under the act, he presents a full organization. These companies or regiments do not volunteer to the Government. They are under the orders of the State until they are formed in line and sworn in under the Government of the United States. Then they become volunteer troops.

But they are a body of men who are so far ahead of what you can raise in six months that I thought it essential that they should not be required to serve a three-years term. I think it is very doubtful whether you could get, from our National Guard, organizations to serve for three years. They are men of high character, very largely; men of intelligence, splendid soldiers, but men who can not leave their homes for that period. Therefore I suggested this amendment in relation to reducing it for the organized bodies of the National Guard to one year. If one year is not sufficient, we will have volunteers to take the place. I trust the bill will go through just as it is. It covers every objection which the Senator from Georgia can make to it, from the explanation I now make that the governor of the State is the one who organizes the troops and who fills up the companies where they are not full enough and makes the regiment and turns it over to the Government.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has explained the matter so fully that it hardly needs any other explanation; but I draw the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the wording of this section, and he will see from it that it is the full organization only of militia or National Guards which can be tendered as a volunteer organization for the military service of the United States:

Provided further, That when the members of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body, as such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment.

The members of the State organizations volunteer in a body, as a company, troop, or battalion. If, therefore, in the case he supposes some of the members of the troop, company, or battalion, or regiment choose to resign before——

Mr. FAULKNER. Decline to volunteer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Decline.

Mr. CAFFERY. Decline and do not volunteer, upon the governor of the State, as stated by the Senator from New Jersey, will devolve the duty of filling the places of the men who resign, and the regiment will be presented full for the service of the United States. There is no difficulty whatever that I can see from the wording of the section which it is necessary should be obviated by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will be glad to hear the Senator's amendment stated for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Before submitting the amendment I wish to say just one word. What I desire to accomplish by this bill is exactly what the Senator from New Jersey says can now be accomplished under it. The difficulty, to my mind, is that while the plan outlined by the Senator from New Jersey is entirely correct and meets every possible contingency, the bill itself does not make provision which would justify or bring about the enforcement of the plan suggested by him.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the company or the regiment is not presented to the United States until it is full.

Mr. BACON. That I understand. The Senator from New Jersey has already stated that.

Mr. SEWELL. It is by the State government and under the State laws that it is organized.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has so stated.

Mr. SEWELL. And the State can not compel them to volunteer.

Mr. BACON. I understand that is the proposition of the Senator.

Mr. SEWELL. I will add, if the Senator will allow me, that this bill has received the very careful consideration of the War Department, I think. It certainly had two hours' attention in the Committee on Military Affairs of this body, a large majority of whose members served in the late war, and some of whom, like myself, have served ever since in the National Guard. We are pretty conversant with the entire situation in relation to all these matters, and I think the committee's judgment ought to be trusted.

Mr. BACON. If I may be permitted, a large part of what Senators have said has no relation whatever to the difficulty which I suggest and which I desire to have corrected. There are two classes of enlistments provided for in the bill outside of the Regular Army. One is the enlistment of regiments which have no connection or relation to the State militia or the National Guard, as it is sometimes called. In the former case, of course, there is no trouble about it, because it is simply a case of individual enlistment and the formation of the persons into a regiment in the different States by the governors. But there is a distinct provision here that existing organizations may as a body enlist. Now, there is certainly a distinction between the two. They are not the same thing at all, and these existing bodies exist under laws of the States, which, if they are like the State of Georgia, have laws making each member of the company an already enlisted man.

The Senate will remark that if the governor of a State were simply called on for a certain number of volunteers, he would have the right to order out one of these companies or regiments, and the men, being enlisted, would have no say so as to whether they would go or not. They would be compelled to go because they have already been enlisted.

Mr. HAWLEY. They could not be compelled to go outside of the boundaries of the country.

Mr. BACON. I understand that fully. That is not the point I am speaking about. I am speaking of a State being called on for a certain number of troops, and I want this law made so clear that there will be no trouble about it. This difficulty has already been suggested among the members of these organizations. They do not understand the fact that they will be allowed to do what the Senator from New Jersey says they will. What I propose is simply to put in the bill in words what the Senator now says the bill means. I simply wish to make it clear beyond doubt. The suggestion which I make is that in the eighteenth line, after the word "members," the words "or the majority" should be inserted; so as to read:

That when the members or the majority of any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body as such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment, the vacancies in such company——

Mr. COCKRELL. "Each of the members."

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] suggests to me the words "each of the members." That is exactly the trouble I am trying to get around. It is impossible to find a company where each of the members would be in a position to volunteer.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him—I do not desire to do so without his consent—I suggest that he insert, after the word "when," in line 17, the words "a majority of."

Mr. BACON. I put the words "or the majority" after the word "members." It is the same thing.

Mr. ALLEN. My suggestion will accomplish just exactly what is desired.

Mr. BACON. After the word "regiment," in the twenty-first line, I propose to insert further the words:

The vacancies in such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment may at or before the time of said enlistment be filled, and the regimental company, troop, battery, and battalion officers in service with the militia organizations thus enlisting shall be appointed by the governor.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Georgia is there usurping the functions of the State. The governor is called upon for the organization of so many men, and the Senator seeks to provide that the Government shall accept a lot of organizations half full.

Mr. BACON. No; I do not.

Mr. SEWELL. That is the way your amendment reads.

Mr. BACON. Not at all. The Senator did not hear the last part of the amendment, which expressly provides that "the vacancies in such company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment shall at or before the time of said enlistment be filled."

Mr. SEWELL. Very good. That is the function of the governor of the State absolutely.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have got to be filled.

Mr. SEWELL. They do not come under United States control until they are presented.

Mr. BACON. I repeat that the Senator and myself do not differ as to the objects we wish to accomplish. The only difference between us is this: He says that under the bill as at present drawn that can be done. I simply wish to express it so as to put it beyond the possibility of doubt that it can be done, and not leave it as a matter of construction. That is the only difference.

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest to the Senator that he is embarrassing the situation by providing for the admission of ragged companies when there is no necessity for it, and when it is the function of the State to provide the whole company.

Mr. BACON. Certainly the Senator did not hear the reading of the amendment which I offer——

Mr. SEWELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. BACON. Or he would not make such suggestions, because there is no contemplation of the admission or reception of a company that is not full. On the contrary, the amendment which I offer expressly provides that at the time or before the company shall be filled up. The Senator did not hear those words.

Mr. President, as I said, this is not a mere fancy of mine. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate because the militia companies of my State, the National Guard, as they are called elsewhere, are, I suppose, without exception anxious to be received into the service. This has been a practical difficulty which is now being discussed among them, and they have asked me to present it. So it is not simply fancy or imagination on my part. They are met and confronted with this very difficulty, and they want it removed by the language of the law being made so plain that there can be no doubt about it.

If, after what I have suggested, the Committee on Military Affairs, who, of course, have charge of this matter and the responsibility for it and are much better capable of judging of it than I am, do not desire to have the amendment embodied in the bill, of course I will not press it; but I do think there can be no possible objection to placing in the bill language which will permit to be done that which the Senator from New Jersey now says can be done without it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The proviso which has been so much discussed is not one that is directed toward enlistment. These words are recited: "Company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia of any State shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in a body as such company, troop," etc. The officers enlisting shall be appointed by the governors of the States and Territories. That is what the paragraph is built for. After the President of the United States has called on the governor of a State for a regiment, he does not bother himself any longer. The governor has the trouble on his shoulders; and I think he will have very little in most cases. I do not see the necessity of the amendment. I think it would simply embarrass the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether the first amendment he offers might not be construed as meaning that the governor of a State could offer half of the numerical number of a regiment, there being a majority or little over of those men who have volunteered to enlist in the Army of the United States? I ask the Senator whether it would not leave it in doubt, as a matter of construction, as to what is proper? Whereas under the language of the bill, everyone understands that no man can be a volunteer in the United States Army unless he individually and personally obtains the consent of his own mind to that particular act.

As the Senator from New Jersey well remarked, when a State is called upon for one regiment and the militia is also called out, they will be brought together in camp. The governor will call for volunteers, if it is to be only one regiment, to the number required to constitute a regiment. Any man who does not volunteer for that purpose, of course, still remains a member of the militia. But he does not become a member of the volunteer force under the provisions of this bill. When a sufficient number of men have volunteered to constitute a regiment called for by the President of the United States from that State, the governor then presents that regiment with the officers appointed by himself for the purposes of being enrolled and sworn in as a part of the volunteer forces of the United States Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from West Virginia permit me to interrupt him? The Senator holds, I understand, that the bill expresses the thought that the governor of West Virginia can say "I will enlist the First West Virginia Infantry, but the personnel of that infantry may change in its officers and men."

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course. If the governor called upon the first volunteer infantry regiment in the State of West Virginia, he would call upon them to volunteer for service as volunteers under the call of the President. Now, if only one-third of that regiment chose to volunteer——

Mr. ALLEN. He would make up the balance?

Mr. FAULKNER. He would make up the balance and allow the other members of the National Guard of that State from other regiments to volunteer into the first regiment of volunteers from the State of West Virginia to constitute the number called for by the President of the United States from that State.

Mr. WARREN. With raw recruits.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, I will give an illustration of what is proposed by applying it to the State of New Jersey, which has a fair average number of National Guards, well equipped. Just as soon as the President calls for so many men, so many organizations, the whole body of the National Guard will be put in camp. If two regiments are called for of ten companies, the six or eight regiments there will be formed. The organization of one company will be selected, commencing with number one, and any officer or man who does not want to volunteer steps to the rear, and the roll is called of the rest and they are put down as volunteers. The next regiment is taken in the same way, and sufficient officers and men volunteer, and that organization is made up, and so on. Now, that is what will be done in my State. It is what the War Deparment suggest. They want these organizations, but they want the men to volunteer.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state further that this matter is fully understood by the militia of my State. The War Department has already been advising them in reference to this question, and throughout the State, under instructions from the War Department, the officers in charge of the National Guards of the State of West Virginia have already been ascertaining the exact number of men who are willing to volunteer as a part of the volunteer force of the United States Government as distinguished from the militia.

Mr. HAWLEY. So with my State.

Mr. FAULKNER. In my town, for example, two weeks ago, under a suggestion of the War Department, a meeting of the company located in that town, composed of eighty-three members, was called, and the suggestion was made to them that under the demand of the Government they might be required to go as volunteers beyond the territory of the United States, and under the view of the War Department they could not be required as militia to do so. They were asked if they were willing to sign an enlistment as volunteers into the regular service of the United States, and out of the eighty-three members of that militia company eighty-three of them signed the roll agreeing to enlist in the service of the United States. It is thoroughly and completely understood by the militia officers of the State how these regiments will be made up, under exactly the provision as suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, and in the mode prescribed by the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY and others. Question!

Mr. BACON. As the suggestion which I have made does not meet with the approval of the Senate, I will not offer it as an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no further amendment be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there is no assistant inspector-general provided for in the bill for the commander of a brigade. There is an assistant inspector-general provided for the commander of a corps and one for the commander of a division, but the bill provides, on page 5, line 20:

> The staff of the commander of a brigade shall consist of one assistant adjutant-general, one assistant quartermaster, and one commissary of subsistence, each with the rank of captain, and the aids-de-camp authorized by law.

It omits an inspector-general. I would not place my opinion against that of the more experienced military men of the Senate, but I beg leave to call attention to this omission.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that we went through the late war without an assistant inspector on the brigade staff? The one inspector on the division staff is quite sufficient to inspect the brigade.

Mr. DANIEL. I was not aware of that fact. In the troops with which I had the honor to serve in the late war the assistant inspector-general of brigade was an officer as regular and as well known as the colonel of a regiment. My own service was that of a staff officer for a considerable time, and I will give it as my own opinion, for whatever it may be considered worth, that the inspector of a brigade upon the staff of a brigadier-general is one of the most important staff officers in the Army. He is the inspector who comes in closest contact with the troops, and he is a very necessary and desirable officer to serve his general upon the field of battle. The casualties amongst staff officers are very great in time of war. Such limited experience as I have had in the observation of military affairs has fixed the opinion upon my mind that the assistant inspector-general of brigade is an exceedingly important officer.

If the gentlemen who have this measure in charge, whose opinion is worth much more than my own, were opposed to this suggestion, I should not insist upon it; but I think it is an exceedingly important item of organization and that it makes the Army harmonious through all the divisions of the Army of which there is a general in command. The inspector of a brigade is the chief camp officer of the brigade, to see that the brigade is properly camped, and to attend to all those sanitary conditions which are so essential to the health and care of troops, especially if they be in a climate in which special conditions must be carefully and specifically attended to. And when the troops are in motion, when the general is in battle, he is an exceedingly useful officer to serve upon the staff in time of need. I will simply suggest this now and not offer it as an amendment unless what may be said may lead me to do so.

Mr. PROCTOR rose.

Mr. DANIEL. I will add another thought before I yield, with the permission of the Senator from Vermont, who seeks to take the floor. It is very properly provided respecting the staff in the bill, and it seems to me a most admirable bill, that the President may, in his discretion, assign officers to staff duty. It would not therefore necessarily lead to a multiplication of offices, but affords a place where officers who may not be for the time being appropriately assigned may have a most important position given them for field service.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I hardly think it necessary to provide for this officer. A brigade would not require the constant service of an inspector, and it is within the province of the commander of a brigade to detail an officer for such inspection duty as is necessary.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I must differ with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], my colleague upon the Committee on Military Affairs, in regard to this. It was certainly overlooked by some of us. Symmetry, it seems to me, should be preserved in the bill. Inspectors are given to the corps commander and the division commander, and I do not see why we should not preserve that symmetry and give an inspector also to the brigade commander.

My attention before the committee certainly was not called to the matter. Some of us there were struggling as much as we could to prevent an excessive number of staff officers. We did not want to see the service made top-heavy. But this matter seems to have been overlooked, and I differ with my friend from Vermont in regard to it.

I think the bill ought to be amended so as to provide for an inspector of brigade. The importance of that office is well known. I believe it is a historic fact in connection with our late war that neither army started out with an inspector of this character. I do not know that they had an army inspector even for a division, or a brigade, or a regiment; but we found the necessity of it. It is one of those necessary things that grew up in the progress of the war. It was found to be very essential to have an inspector, and he was generally one of the most useful officers known to the command. I think the office is essential. The proposition made here to insert a provision for this purpose is very proper, and it would be practicable.

The bill, taking it all in all, is a very good measure. There are some things in it of which I do not approve, and there are some things I should like to put into it; but, taking it as a whole, it certainly is a bill with about as little objection to it as one that could be gotten up under the circumstances. It was the disposition of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, to pass the bill as it came over from the House, and that course was decided upon when some of these questions sprang up, and the amendments which have been presented to the Senate were favorably acted upon. Now, as the bill has to go back to the House, and will probably go into a conference, we might as well amend it where we think amendment necessary. I think the proposition of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to insert a provision for a brigade inspector is certainly proper and right, in order to make the bill symmetrical. A brigade inspector would certainly prove to be a useful officer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not feel disposed to resist or spend time upon this proposition. I can only say that I consulted in regard to it with my colleague on the committee, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. We commanded brigades for a very considerable time and had no such officer. I have the opinion that if a brigadier who is worth anything, with his three colonels, if they are worth anything, and his thirty captains, if they are worth anything, and all the surgeons, who are practically inspectors going from camp to camp, if these men, amounting to from 40 to 45, whose business it is to look after the camp, can not inspect it, it is a bad lot.

Mr. BATE. But what is everybody's business is nobody's business. That is true, generally, and it applies especially to the military establishment.

Mr. HAWLEY. My experience is that the surgeons are directed to go through all the parts of the camp, even to look at every meal into the camp kettles and to inspect everything about the camp in the way of general care, etc. That duty, you can easily imagine, always has a man to attend to it; and the colonel himself should inspect constantly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I would not underrate the importance of inspection, but that not so many inspectors are needed as the other staff officers is shown by the fact that in the Regular Army there are only about half as many inspectors as adjutants-general, and not a quarter as many as there are commissaries and quartermasters. The proportion fixed in the bill conforms to the practice of the Regular Army.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think there are two or three things about this bill that ought to be explained. Take that portion of section 10, for instance, beginning with line 24, which reads as follows:

> The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of the Volunteer Army, or may be assigned by him, in his discretion, from officers of the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

I do not know what that means. I have been studying it for some time.

Mr. HAWLEY. What line is that?

Mr. ALLEN. It starts with line 24, on page 5, and concludes with that section—section 10.

> The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President.

That is the first proposition. Are we to have officers appointed by the President for that specific purpose as staff officers, who have no connection with the regiments, who are not members of some regiment? I infer from this language——

Mr. SEWELL. Of course, we will follow precedents. When you appoint a brigadier-general you give him a staff, but not necessarily from his command. The commissary may be taken from any place; a civilian may be appointed. You appoint two aids. You appoint a surgeon. They do not necessarily come from the Army, because the Army can not spare all these officers.

Mr. ALLEN. Then my understanding of that provision was correct; that is, that we are to have officers with the ranks provided for in this section who have no connection with the Army except as they serve on the staff of some commanding general.

Mr. SEWELL. The President, of course, can appoint them from the Army. He can take a lieutenant in the Army and make him a captain or commissary if he pleases, and he goes back to his rank in the Army as soon as the war is over.

Mr. ALLEN. The second proposition is that these officers are to be appointed by the President of the United States, and that provision I understand from the bill will reach the volunteer regiments that are raised by the different States, and will authorize the President to appoint, for instance, from my State or the State of the Senator from New Jersey staff officers not recognized by the governors of those States.

Mr. SEWELL. It only refers to the rank above colonel, which is in the jurisdiction of the President of the United States. The brigade commanders are not furnished by the States.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; because these staff officers do not rise above the rank of colonel. The highest rank on the staff of a commander of a corps is a lieutenant-colonel under this bill as it has been amended. The President is authorized to appoint the staff officers of a volunteer general, and that authority is taken away from the governor.

Mr. SEWELL. It never existed in the State. It has always been exercised by the President where the rank is above that of colonel.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know. Of course the Senator from New Jersey has been an officer of distinguished service, and my service was not such as to give me special information in that line, but I do submit this thought, that the moment the President invades what I regard as the proper province of the governor of a State in the organization of the troops from that State, appointing officers to serve with them and command them, that moment we fail to get the best services of those troops.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. PETTUS. This bill does not provide for the acceptance of a brigade in a State. It expressly provides for accepting regiments, and there never has been, so far as I know, any such organization in the last forty years where the President did not appoint in some way the commanding officer of all brigades, whether they were volunteers or otherwise.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama is talking about one thing and I am talking about an entirely different thing.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I think I can enlighten him on that point.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. As to the officers appointed by the governors of the States, they reach only to the rank of commander of a regiment.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Those regiments go out. One may be from the State of Nebraska, a volunteer regiment, and it may be in a brigade with a regiment of the Regular Army. So it becomes necessary to have a brigade commander and a staff, and they must be appointed by somebody. They are appointed usually by promotion. For instance, a colonel is made a brigadier-general. Of course, it would not lie in the province of the governor of Nebraska or the governor of Wyoming to appoint a brigade commander where there is, perhaps, only one regiment, we will say, from that State. So that this has to do with the staff which is connected only with a corps, a division, or a brigade, and which must necessarily be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the same as is done in the Regular Army now.

Mr. ALLEN. That does not explain it. What I am trying to avoid, or what I should like to avoid if it be possible, is the right of a regular officer to be appointed by the President on the staff of a volunteer general, or from interfering in any manner with the volunteer soldiers.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a sentence?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. PROCTOR. This bill reserves to the governors of the States all the rights they have ever had, all that they had during our war of the rebellion, and it puts nothing into the hands of the President but what has always been there under every law, and what must necessarily be there.

Mr. ALLEN. The fact that it does not do anything more than what has been done heretofore does not prove that it is right One error does not make right another error for which it is used as a precedent.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator what he would suggest about it? I think if he would undertake to suggest a plan, he would come back to the same proposition which is made in this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I was laboring under the supposition that during our late war the staff officers were chosen by the commanding officers themselves, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. That was by courtesy only, however.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is true. I think I know of some cases where it was true.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to correct him?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. It is customary to allow the general commanding a brigade or a division or a corps to select his aids with the approval of the Secretary of War, but not the bureau officers, who are a great part of the staff, the surgeons, the commissaries, the adjutants-general, and other such officers. They are appointed direct by the War Department. They are sometimes appointed from civil life and are sometimes junior officers of the Army. The provision in this bill is that where a junior officer of the Army is appointed to a higher grade during this war, for instance, he does not lose his place, but it is kept open for him to go back to when he is mustered out with higher rank.

Mr. ALLEN. I think I can make myself understood by the Senator from New Jersey. Suppose the quota to be raised for the prospective or present war from New Jersey shall consist of four regiments, constituting a brigade, who is to appoint the commander of that brigade if the four regiments shall be brigaded together?

Mr. SEWELL and Mr. HAWLEY. The President of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. That would be wrong. If that brigade comes from the State of New Jersey, the commander ought to be appointed by the governor of New Jersey, and the staff officers ought to come from the troops constituting the brigade.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will allow me to illustrate further, suppose Colorado or Idaho, being almost adjoining States, should be called on for but one regiment each and with them might be placed one regiment from Iowa and probably one from another State, who should appoint the brigade commander under those circumstances if not the President?

Mr. ALLEN. In that case, of course, the appointing power must reside in the President or some other officer. There is no doubt about that. But should the men who are appointed to these positions have no other connection with the Army than that of occupying staff positions?

Mr. President, I am not in a position to know, and do not profess to know, how these things ought to be done; but I do know that during the late war, so far as the troops in the field were concerned, their staff officers, as a rule, came from the regiments constituting the brigade or division or corps, as the case might be. For instance, if my friend from New Jersey were the major of a regiment, he might be detailed to discharge the duties of a staff officer on the staff of the brigadier commanding his brigade; but I do not believe there were any distinct staff officers at that time to any great extent, and I do not see why there should be now.

Mr. President, I may not understand the mysteries of military science to the extent of warranting me in saying much about this subject, but here is another thing in connection with this bill arising from the same paragraph:

> The staff officers herein authorized for the corps, division, and brigade commanders may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of the Volunteer Army, or may be assigned by him, in his discretion, from officers of the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, or of the militia in the service of the United States.

I think that paragraph is conspicuous chiefly for its bad English, its wretched composition. I move to strike out the words in lines 9, 10, and 11, in section 11, on page 6, as follows:

> And any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein.

That section provides:

> SEC. 11. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint in the Volunteer Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding one major-general for each organized army corps and division, and one brigadier-general for each brigade, and any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein.

In other words, the President may take a graduate of West Point from his proper rank in the Regular Army and make him a major-general or a brigadier-general of volunteers, and when the war is at an end he will retain the rank of major or brigadier general, as the case may be, in the Regular Army.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. SEWELL. It is just the reverse of that.

Mr. WARREN. He retains the same rank he had in the Regular Army.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the use of the language is very unfortunate if the reverse is true.

> SEC. 11. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint in the Volunteer Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding one major-general for each organized army corps and division, and one brigadier-general for each brigade, and any officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army shall be entitled to retain his rank therein.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I will yield.

Mr. WARREN. An officer so selected and appointed from the Regular Army to the Volunteer Army—for instance, a captain of the Regular Army is appointed a colonel, we will say, in the volunteers. When he has served his term out in the volunteer service he is merely a captain again in the Regular Army. He simply does not lose the rank he held in the Regular Army before his assignment to the volunteers.

Mr. ALLEN. Now I have the Senator from Wyoming exactly where I want him and exactly where I want gentlemen who advocate this measure; and that is, they disclaim that such an officer will retain the rank of general to which he has been appointed, and now claim what I suspected was true when I first read the paragraph—although I did not suppose it possible—that a captain in the Regular Army could be promoted to the office of brigadier or a major general in the Volunteer Army, thus displacing men in the volunteer service in the line of promotion, holding on to his captaincy in the Regular Army with one hand and with the other to the brigadiership in the volunteer service. I understand, then, that about all you want with the volunteer soldiers is to furnish you men to carry muskets, and you will furnish the officers from some other source. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two examples to the contrary right here in this Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know to what the Senator is referring, and I am not concerned about it at all.

Mr. President, is that fair to the Volunteer Army? I have no disposition at this late hour, and at a time when probably the bill ought to be passed, to enter into a discussion of the relative merits of the Volunteer and Regular Army; but if the volunteer soldier is the man on whom this Government depends in the hour of danger to fight its battles, is it good policy or justice to close the avenue of promotion to that soldier and say that the man who has been educated from childhood by the Government, who has been fed and clothed, and who never earned a dollar in his life, shall occupy an important position in the Regular Army, at the same time holding another position in the volunteer service, occupying in fact two positions, and by that means prevent the promotion of a worthy volunteer officer? I do not believe that is just, and I do not think any man lives who can show it is just.

I have nothing to say against the Regular Army officer. I want frankly to say, however, that I do not take as kindly to the Regular Army as a great many men do; but it is necessary in a way, and its rights should be preserved. But, Mr. President, we can not get the best results from a Volunteer Army in time of war—and that is when we want it, and the only time we want it—unless we say to every worthy man who serves in the Army, from the ranks up to the commander in chief: "Nothing shall be laid in the way of your promotion if you show yourself competent to serve the Government in its hour of danger."

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the matter with Logan?

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking about Logan or anybody else. Logan was not a West Pointer or a Regular Army officer, and he never held two positions in the Army at the same time. I do not know that there is anything wrong with Logan, or SEWELL, or HAWLEY, or any other volunteer officer, or any of the gentlemen on this side who served during that time.

I want to impress on the Senate the fact that this provision, in so far as it permits, for instance, a captain of the Regular Army to hold his captaincy and draw his pay as a captain of the Regular Army and at the same time hold the rank of general in the volunteer service, thus displacing some worthy volunteer and receiving the pay and emoluments of a volunteer, is unjust.

Mr. WARREN. He does not do that, and can not do it under the law.

Mr. ALLEN. The bill does exactly that, and nothing short of that.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nebraska must know that the general law positively prohibits a man from drawing two salaries under the United States Government, no matter in what service he may be.

Mr. ALLEN. Then you have an officer in the Regular Army, a captain, for instance, who has never been displaced, who is also at the same time a volunteer general, though he is drawing but one salary, I suppose.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to know, Mr. President, that there has been that much caution taken in hedging about this provision; but suppose the Senator from Wyoming, who was himself a distinguished military officer, is correct in this respect——

Mr. WARREN. I beg to correct the Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. When this officer holds two offices, a captaincy in the Regular Army and a brigadier-generalship in the volunteer service, does he not deprive some person of occupying one of those offices who has a right to it? Does the Senator from Wyoming want to enact such a measure? It is strange, utterly strange, inconceivably strange, that no measure can pass this Congress without favoritism in it, and rank favoritism.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska what West Point is for if it is not for the purpose of graduating officers for the various regiments of the United States in case of war? I recognize that volunteer officers are as good as West Point graduates.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to know that.

Mr. KYLE. At the same time we are engaged in our ordinary vocations of active business life; we can not keep up with the military operations of the day, and when war breaks out we are all raw recruits, and there must be somebody who is conversant with military tactics and military science. When the war is ended, probably some of the volunteer officers will be retained in the Army, but the great majority will go back to private life. The Regular Army officer devotes his whole life to the service of his country. He wants to be assured that when the war is over he will not have to go into private life, but that he may return to his former position of captain, or whatever it may be, in the Regular Army.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not aware that the batteries had been opened on West Point, and I am not conscious of the fact that West Point needs any defense or explanation at my hands. I have said—and if it is any gratification to the Senator from South Dakota, I will repeat it—that I recognize the Regular Army as a necessity and West Point as a necessity, but as between the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army I want it distinctly understood that I stand for the Volunteer Army, which is the only army in the history of this Government which has ever done efficient service when needed. We do not need an army in time of peace except for police purposes. There is the fault in this bill, Mr. President, for it is a fault, in my judgment:

SEC. 13. That the governor of any State or Territory may, with the consent of the President, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army.

Here is the same thing in the bill again, crowding out some worthy and competent volunteer officer, who has spent years in qualifying himself to discharge the duties of his position, by this method of appointing a Regular Army officer to field service in the Volunteer Army.

Mr. DANIEL. I call the attention of my friend to the fact that there is only one such officer to be detailed to a regiment.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. Why do we need that one officer to a regiment and why must he be a field officer? It would not do for the man to be a lieutenant or a captain or something of that kind, but he must be a field officer, and, presumably, the highest officer the regiment has—a colonel. The section proceeds:

And officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army.

Here is this favoritism again of which I have spoken appearing in this section. He is a captain and a general, or a general and a captain, as his individual interests may require.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me? I desire simply to ask him a question.

Mr. ALLEN. What is it?

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he can not see a distinction between a man retaining his rank and holding the office?

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; in my intellectual obtuseness I can not see the distinction between a man holding a rank and not holding the office at the same time. If he holds the rank, he is the officer de facto and de jure.

Look at section 14 of the bill, and there is the death trap of the volunteer service:

That the general commanding a separate department or a detached army is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five volunteer officers of the Volunteer Army to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said army within his command: Provided, That each member of the board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into: And provided further, That if the report of such a board is adverse to the continuance of any officer, and the report be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from service in the Volunteer Army, at the discretion of the President, with one month's pay and allowances.

The general commanding a separate department or a detached army, under this provision can constitute his military board of five volunteer officers, or officers holding volunteer positions, who retain their rank in the Regular Army, and every member of that board, while he is nominally a volunteer officer, is, in fact, a Regular Army officer; and it puts it in the power of the board to discharge every volunteer officer from the service, if they see fit to do so, without any remedy or appeal, and fill their places with Regular Army officers.

Mr. President, it is dangerous to the volunteer service. It is unjust to the volunteer service. I do not know that I shall offer any amendments, because I think they would be voted down and it would be work of supererogation for me to do so. But I wish to call the attention of the country and the Volunteer Army to the defects in the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Nebraska want to discourage enlistments?

Mr. ALLEN. No, I do not; and the Senator from Wisconsin knows I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I know it.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to see every man this Government may need for the approaching war enlist, and I have no doubt every man will enlist whose services are needed. I have advocated this for two years. I am glad war is coming, if it can not be avoided with honor. I am so glad to see it come that I say to the Senator from Wisconsin, who has just suggested to me that possibly I want to discourage enlistments, that if he will go with me, I will resign my seat in the United States Senate and carry my musket in the Army as I did thirty years ago.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean to intimate that the Senator intended to discourage enlistments. I was making a suggestion sotto voce that the tenor of his remarks might have that effect. That is all I meant.

Mr. ALLEN. These things go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. They are read in cold type. While they are mirthful to us and signify nothing, many times they signify a great deal when read by persons not present at the time they are spoken.

Mr. SPOONER. Anybody who reads the remark will read my explanation of it. I would not impeach the Senator's loyalty for a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply thought I would make the proposition; and I say to the Senator from Wisconsin it is still open.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to make the proposition that he would go in as a private if I would go in as a private.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator want to intimate that he will not go into the service unless I go into the service with him?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator must go with me. I like his company.

I have not said what I have in a spirit of carping criticism. I am not a pessimist. I am an optimist. I see some good even in the pending bill, a modicum of good, but I believed it my duty, as it certainly is my pleasure, to point out what I regard as the rank favoritism of the measure. I think the young men who are to enlist and fill our Volunteer Army, officers and men, and upon whom will fall the brunt of the fighting and the greatest amount of mortality, ought to know these provisions; and having pointed them out, if the Committee on Military Affairs still persist in the error of their ways, thinking they know all about this matter and that nobody else knows anything about it, I am willing they should take the responsibility.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask one question about this matter, which I do not entirely understand. Are these volunteers, after they are in the service of the United States, militia or are they United States troops?

Several SENATORS. Volunteers.

Mr. HAWLEY. United States volunteers.

Mr. SEWELL. The term is "volunteers."

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New Jersey, all of whom are high authority on this subject, say that they are United States troops.

Mr. SEWELL. Volunteers.

Mr. HOAR. Volunteers. If that be the case, how can you get the authority under the Constitution for the governor of a State to appoint United States officers? I understand that the volunteers in the late war, where the officers were appointed by the governors, still retained to that extent and for that purpose the character of militia, and that the appointment was vindicated in that way. I suppose it is contemplated that these volunteers are to be or may be sent out of the country. If they are to be sent out of the country, they can not be militia any longer, because the Constitution only gives the Congress power "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." Then it goes on to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of officers, and so on.

My difficulty is this: I do not mean to express an opinion, but only to ask a question. Does the precedent of the late war, in which there was no purpose to send and no actual sending in any way of our forces outside of the country, so that they retained the character and quality of militia, apply to the present case? If it does not, and we are making a law for a new and different case, can we lawfully give the Government of the United States the power of appointing these officers, if they are militia? And if they are not militia, can we lawfully give that power to the governor? I merely want to ask the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the Senator postpone his question for about two years. We carried on a foreign war very nicely and never had any difficulty about it. Men volunteered to go out of the country.

Mr. HOAR. The Government appointed the officers, did it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know. I was not in the war of 1812, but so far as I know the governor has always appointed the colonel, the lieutenant-colonel, the major, captains, lieutenants, and so on.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the Mexican war the volunteers were arranged almost exactly similar to this, and the governors of the States appointed the colonel and subordinate officers. That force was raised to go out of our own country.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words about this bill which I hope may have the unanimous support of the Senate. I differ with the honorable Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] as to the views he has expressed in respect to the regulars and volunteers. I believe that the provision of the pending bill by which the governor of a State is authorized to appoint regular officers of the United States as field officers among the volunteers will be highly beneficial to the volunteer service and one which will be welcomed by them as a benefit accorded to them by the Government of the United States.

It may be in many cases that the quota of field officers of the regiments is full and that they are provided with satisfactory and skilled officers, but we all know that the volunteer systems of many of the States have not been perfected and that many of their officers have been chosen because of popularity among their associates rather than for any eminent military ability. It would be a boon to them, or it might be in some cases, to have associated with them in the conduct of their military affairs some skilled and highly educated officer of the United States.

As to the general officers, Mr. President, there is a fitness of things in according that prerogative to the President to appoint them all which, it seems to me, scarcely admits of debate. If there is any lesson which our own military experiences in this country have taught that is more conspicuous than another, it is that military education at West Point added no little to the ability in the field of officers who were so fortunate as to possess it. I look upon the military history of this country as a thorough vindication of the utility of that institution. Undoubtedly there are in a military people like our own thousands of men who, after gaining experience in the field, prove themselves worthy of any command; but those were exceptions to the rule and did not constitute the rule. Our military experiences have also shown that where men were otherwise equal, their military training at West Point gave them eminent superiority over others who were otherwise their peers.

I hope, sir, that this measure may be passed unanimously, and I think the Senate and the House are both to be congratulated that a bill has been so quickly devised and has been commended to us with so many provisions which seem to adjust nicely the autonomy of the nation and the States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the consideration of the naval appropriation bill may be resumed, in order that one or two amendments may be offered. I shall not ask the Senate to go on with its consideration further to-night.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after the word "same," in line 5, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "aforesaid," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And no contract for armor plate for said three battle ships shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel, as aforesaid; and no contract for armor plate other than for the said three battle ships shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel, as aforesaid.

And in case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limit of $300 as to price above fixed, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to proceed at once to purchase or establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor, and proceed to manufacture the same. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory; and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery, as a whole plant or separately, for the land, or buildings, or the whole or any part of said machinery; and he shall make a contract or contracts for such land, buildings, and machinery with the lowest responsible bidders.

The Secretary shall also appoint an armor-factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred. For the establishment of said armor factory the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, and in addition the sum of $1,000,000 is appropriated to be used in making at said factory the armor for the vessels herein and heretofore authorized.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the amendment may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer two amendments which were reported by the Naval Affairs Committee and left out of the bill by the Appropriations Committee. I send up a telephone message which I received from the Secretary of the Navy to-day in answer to a telegram.

Mr. HALE. There is no necessity for reading the message. Let the amendments be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 18, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Electric light and power plant, $20,000; increasing facilities for storage and handling coal, $20,000.

In line 1, page 28, strike out "thirty" and insert "seventy;" and add "to be immediately available" at the end of the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the telephone message be printed in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

Senator B. R. TILLMAN:

The Department is advised by Bureau of Yards and Docks that it is important that Port Royal Station be equipped with electric plant for lighting buildings, wharfs, and dry dock, to enable work to be done at night as well as day, at the estimated cost of $20,000. Also desirable that modern mechanical appliance be installed for expeditious handling of coal, at estimated cost of $20,000.

J. D. LONG.

Mr. HALE. There is now nothing left of the naval appropriation bill except the proposition submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] in relation to armor and an armor plant. I shall call it up as early as possible, in order that it may be disposed of and the bill passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 22, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 21, 1898.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Charles Emory Smith, of Pennsylvania, to be Postmaster-General, vice James A. Gary, resigned.

SECOND SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

William E. Bainbridge, of Iowa, to be second secretary of the legation of the United States at Peking, China, vice Edward K. Lowry, resigned.

CONSULS.

Frederick H. Allison, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, vice William Myers Little, resigned.

Hans J. Smith, of South Dakota, to be consul of the United States at Port Louis, Mauritius, vice John P. Campbell, resigned.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Perry M. Lytle, of Pennsylvania, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, to succeed P. Gray Meek, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

PENSION AGENT.

Augustus J. Hoitt, of Lynn, Mass., to be pension agent at Boston, Mass., vice Henry B. Lovering, term expired.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

William H. Ludden, of Spokane, Wash., to be register of the land office at Spokane, Wash., vice Matthew E. Logan, term expired.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Samuel A. Wells, of Spokane, Wash., to be receiver of public moneys at Spokane, Wash., vice Lafayette M. Flournoy, term expired.

INDIAN AGENT.

William J. Pollock, of the District of Columbia, to be agent for the Indians of the Osage Agency in Oklahoma Territory, vice Lieut. Col. Henry B. Freeman, United States Army, relieved from duty as acting Indian agent.

POSTMASTERS.

Hiram A. Huse, to be postmaster at Bath, in the county of Sagadahoc and State of Maine, in the place of E. F. Kelley, whose commission expired March 29, 1898.

John Lovejoy, to be postmaster at Rockland, in the county of Knox and State of Maine, in the place of Parker T. Fuller, whose commission expired March 29, 1898.

Winchester G. Lowell, to be postmaster at Auburn, in the county of Androscoggin and State of Maine, in the place of John H. Twombly, whose commission expired April 7, 1898.

George W. Stearns, to be postmaster at Rumford Falls, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine, in the place of J. H. McKeeman, whose commission expired April 7, 1898.

Moses P. Stiles, to be postmaster at Norway, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine, in the place of A. J. Rowe, whose commission expired April 7, 1898.

Catherine A. Endsley, to be postmaster at Somerset, in the county of Somerset and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Solomon Uhl, whose commission expires April 27, 1898.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 21, 1898.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Charles Emory Smith, of Pennsylvania, to be Postmaster-General.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Richard H. Robinson, a citizen of Ohio, to be an assistant naval constructor.

Frederic C. Brown, a citizen of Massachusetts, to be a chaplain.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Leander M. Shubert, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Jacob Shaen, of California, to be assistant appraiser of merchandise in the district of San Francisco, in the State of California.

MARSHALS.

John H. Shine, of California, to be marshal of the United States for the northern district of California.

Henry Z. Osborne, of California, to be marshal of the United States for the southern district of California.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Luke C. Strider, of the District of Columbia, to be justice of the peace in the District of Columbia (assigned to the city of Washington).

POSTMASTERS.

James H. Rabbitts, to be postmaster at Springfield, in the county of Clark and State of Ohio.

Bert V. Gibson, to be postmaster at Mineral Wells, in the county of Palo Pinto and State of Texas.

Catherine A. Endsley, to be postmaster at Somerset, in the county of Somerset and State of Pennsylvania.

William H. Haughawout, to be postmaster at Webb City, in the county of Jasper and State of Missouri.

Romie P. Dryer, to be postmaster at Lagrange, in the county of Lagrange and State of Indiana.

Sumner W. Thompson, to be postmaster at Davis, in the county of Tucker and State of West Virginia.

Frederick O. Prouty, to be postmaster at Cuba, in the county of Allegany and State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, last night when the House adjourned I did not ask unanimous consent that the bill to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, might be reprinted, so the amendments could be properly followed. I now ask unanimous consent that it be reprinted.

There was no objection.

ORGANIZATION OF ARTILLERY.

Mr. HULL. I have here, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of an expert on the proposed organization of artillery, and by request of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, so that it may be familiar to members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD remarks on the proposed organization of artillery, House bill 9878, by C. D. Willcox, first lieutenant, Seventh Artillery.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is by request of the minority of the committee as well as the majority?

Mr. HULL. Both sides; the minority is more anxious than the majority to have it printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not object to printing it in the RECORD, but it would be much more serviceable if it was printed as a document. The RECORD is a very good place to bury it.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and as a document, too.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Unless you want to bury it, it had better be printed as a document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The paper referred to is as follows:

REMARKS ON THE PROPOSED ORGANIZATION OF ARTILLERY, H. R. 8873.

[By C. De W. Willcox, first lieutenant, Seventh Artillery.]

The principle underlying the recommended organization of the heavy batteries is that each should contain within itself all the elements necessary to its efficient service. As these batteries are intended chiefly for service on the coast, it may and does happen that more frequently than not a battery will be required to serve isolated from other batteries. Manifestly it must be, to a certain extent, an independent organization, in the sense that it can not rely upon other units to supply its deficiencies.

To take up the proposed organization in detail, it is remarked, first, that it proceeds on the assumption that at least two reliefs must be supplied. The service of a seacoast battery in time of war will prove extremely arduous. Officers and men must be ready at any time, by day and by night, at a moment's notice, to man their guns and to open fire. This requires never-ceasing watchfulness and instant readiness, since a fortified position, as a rule, will have to develop its full offensive power in the very shortest possible time after the hostile squadron or ship is sighted. In other words, the guns of one of our seacoast batteries in time of war will substantially have to be manned for twenty-four hours out of the twenty-four.

It requires no argument to show that if the authorized strength were just enough to man the guns and to perform the auxiliary services and no more, the service of the battery would break down, since it is of course impossible to keep one and the same set of men on duty continuously. They must be relieved just as a guard is relieved. Now, this relief is provided by the proposed organization. If approved by Congress, the respective seacoast batteries will have two complete shifts of noncommissioned officers and men. Let us note here that an ideal solution would consist in furnishing three reliefs, as is the case in foreign services, but it is thought by economy of effort two reliefs can be made to answer.

The proposed organization is imperatively necessary, however, for other and different reasons. Few people realize the vast amount of preparation necessary to fire a shot so that it will strike the target. The gun must be served and aimed, of course, but not only that, it must while in action be continuously supplied with ammunition. This ammunition must first be prepared. But this is not all. A shot that misses is worse than a shot wasted, and so the most accurate information possible must be obtained in order to aim the piece as it should be aimed if we would hit the enemy's ship. This information is furnished, as everyone knows, by the range finders, and the range-finder service calls not only for the observers themselves but for telegraph and telephone operators to transmit the observations to the guns. Furthermore, these observations will have to be immediately applied to the determination of the probable direction of motion of the vessel—the usual case in action between ships and forts. The list of auxiliary services is not yet exhausted, however.

In a first-class seacoast work a very considerable use of power, whether steam, electric, or water, will have to be made. We must then have the necessary personnel for handling the power. To illustrate, if we use steam, we must have engineers and firemen; if electricity in addition to the steam generators, we must have electricians for the dynamos, search and other electric lights, and for the electric appliances in general. And, in general, a modern high-power gun being in reality a machine, it is clear that each battery must have machinists able to keep the carriages and other mechanical appliances in condition and to repair them when necessary. Each of the auxiliary duties mentioned must have its special detail of men, and each, moreover, must have two reliefs, just as the men serving the actual piece. One engineer, for example, could not be expected to be in attendance continually upon his engine.

So far only the fighting elements of the battery have been brought forward, but there are others quite as important and quite as necessary to the efficiency of the battery. The men must be fed and clothed; their material wants in general provided for; the position must be guarded and policed; the barracks and public property generally cared for. And all these duties must be performed without trenching on the fighting strength of the battery, for otherwise it will not reach its highest efficiency, and it is the highest efficiency that the country expects and is entitled to expect.

In view of these considerations, it is believed that the proposed organization is both rational and economical. Let us see how this organization applies to a battery of two 10-inch or two 12-inch guns, constituting, as these guns do, the main direct-fire armament of our seacoast forts.

Nature of duty.

General service of the battery ..... 1 first sergeant. 2 musicians. 1 wagoner. 2 artificers.

	One relief.			Two reliefs.
	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Privates.	Sergeants.	Corporals.	Privates.
1. Service of the piece	2	2	28	4	4	56
2. Supply of ammunition	2	.....	20	4	.....	40
3. Range-finder service	2	2	2	4	4	4
4. Plotting board	1	.....	2	2	.....	4
5. Steam engine	1	1	3	2	2	6
6. Electric power	1	.....	5	2	.....	8
7. Machinists	1	.....	4	2	.....	8
8. Search light	1	.....	2	2	.....	4
9. Duties not susceptible of division into two reliefs, i. e., quartermaster, commissary, clerks, cooks, guard, police, litter bearers, and as a small reserve for sick, and wounded and other casualties	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	20
Total	11	5	66	22	10	102

The guiding principle in the distribution of noncommissioned officers has been to place a sergeant in charge of each kind of duty as enumerated.

The foregoing organization is based on a unit of two 10 or 12 inch guns. It applies equally well to the 8-inch, but as this piece is so much lighter, one battery with the organization here given will be adequate to the service of four 8-inch rifles, in full accordance with the intention of the War Department to assign to each battery either two 10 or 12 inch guns or four 8-inch guns. Experience may suggest changes in the distribution of duties from that given here, but it is safe to say that it will not suggest a reduction of numbers if we expect our seacoast batteries to develop their full power. And if they are not to develop their full power, it is pertinent to ask why they were ever built.

FIELD BATTERIES.

In regard to field batteries, let us clear the ground once for all by stating that the number of guns to a battery, fixed the world over by a vast experience, including our own American experience, is six. To reduce this number would simply overturn not only the drill, which rests on a basis of six guns, but also the combat tactics, the organization, the relation of the field artillery to the other arms, and would give us, instead of a system thoroughly tested by the widest experience, an anomalous and vicious system, the only certain feature of which is that its results would be wholly uncertain.

The personnel, then, must be that required by a battery of six guns, as set forth in the proposed organization, if efficiency and economy are the results sought, and, as in the case of the coast batteries, it is inconceivable that anything short of the highest efficiency can be considered. Bearing this in mind, let us premise that a field battery must fight its guns, care for its men and horses on the march, in action, and in camp, and at all times keep its material in condition and in readiness to go into line of battle.

It is at once evident that these duties call for a full observance of the principle of division of labor, and hence require a considerable personnel for their proper execution. Let us see how the proposed organization satisfies the requirements of the case.

We have first of all a first sergeant for the general service of the unit, a quartermaster-sergeant who is responsible for the performance of the very important duties of the supply and distribution of rations and of forage, and a veterinary sergeant for the no less important duty of caring for the health of the horses. Six sergeants are required to act as chiefs of piece. Each of these is in immediate charge of a gun, and is continuously responsible for its efficient service and condition. Of the fifteen corporals, six are needed to aim the pieces. No argument is needed to bring out the importance of this duty. The remaining nine are stationed one at each caisson or ammunition wagon, and have charge of the preparation and service of the ammunition. Two farriers are not excessive for the 147 horses of the battery. "No foot, no horse." The two artificers are practically machinists. Their business is to keep in repair, as far as possible, the breech mechanism and other parts of the material, should these be injured in action or on the march. The one saddler will obviously have his hands full in caring for the harness and the horse equipment generally. The two musicians, in addition to their duties in giving signals, also act as orderlies for the captain in communicating with his subalterns. The wagoner looks after the battery wagon and forge, together with the store wagon.

Of the 141 privates, 1 carries the guidon or battery color, while 48 serve as drivers. There is a small reserve of drivers, 8 in all, found to be necessary by experience in the field. The remaining privates are cannoneers. Their duties consist in the service of the pieces themselves and in the preparation of ammunition under the direction of the caisson corporals. Others are employed in constructing epaulments or parapets when recourse is had to them to protect the guns, in clearing the way for the pieces over difficult or in wooded country, and others again in performing the service of ammunition supply when the store of the battery has to be replenished. Furthermore, as in the case of a seacoast battery, guards are necessary and so are cooks. Horses, too, must be fed, groomed, and watered. Lastly, the battery must contain within itself a sort of reserve to meet the various exigencies that present themselves in every situation.

No attempt is made here to specify the number of privates to be assigned to the various duties enumerated, because naturally these will vary according to circumstances. An assignment suited to one case would in all likelihood be wholly unsuited to another and a different case. Two things only are certain: The occurrence of unforeseen difficulties, and the necessity of overcoming them by the resources of the battery itself. And this necessity can be satisfied, as shown by experience, only by giving a field battery a sufficient personnel, the personnel set forth in the bill under consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 157. Joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States; and

S. 161. An act providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. Res. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 161. An act providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon—to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPRINT OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 6,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

REPRINT OF REPORT ON AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I also present another privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, and the testimony and reports of consuls, 7,500 for the use of the Senate and 12,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit an amendment to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "seventy-five hundred" and inserting "sixty-five hundred" in lieu thereof.

Also, by striking out "twelve thousand five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirteen thousand five hundred."

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, these two documents bear somewhat on the same subject, and I would like to ask the gentleman whether they might not be printed together, or are they too voluminous to be printed in one volume?

Mr. PERKINS. They are rather too voluminous to be printed in one volume; they have been printed separately heretofore.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of printing the documents. I regret, however, that there is nothing coming from the majority of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs that is deemed worthy of printing.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE YAZOO RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8875) entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

GEORGE PEYTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2768) entitled "An act for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion, and to grant him an honorable discharge," with Senate amendments.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN STATE DEPARTMENT AND CONSUL-GENERAL AT HAVANA.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it being resolution No. 290.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not deemed incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives copies of all the correspondence which has taken place between the State Department and the United States consul-general at Havana since the 1st day of May, 1896, and up to the present time, together with copies of any reports made to, and documents transmitted by, the said consul-general during the aforesaid period.

The resolution was agreed to.

SAFETY OF AMERICANS AT MATANZAS, CUBA.

Mr. ADAMS. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to present a privileged report. They report back with amendment the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if such information be not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken to protect the lives and property of the 300 Americans left by Consul Brice at Matanzas, in the Island of Cuba.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 strike out "Secretary of State" and insert "President;" strike out "directed" and insert "requested;" so as to read: "That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to inform the House," etc.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the resolution is adopted, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] whether he is informed and can tell the House why it was that these American citizens were left at Matanzas. Were they left there because they themselves declined to leave or because of some inefficiency of the consul?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to state to the gentleman from Texas, as a matter of fact, that three ships were sent to Havana to bring away Americans, and the consul was directed to notify all Americans who wished to leave that they could do so. Strange as it may appear, but few took advantage of the opportunity thus offered. This resolution was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY], and the committee thought it best that it should pass in order that further information, if any be deemed necessary, may be given to the House. But, as a matter of fact, while there were American citizens left there, it was of their own free will; they had opportunity to get away if they so desired. It is a curious fact that in the various ports of Cuba American citizens have not availed themselves of the opportunity offered them for leaving. They did not seem to realize the full danger that was upon them, although officially notified by the consuls of our country.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter, I wish to say that press dispatches published on Monday stated that—

All Saturday and yesterday Matanzas, Cuba, was in a state of siege. Rioting commenced Saturday against the new war taxes, and last night the situation had grown so serious that it was announced that the municipality had suspended the tax.

These dispatches further say:

During the riots all the consuls and consular agents raised the flags of their nations at their offices for the protection of foreigners. The only flag that was not seen was the American flag.

The Buffalo News, commenting on this intelligence, observes:

For nine days there has been no American flag in Matanzas to protect Americans there. A large number got away from the city on the American steamer Seguranca yesterday, but there must be many there yet. There were 350 when Consul Brice came away a week ago Saturday.

A massacre of Americans in Matanzas may be the next news from there—and we have a fleet of gunboats a hundred miles away from the spot.

It is a reproach to the American people that Americans should be left unprotected under such conditions. It is easy to rescue them. Protection to them would not be war. It would not be half so warlike as the resolutions passed by either House of Congress or the message of the President.

While Congress debates the threadbare theme of war for Cuba our flag should not be missed from any point in Cuba where Americans need its protection.

I submit these newspaper extracts as a part of my remarks. I hope the resolution will pass, so that the House and the country may be informed as to what steps, if any, have been taken for the protection of American lives and American property in Cuba.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] whether that newspaper clipping is from the New York Sun?

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, I think the gentleman from Illinois should spare jesting on a matter so serious as the subject under consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply wish to state, for the information of the House, that in all the Cuban ports the American citizens have been placed under the charge of the English consuls; and from the prompt way in which the consul in Havana acted the other day when an American citizen who had been arrested was promptly discharged, I do not think there need be any great fear that any harm will come to our citizens there.

Mr. MAHANY. If that is the gentleman's judgment, it will do no harm to pass the resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. I have reported the resolution favorably, and I hope it will pass. I am only making this statement so that it may be understood that the Administration has done everything necessary for the protection of American citizens; and however desirable this information may be, it does not imply that adequate steps have not been taken for their safety.

Mr. MAHANY. In that opinion I fully coincide, but I prefer to know.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am in favor of the adoption of the resolution because I think this information will fully show the activity and wisdom of the Administration at all points.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The resolution was again read.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

NELLIE GRANT SARTORIS.

Mr. PEARSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 226) to readmit Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

Whereas Nellie Grant Sartoris, widow, daughter of the late Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, being a natural-born citizen of the United States, married in 1874 Algernon Charles Frederick Sartoris, a subject of the Queen of Great Britain, and emigrated to Great Britain, becoming thereby, under the laws of Great Britain, a naturalized British subject, to be recognized as such by the United States, according to the provisions of the convention relative to naturalization between the United States and Great Britain of the 13th of May, 1870; and

Whereas the said Nellie Grant Sartoris has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein, and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States under and by virtue of the provisions of article 3 of the convention aforesaid: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Nellie Grant Sartoris, daughter of Gen Ulysses S. Grant, be, and she is hereby, on her own application, unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of article 3 of the convention relative to naturalization between the United States and Great Britain concluded May 13, 1870.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if there is any precedent for any proceeding of this kind?

Mr. PEARSON. I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that there is a precedent. The language of the resolution, however, is copied from the treaty which was concluded in 1870, between the United States and Great Britain, which gives express authority for the proposed course of procedure, and I take it, in view of the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was entirely unanimous, and in view of the distinguished services of this lady's father—General Grant—and in view, particularly, of the fact that she has a son now in the United States who has tendered his services to the Government to serve under Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, I feel sure that there will be no opposition to the resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say simply that this is a little extraordinary, but in view of the services of the lady's father, which have been rendered for the country, and the services her son desires to render at this time, I am willing that it shall pass by consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONTESTED ELECTION—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration the contested-election case of Patterson vs. Carmack.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That E. W. Carmack was not elected a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and is not entitled to the seat now held by him.

2. Resolved, That Josiah Patterson was elected a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and should be awarded the seat now held by contestee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the question of consideration. The House has had no notice that this case would be called up to-day; and, having entered upon an era of peace and good feeling, I hope the House will not agree to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the contested-election case called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 98, noes 103.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 129, answered "present" 8, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—118.

Adams,	Dalzell,	Hull,	Royse,
Aldrich,	Danford,	Hurley,	Russell,
Alexander,	Davenport,	Johnson, Ind.	Shelden,
Babcock,	Davison, Ky.	Johnson, N. Dak.	Showalter,
Baker, Md.	Dingley,	Kerr,	Smith, Ill.
Barber,	Dolliver,	Lacey,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Barrows,	Evans,	Landis,	Southard,
Bartholdt,	Faris,	Linney,	Sprague,
Belford,	Fischer,	Loud,	Steele,
Belknap,	Fletcher,	Low,	Stevens, Minn.
Bishop,	Foss,	Lybrand,	Stewart, Wis.
Booze,	Fowler, N. J.	McCall,	Stone, C. W.
Boutell, Ill.	Gardner,	McDonald,	Stone, W. A.
Boutelle, Me.	Gibson,	McEwan,	Strode, Nebr.
Bromwell,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mahon,	Sturtevant,
Brown,	Gillett, Mass.	Marsh,	Sulloway,
Brumm,	Grosvenor,	Mercer,	Tawney,
Burleigh,	Grout,	Mesick,	Tayler, Ohio
Burton,	Grow,	Mills,	Thorp,
Cannon,	Hager,	Minor,	Tongue,
Chickering,	Hamilton,	Moody,	Wadsworth,
Clark, Iowa	Harmer,	Northway,	Walker, Mass.
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hawley,	Overstreet,	Walker, Va.
Codding,	Hemenway,	Parker, N. J.	Warner,
Connolly,	Henderson,	Payne,	Weaver,
Cooper, Wis.	Henry, Ind.	Pearson,	Weymouth,
Cousins,	Hepburn,	Perkins,	White, Ill.
Crumpacker,	Hicks,	Pitney,	Yost.
Curtis, Iowa	Hill,	Pugh,
Curtis, Kans.	Howell,	Ray,

NAYS—129.

Adamson,	Broussard,	De Graffenreid,	Henry, Tex.
Allen,	Brucker,	De Vries,	Hilborn,
Bailey,	Brundidge,	Dinsmore,	Howard, Ala.
Baird,	Burke,	Dockery,	Howard, Ga.
Baker, Ill.	Butler,	Driggs,	Hunter,
Ball,	Campbell,	Elliott,	Jenkins,
Barlow,	Castle,	Fitzpatrick,	Jones, Va.
Bartlett,	Clardy,	Fleming,	Jones, Wash.
Bell,	Clark, Mo.	Fowler, N. C.	Joy,
Benner, Pa.	Cochran, Mo.	Greene,	Kelley,
Benton,	Cooney,	Griffin,	King,
Berry,	Cooper, Tex.	Griffith,	Kirkpatrick,
Bland,	Cowherd,	Griggs,	Kitchin,
Bodine,	Cox,	Gunn,	Kleberg,
Botkin,	Cummings,	Handy,	Knowles,
Bradley,	Davey,	Hartman,	Lamb,
Brantley,	Davis,	Hay,	Lanham,
Brenner, Ohio	De Armond,	Henry, Miss.	Latimer,
Lester,	Marshall,	Rixey,	Sulzer,
Lewis, Ga.	Maxwell,	Robb,	Sutherland,
Lewis, Wash.	Meekison,	Robertson, La.	Swanson,
Little,	Meyer, La.	Robinson, Ind.	Talbert,
Livingston,	Miers, Ind.	Sayers,	Underwood,
Lloyd,	Moon,	Settle,	Vandiver,
Love,	Newlands,	Shafroth,	Vehslage,
McClellan,	Norton, Ohio	Sims,	Vincent,
McCormick,	Norton, S. C.	Slayden,	Wheeler, Ky.
McCulloch,	Otey,	Smith, Ky.	Williams, Miss.
McDowell,	Peters,	Sparkman,	Young, Va.
McMillin,	Pierce, Tenn.	Stark,	Zenor.
McRae,	Rhea,	Stokes,
Maguire,	Richardson,	Strowd, N. C.
Mahany,	Ridgely,	Sullivan,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—8.

Acheson,	Hopkins,	Mann,	Stephens, Tex.
Broderick,	Loudenslager,	Reeves,	Stewart, N. J.

NOT VOTING—100.

Arnold,	Dayton,	Lorimer,	Sherman,
Bankhead,	Dorr,	Lovering,	Shuford,
Barham,	Dovener,	McAleer,	Simpson,
Barney,	Eddy,	McCleary,	Skinner,
Barrett,	Ellis,	McIntire,	Smith, S. W.
Beach,	Ermentrout,	Maddox,	Snover,
Belden,	Fenton,	Martin,	Southwick,
Bennett,	Fitzgerald,	Miller,	Spalding,
Bingham,	Foote,	Mitchell,	Sperry,
Brewer,	Fox,	Morris,	Stallings,
Brewster,	Gaines,	Mudd,	Strait,
Brosius,	Graff,	Odell,	Tate,
Brownlow,	Heatwole,	Ogden,	Taylor, Ala.
Bull,	Henry, Conn.	Olmsted,	Terry,
Capron,	Hinrichsen,	Osborne,	Todd,
Carmack,	Hitt,	Otjen,	Updegraff,
Catchings,	Hooker,	Packer, Pa.	Van Voorhis,
Clarke, N. H.	Howe,	Pearce, Mo.	Wanger,
Clayton,	Jett,	Powers,	Ward,
Colson,	Ketcham,	Prince,	Wheeler, Ala.
Connell,	Knox,	Quigg,	White, N. C.
Corliss,	Kulp,	Robbins,	Wilber,
Cranford,	Lawrence,	Sauerhering,	Williams, Pa.
Crump,	Lentz,	Shannon,	Wilson,
Davidson, Wis.	Littauer,	Shattuc,	Young, Pa.

So the House refused to consider the election case.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM, is absent, sick, and wishes to be excused. He is paired. If present, he would have voted "aye" on this question.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. ROBBINS with Mr. FOX.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. HINRICHSEN.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. LENTZ.

Mr. MANN with Mr. JETT.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. TATE.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. WHEELER of Alabama.

Mr. HITT with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. MADDOX.

The following pair was announced for this day:

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. CRANFORD.

The following pairs were announced on this vote:

Mr. WARD with Mr. TERRY.

Mr. WARNER with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. REEVES with Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. STALLINGS.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, on all questions save election cases, and therefore I permit my vote to stand in the negative on this proposition.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask that the vote be recapitulated.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. CLAYTON, and desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. REEVES. I am recorded as having voted on this proposition. I wish to withdraw the vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. PACKER, and desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point that the motion for the recapitulation of the vote is dilatory. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The vote is rather a close one, and the Chair will direct a recapitulation.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I desire to change my vote, Mr. Speaker, to the negative.

The SPEAKER. The change will be made.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to lay that on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] moves to reconsider the vote by which consideration was refused, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] moves to lay that motion on the table. The question will be taken on the latter motion.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 126, answered "present" 4, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—123.

Adamson,	Cummings,	Lamb,	Ridgely,
Allen,	Davis,	Lanham,	Rixey,
Bailey,	De Armond,	Lester,	Robb,
Baird,	De Graffenreid,	Lewis, Ga.	Robertson, La.
Baker, Ill.	De Vries,	Lewis, Wash.	Robinson, Ind.
Ball,	Dinsmore,	Little,	Sayers,
Barlow,	Dockery,	Livingston,	Settle,
Bartlett,	Driggs,	Lloyd,	Shafroth,
Bell,	Elliott,	Love,	Sims,
Benner, Pa.	Fitzpatrick,	McClellan,	Slayden,
Benton,	Fleming,	McCormick,	Smith, Ky.
Berry,	Fowler, N. C.	McCulloch,	Sparkman,
Bland,	Greene,	McDowell,	Stark,
Bodine,	Griffith,	McMillin,	Stephens, Tex.
Botkin,	Griggs,	McRae,	Stokes,
Brantley,	Gunn,	Maguire,	Strowd, N. C.
Brenner, Ohio	Handy,	Marshall,	Sullivan,
Brewer,	Hartman,	Martin,	Sulzer,
Broussard,	Hay,	Maxwell,	Sutherland,
Brucker,	Henry, Miss.	Meekison,	Swanson,
Brundidge,	Henry, Tex.	Meyer, La.	Talbert,
Burke,	Hilborn,	Miers, Ind.	Terry,
Campbell,	Howard, Ga.	Moon,	Underwood,
Castle,	Hunter,	Newlands,	Vandiver,
Clardy,	Jones, Va.	Norton, Ohio	Vehslage,
Clark, Mo.	Jones, Wash.	Norton, S. C.	Vincent,
Cochran, Mo.	Kelley,	Otey,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cooney,	King,	Peters,	Williams, Miss.
Cooper, Tex.	Kitchin,	Pierce, Tenn.	Young, Va.
Cowherd,	Kleberg,	Rhea,	Zenor.
Cox,	Knowles,	Richardson,

NAYS—126.

Adams,	Davison, Ky.	Joy,	Russell,
Aldrich,	Dingley,	Kerr,	Sauerhering,
Alexander,	Dolliver,	Kirkpatrick,	Shelden,
Babcock,	Dorr,	Lacey,	Showalter,
Baker, Md.	Dovener,	Landis,	Smith, Ill.
Barrows,	Ellis,	Lawrence,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bartholdt,	Faris,	Linney,	Snover,
Belknap,	Fischer,	Lorimer,	Southard,
Bishop,	Fletcher,	Loud,	Sperry,
Booze,	Foss,	Lybrand,	Steele,
Boutell, Ill.	Fowler, N. J.	McCall,	Stevens, Minn.
Brown,	Gardner,	McDonald,	Stewart, Wis.
Brumm,	Gibson,	McEwan,	Stone, C. W.
Burleigh,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mahon,	Stone, W. A.
Burton,	Gillett, Mass.	Marsh,	Strode, Nebr.
Butler,	Griffin,	Mercer,	Sturtevant,
Cannon,	Grosvenor,	Mesick,	Sulloway,
Chickering,	Grout,	Miller,	Tawney,
Clark, Iowa	Grow,	Mills,	Tayler, Ohio
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hager,	Minor,	Thorp,
Codding,	Hamilton,	Mitchell,	Tongue,
Colson,	Harmer,	Moody,	Walker, Mass.
Connolly,	Hawley,	Northway,	Walker, Va.
Cooper, Wis.	Heatwole,	Overstreet,	Wanger,
Cousins,	Hemenway,	Parker, N. J.	Warner,
Crump,	Henderson,	Payne,	Weaver,
Crumpacker,	Henry, Ind.	Pearson,	Weymouth,
Curtis, Iowa	Hepburn,	Perkins,	White, Ill.
Curtis, Kans.	Hill,	Pitney,	Yost,
Dalzell,	Howell,	Pugh,	Young, Pa.
Danford,	Hull,	Ray,
Davenport,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Royse,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—4.

Broderick,	Hopkins,	Loudenslager,	Stewart, N. J.

NOT VOTING—102.

Acheson,	Cranford,	Kulp,	Shannon,
Arnold,	Davey,	Latimer,	Shattuc,
Bankhead,	Davidson, Wis.	Lents,	Sherman,
Barber,	Dayton,	Littauer,	Shuford,
Barham,	Eddy,	Lovering,	Simpson,
Barney,	Ermentrout,	Low,	Skinner,
Barrett,	Evans,	McAleer,	Smith, S. W.
Beach,	Fenton,	McCleary,	Southwick,
Belden,	Fitzgerald,	McIntire,	Spalding,
Belford,	Foote,	Maddox,	Sprague,
Bennett,	Fox,	Mahany,	Stallings,
Bingham,	Gaines,	Mann,	Strait,
Boutelle, Me.	Graff,	Morris,	Tate,
Bradley,	Henry, Conn.	Mudd,	Taylor, Ala.
Brewster,	Hicks,	Odell,	Todd,
Bromwell,	Hinrichsen,	Ogden,	Updegraff,
Brosius,	Hitt,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Brownlow,	Hooker,	Osborne,	Wadsworth,
Bull,	Howard, Ala.	Otjen,	Ward,
Capron,	Howe,	Packer, Pa.	Wheeler, Ala.
Carmack,	Hurley,	Pearce, Mo.	White, N. C.
Catchings,	Jenkins,	Powers,	Wilber,
Clarke, N. H.	Jett,	Prince,	Williams, Pa.
Clayton,	Johnson, Ind.	Quigg,	Wilson.
Connell,	Ketcham,	Reeves,
Corliss,	Knox,	Robbins,

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this day:

Mr. WARD with Mr. OGDEN.

On this vote:

Mr. HICKS with Mr. FITZGERALD.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON demanded a division.

Pending the division,

Mr. RICHARDSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 123, answered "present" 4, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—127.

Adams,	Davenport,	Hurley,	Sauerhering,
Aldrich,	Davison, Ky.	Johnson, Ind.	Shelden,
Alexander,	Dingley,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Showalter,
Babcock,	Dolliver,	Joy,	Smith, Ill.
Baker, Md.	Dorr,	Kerr,	Smith, S. W.
Bartholdt,	Dovener,	Kirkpatrick,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belford,	Eddy,	Lacey,	Snover,
Belknap,	Evans,	Landis,	Southard,
Bishop,	Fenton,	Lawrence,	Spalding,
Booze,	Fischer,	Linney,	Steele,
Boutell, Ill.	Fletcher,	Loud,	Stevens, Minn.
Boutelle, Me.	Foss,	Lybrand,	Stewart, Wis.
Broderick,	Fowler, N. J.	McDonald,	Stone, C. W.
Bromwell,	Gardner,	McEwan,	Stone, W. A.
Brown,	Gibson,	Mahon,	Strode, Nebr.
Brumm,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mercer,	Sturtevant,
Bull,	Gillett, Mass.	Mesick,	Sulloway,
Burleigh,	Griffin,	Miller,	Tawney,
Burton,	Grosvenor,	Mills,	Tayler, Ohio
Cannon,	Grout,	Minor,	Thorp,
Chickering,	Grow,	Mitchell,	Tongue,
Clark, Iowa	Hager,	Moody,	Walker, Mass.
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hamilton,	Northway,	Walker, Va.
Codding,	Harmer,	Parker, N. J.	Wanger,
Connolly,	Heatwole,	Payne,	Warner,
Cousins,	Hemenway,	Pearson,	Weaver,
Crump,	Henderson,	Perkins,	Weymouth,
Crumpacker,	Henry, Ind.	Pitney,	White, Ill.
Curtis, Iowa	Hepburn,	Pugh,	White, N. C.
Curtis, Kans.	Hill,	Ray,	Yost,
Dalzell,	Howell,	Royse,	Young, Pa.
Danford,	Hull,	Russell,

NAYS—123.

Adamson,	Davis,	Latimer,	Ridgely,
Allen,	De Armond,	Lester,	Rixey,
Bailey,	De Graffenreid,	Lewis, Ga.	Robb,
Baird,	De Vries,	Lewis, Wash.	Robertson, La.
Baker, Ill.	Dinsmore,	Little,	Robinson, Ind.
Ball,	Dockery,	Livingston,	Sayers,
Bartlett,	Driggs,	Lloyd,	Settle,
Bell,	Elliott,	Love,	Shafroth,
Benner, Pa.	Fitzpatrick,	McClellan,	Sims,
Benton,	Fleming,	McCormick,	Slayden,
Bland,	Fowler, N. C.	McCulloch,	Smith, Ky.
Bodine,	Greene,	McDowell,	Sparkman,
Botkin,	Griffith,	McMillin,	Stark,
Brantley,	Griggs,	McRae,	Stephens, Tex.
Brenner, Ohio	Gunn,	Maguire,	Stokes,
Brewer,	Handy,	Marshall,	Strowd, N. C.
Broussard,	Hartman,	Martin,	Sullivan,
Brucker,	Hay,	Maxwell,	Sulzer,
Brundidge,	Henry, Miss.	Meekison,	Sutherland,
Burke,	Henry, Tex.	Meyer, La.	Swanson,
Campbell,	Howard, Ga.	Miers, Ind.	Talbert,
Castle,	Hunter,	Moon,	Terry,
Clardy,	Jones, Va.	Newlands,	Underwood,
Clark, Mo.	Jones, Wash.	Norton, Ohio	Vandiver,
Cochran, Mo.	Kelley,	Norton, S. C.	Vehslage,
Cooper, Tex.	King,	Ogden,	Vincent,
Cowherd,	Kitchin,	Otey,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cox,	Kleberg,	Peters,	Williams, Miss.
Cranford,	Knowles,	Pierce, Tenn.	Young, Va.
Cummings,	Lamb,	Rhea,	Zenor.
Davey,	Lanham,	Richardson,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—4.

Berry,	Hopkins,	Loudenslager,	Stewart, N. J.

NOT VOTING—101.

Acheson,	Cooper, Wis.	Lents,	Robbins,
Arnold,	Corliss,	Littauer,	Shannon,
Bankhead,	Davidson, Wis.	Lorimer,	Shattuc,
Barber,	Dayton,	Lovering,	Sherman,
Barham,	Ellis,	Low,	Shuford,
Barlow,	Ermentrout,	McAleer,	Simpson,
Barney,	Faris,	McCall,	Skinner,
Barrett,	Fitzgerald,	McCleary,	Southwick,
Barrows,	Foote,	McIntire,	Sperry,
Beach,	Fox,	Maddox,	Sprague,
Belden,	Gaines,	Mahany,	Stallings,
Bennett,	Graff,	Mann,	Strait,
Bingham,	Hawley,	Marsh,	Tate,
Bradley,	Henry, Conn.	Morris,	Taylor, Ala.
Brewster,	Hicks,	Mudd,	Todd,
Brosius,	Hilborn,	Odell,	Updegraff,
Brownlow,	Hinrichsen,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Butler,	Hitt,	Osborne,	Wadsworth,
Capron,	Hooker,	Otjen,	Ward,
Carmack,	Howard, Ala.	Overstreet,	Wheeler, Ala.
Catchings,	Howe,	Packer, Pa.	Wilber,
Clarke, N. H.	Jenkins,	Pearce, Mo.	Williams, Pa.
Clayton,	Jett,	Powers,	Wilson.
Colson,	Ketcham,	Prince,
Connell,	Knox,	Quigg,
Cooney,	Kulp,	Reeves,

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER (during the roll call). The Chair thinks it should be stated to the House that the practice of reporting names to the Clerk for counting out of order is not proper. That is sometimes done, as the Chair knows; but it is an objectionable practice, and every vote should be given as it is in the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM, asked me to say that he is absent on account of sickness.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the remainder of the day:

Mr. BARHAM with Mr. BARLOW.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. FITZGERALD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, the vote being very close, there should be one. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I had been paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER, came to me the other day and asked me to allow him to transfer the pair to him. I am still paired by the Sergeant-at-Arms with Mr. HITT. I do not know how the mistake occurred.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman voted?

Mr. BERRY. I have voted, sir; but if I ought to respect the pair with Mr. HITT, I will withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not decide that. The pair is an arrangement between members.

Mr. BERRY. I vote "present" for safety.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will now consider the resolutions.

The question was taken; and the House determined to consider the resolutions.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the substitute resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania consent to offering the substitute?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I believe that is the usual way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the substitute, and the Chair will cause it to be read. The Clerk will read the substitute resolutions proposed by the minority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That E. W. Carmack was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States, and is entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Josiah Patterson was not elected a Representative to the said Congress, and is not entitled to the seat.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a moment to make an announcement.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that the arrangement made with the gentleman from Pennsylvania was that the time should be four hours on a side.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The time agreed on is four hours on a side; and I ask unanimous consent that the time allowed be four hours on a side, the time of the minority to be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE] and the time on behalf of the majority to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to four hours on a side. Four hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] and four by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE].

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the suggestion that the particular time for voting should be agreed upon, and not that the time allowed be four hours; then gentlemen will know when the question is to be voted on. Let the agreement be some definite time to-morrow for voting on the question.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would make that suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The vote to be taken at 5 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow being Friday, as considerable time has been used this evening, that will not give the eight hours for debate. To-morrow is private bill day, and the House takes a recess at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I suggest that the vote be taken the first thing after the reading of the Journal on Saturday morning, the debate to be closed to-morrow.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think it ought to be taken at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The House will have to take a recess at 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that could be arranged by having the evening session vacated.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest that is taking private-bill day away from us, and I would like, if we can, to make some arrangement by which that will remain. I know this is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I ask unanimous consent to fix the time for voting at half past 4 to-morrow evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken at half past 4 o'clock to-morrow evening, and at the conclusion of the vote the House be in recess for the evening session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the gentleman will not object to our having our four hours?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We will take our time equally.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You would certainly give us the four hours?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. To get eight hours we will have to run until ten minutes past 5, as we only have three hours remaining this evening.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope it will be kept 5 o'clock; then we can extend the session so as to take the vote. They are determined to take the Private Calendar away from us to-morrow. I supposed that that would be the result by taking to-morrow for the consideration of this case.

Mr. HOPKINS. If you put it off until after half past 4 and there is more than one roll call, it will carry us past 5 o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there be no objection, we can continue debate until 6 o'clock to-night.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make this request: That to-morrow be devoted to the Private Calendar and Saturday to debate, and that we take a vote on Saturday evening.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Make it another day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are going to get as many days as we can.

Mr. GIBSON. Give us next Tuesday to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit to the House the proposition that the House be in session until 6 o'clock to-night, that a vote be taken at half past 4 to-morrow, the session to be extended until the conclusion of the vote, and then the House be in recess. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not want to make the request I am about to make before, for fear I might complicate the matter, but I now ask unanimous consent that Tuesday be substituted for Friday as private-bill day.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a probability that some more important measures may be before the House on that day, and I therefore do not want to consent to that.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday be substituted for Friday; that is not likely to interfere with any report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DINGLEY. Saturday has been set apart for eulogies.

The SPEAKER. Saturday has been set apart for eulogies, and besides that there is an election case, which would override any consent of the House.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there has been some difficulty in regard to taking up for consideration this case, I now announce that I will call up on Saturday the case of Richard A. Wise against William A. Young, a contested-election case from the Second Congressional district of Virginia.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the contestant, Mr. Patterson, be allowed an opportunity on the floor of the House to address the House, his time to be taken out of the time of the majority.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There will be no objection to that, Mr. Speaker, on this side, I am authorized to say, provided the contestant makes his speech in time so that this side may have one hour in which to reply to it. We do not want him to close the case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think we are entitled to close the case and to manage the division of time on our side as we see fit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have no objection to your closing the case, but not with the contestant.

Mr. HOPKINS. That has always been customary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We want to be fair; but if the gentleman wants to speak, let him use his hour so that we can have an hour to reply.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the other side has any right to control the time on our side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We do not want to do that.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, you do; you want to say how we shall control it. I did not know that the contestant expected to speak until this minute, but we certainly propose to control the time on our side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK]?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We can not consent if the contestant is to conclude the case. If we can have an hour after he speaks we make no objection. We can not give our consent that the contestant shall conclude the case.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the contestee speaking in his own behalf.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That can not be done. He is a member of the House and has a right to speak.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I object to his speaking unless he speaks first on that side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This side will control that.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, upon further reflection I am willing to so arrange the time of the majority that the contestant shall make his speech during the progress of debate, and the close of the argument will be reserved for some other member of the House.

Mr. STEELE. That is because of the notice given to the other side.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; I am obliged to do it to give the contestant an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CANNON. Has it been usual for the contestant by unanimous consent to close the case?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. I ask if it has been the usual custom for the contestant by unanimous consent to close the case?

Mr. MESICK. It was done the other day in the case of Thorp against Epes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was not done in the case of Yost against Tucker.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes; it was.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has not been the general custom.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that I hope he will never refer to the case of Yost against Tucker as an authority on any question in this House.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that in the Fifty-fourth Congress, with one exception, the contestant had the close. I know nothing of the practice before that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no universal practice about it.

Mr. HOPKINS. It has always been customary for the contestant to close the case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the parliamentary situation is that I have proposed to the House that the contestant be allowed an opportunity to be heard, and that the disposition of the time of the majority is under the control of myself, representing the majority of the committee, and that the proposition before the House is whether we have the unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the contestant be allowed to address the House. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that all the request?

The SPEAKER. That is all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I object. I understood that he was to give us an hour after the contestant speaks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; I did not agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion was made, but the Chair did not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accede to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We object. We are willing that the contestant should speak any time during the debate if we can have an hour afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] is recognized to control one half the time and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE] to control the other.

Mr. MOODY. I desire to correct the statement which I made to the gentleman from Tennessee a few moments ago. I misunderstood the question. I should have said that the contestant's side had the close.

Mr. GROW. Is it agreed that the vote be taken at 4.30 o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. That is the agreement.

[Mr. KIRKPATRICK addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been occupied on behalf of the contestant?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has spoken one hour and thirty-five minutes.

PREVENTION OF COAL SHIPMENTS.

During the delivery of Mr. KIRKPATRICK's remarks the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman, before he proceeds, yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields to me for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution of great importance to be passed now, prohibiting the exportation of coal and war materials.

Vessels are now ready to proceed to sea with coal cargoes. The Senate has passed and sent to the House the resolution to which I call attention, and it is important that it should be passed by the House and reach the Senate before the close of this day's session to prevent the shipment of large quantities of these articles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCALL in the chair). The Clerk will report the resolution, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 157) to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport in the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No objection whatever.

Mr. HULL. There is no objection, I think, at all to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, one moment. I represent a district largely engaged in the exportation of coal. I want time to think of that matter. I do not wish to consent to a proposition of this kind without some little examination.

Mr. HULL. If we do not pass the resolution at once, thousands of tons of coal will leave to-night.

Mr. GREENE. It should be passed without delay.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I will cheerfully vote for any resolution that is considered necessary to meet the present conditions or those that may arise; but I want an opportunity of looking into the matter.

Mr. GAINES. The object of the resolution is to stop sending coal supplies to nations that are friendly with Spain.

Mr. HULL. It puts it in the power of the executive department of the Government to stop the shipment of coal or war munitions to any place where they may likely reach the Spanish Government. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I can not give my consent to the consideration of the resolution without more examination.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let it be noted that the objection does not come from this side.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I object until I can look into it.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Then let the gentleman go on record as objecting.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I am ready to go on record for anything I do or say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I must object for the present.

Subsequently Mr. HULL said: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] yields again for me to ask the unanimous consent of the House for the immediate passage of the resolution of the Senate in regard to shipments of coal. I ask that it be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has just been read.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I ask that it be read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will again report.

The joint resolution was again reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be agreed to.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I will withdraw my objection, because I do not care to put myself in opposition to the sentiment of the House. I objected before because there were large coal interests in my district. I did not know how they would be affected, nor do I now. I desired to have an opportunity to look at the resolution and consider it, but I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. GAINES. It puts the matter entirely in the hands of the President, does it not?

Mr. HULL. Entirely.

Mr. MCEWAN. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think it would be better to prevent the exportation of these materials from any point in the United States? This simply prevents exportation from any seaport. There is remaining the Mexican frontier and the entire Canadian border.

Mr. HULL. I think that amending the resolution will simply result in delay, and we want to get it into effect to-day to stop the shipment of cargoes to-night.

Mr. DOCKERY. It ought to be passed at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know that I caught correctly the reading of the joint resolution. I suppose, however, that it will not apply to provisions?

Mr. HULL. It applies to anything that is used in war.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for the reason that a number of shipments have been recently made to the Spanish army by certain merchants in New York, and I was in hopes that it would be far-reaching enough to stop the trade in army supplies.

Mr. HULL. That will be in the discretion of the President.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—JOSIAH PATTERSON VS. EDWARD W. CARMACK.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, by agreement with the manager on the other side, I am to occupy fifteen minutes at this time rather than wait until a later period in the discussion.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it is said that politics makes strange bedfellows, and I am told that from time to time, during the progress of this debate, it will probably be shown that the contestant in this case has been upon more than one side of some of the political questions of the day, and in order that the fact may be shown that the Tennessee politician can get on more than one side of a political question I propose to lay before the House some evidences of the expertness of the contestee in that same direction.

There is something down in the atmosphere of Shelby County that seems to have a very singular effect upon the minds of the politicians, and they have a way of most fluently and effectively making known their opinions. I propose to read some very sparkling and brilliant and able editorials from the pen of the contestee, taken from the Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

I am surprised that the gentleman succeeded in getting any votes at all, and I am afraid now that he was elected by Republican votes, for I propose to show you that the Republican party is the only organized political party that, so far as my information goes, from the extracts I shall read, has escaped the power of his very trenchant pen. It will be borne in mind that on the 23d of March, 1892, there was a good deal of danger threatening the Democratic party from the predatory incursion into it of the free-silver element, and the distinguished gentleman [Mr. Carmack], standing upon the watchtower of his party, warned his party upon that subject in the following eloquent language:

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S DANGER.

As the Commercial predicted when Crisp was elected Speaker, * * * the tariff question has taken a back seat in Congress. It has from an early day been overshadowed by the silver question. * * * It has been virtually abandoned by the friends of tariff reform, who have turned their fickle affections to a new favorite—the silver question. * * * They defeated Mr. MILLS and put a creature of their own in the Speaker's chair.

That "creature" was Mr. Crisp.

They sent the tariff question to the foot. They put the silver question at the head. They twirled their fingers at Grover Cleveland and shouted, "Where is your tariff issue now? You are against free coinage of silver, are you? Well, we will make free coinage a Democratic issue. That will dispose of you." They laughed in high glee. * * * He (Hill) had already put the free-silver lunatics upon the box and given them the reins. * * * In order to unhorse Cleveland, they delivered the Democratic party over, bound hand and foot, to a lot of political maniacs.

[Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

That is good language and I indorse every word of it. Now, I can hardly imagine that a man can be elected in Shelby County and in the adjoining section without the votes of the colored people. On the 23d of April, 1893, the same vitriolic editor paid his compliments to the colored brother, and if any of the colored brethren are present as members of the House to-day, I want them to hear a delineation of their race, coming fresh from the pen of the distinguished contestee.

Mr. CARMACK. The gentleman might send for him, for he does not appear to be in.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman will hardly send for him if he is the sort of fellow whom the gentleman has here described.

Mr. CARMACK. I want him to hear it.

Mr. GROSVENOR (reading):

PROGRESS OF THE NEGRO.

Northern newspapers and Northern people who have little information on the subject and have given little thought to it sometimes take a very hopeful view of the progress of the negro. The New York Herald, for instance, makes the wildly extravagant expression: "No race in any age ever carried an equal distance in the same time;" and it adds: "This country furnishes him with a good chance in the race of success."

The assertions are not true with respect to the negro race. As a matter of fact the negro as a race has made no visible progress since the war. The percentage of illiteracy among them is probably not so great, and of course they own more property than they did when they could own no property at all but we may as well look the ugly truth in the face. It is a patent, notorious fact that the younger generation of negroes is far, very far, from being an improvement on the older. They have a smattering of book learning, but they are none the better off on account of it. They are shiftless, lazy, idle, insolent, vicious, turbulent, and born thieves. Those who have made any real study of the progress of the negro since the war know he is progressing toward barbarism, and he will go as far in that direction as the law allows. He is to-day essentially a savage who is forced by law to respect the forms of civilization. He has utilized his freedom only to give rein to his barbaric instincts.

I suppose that is the reason the gentleman must have got their votes.

In so far as he is civilized he is still a slave to the superior race. In so far as he is free he is still a savage. As a whole, the people of this country must sooner or later awake to the fact that the negro is impervious to the influences of civilization and so incapable as to make him have no place in shaping the destinies of a great people.

APRIL 23, 1893.

Mr. MAGUIRE. May I ask the gentleman from what he is quoting?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am quoting from the newspaper of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I thought perhaps he was quoting from the contestant's speech on "The negro in the race of life."

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the olden time, if you had lived in the backwoods, as I have, you would understand the force of the term "backfire." When the fire got out we went out in front of the fire and set the leaves on fire, so as to cut off the spread of the fire. I am doing that with the record of your contestee. [Laughter and applause.] Now, one of the favorite sons of modern Democracy, and the man who had more to do with the shaping of party destinies in 1896 than any other one man, living or dead, was John P. Altgeld, of the State of Illinois. He was the ideal Democrat of that State, and is to-day. He dominated and had put in the resolutions of that convention a doctrine which, from one end of this country to the other, we charged was revolutionary. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee, on the 7th day of July, 1894, after the achievement of Altgeld as governor at least of the State, made the following truthful comments upon that gentleman:

We have been wondering that the loud yip-yap of the blatant anarchist John P. Altgeld was not heard in the land. We could not imagine what Altgeld was doing with his mouth while the forces of anarchy and violence which he had done so much to promote were holding their carnival and celebrating their jubilee within his blessed jurisdiction.

And yet the Republican speaker or writer who has dared to hint in a gentle and Christianlike manner that there was a tendency, or a possibility of a tendency, toward anarchy connected with the Democratic party has been rebuked hundreds of times within my hearing on this floor.

Perhaps Altgeld was too full of pleasurable emotions to wreck his happy thoughts upon expression. At last, however, Altgeld has emerged. He comes forth to protest against the exercise of lawful authority in putting down a violent and tumultuous mob and in enforcing a duty that he, as governor of Illinois, has failed to do.

How many times did we hear that during the campaign of 1896, about the purpose of the Republican party to use the troops. How often did we hear of the tendency toward despotism. How often did we hear denunciation of the tendency of the Republican party toward centralization of power.

He demands that the President shall withdraw the Federal troops from Chicago, in order that he may revel undisturbed in the orgies of crime.

I did not know what he was trying to order those troops for, but I think he was vindicating my proposition.

The letter from Altgeld to Cleveland is a piece of grotesque and dumfounding impudence that will wander through history without a companion.

I want to call attention to the magnificent language of this gentleman.

He says that "the law has been thoroughly executed, and every man guilty of violating the law has been brought to justice." On the very same day that this audacious falsehood was penned, the mayor of Chicago issued a proclamation reciting the fact that the strikers had overturned a number of cars on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, while the police stood idly by, unable or unwilling to prevent it. While Altgeld at Springfield declares that there is no trouble of consequence at Chicago, Mayor Hopkins, in Chicago, is confessing the impotence of local authorities to prevent the obstruction of traffic, the destruction of property, and the assaulting of peaceful citizens for attempting to carry on their lawful business. The condition of Chicago, as Altgeld very well knows, is of widespread and continued resistance to lawful authority, a conspiracy to paralyze traffic by lawless force on the part of the State authorities.

That is the first time I ever knew of the existence of this indictment. Until recently I never had heard the State authorities of Illinois charged with having been in a conspiracy to paralyze the traffic by lawless force.

Now, here is one of the most beautiful expressions in the English language:

The icy peak that tops this towering exhibition of frozen impudence is the bland assertion that "should the situation at any time become so serious that we can not control it with State forces, we will ask Federal assistance."

JULY 7, 1894.

[Laughter.]

There are a few words here on the subject of a gentleman by the name of Debs. The laborers and those interested in organized labor, the organized strikers in Shelby County, must have rejoiced when they read this:

At this juncture the jail opens its loving arms and takes him to its restful bosom. He refuses to give bail because he wants a good excuse to get out of the strike business. He can now say that victory was within his grasp when the mailed hand of plutocracy clutched the scruff of his free-born neck and hustled him off to jail.

[Laughter.]

Debs will doubtless be entertained in prison as becomes a fallen king. He will recline on soft cushions, be supplied with choice wines and cigars, and fare sumptuously every day. But, for rhetorical purposes, he may be considered as chained to the wall and feeding upon the vapors of the dungeon. This will help to lend a little pathos to his inglorious descent, and will, at any rate, solve the great problem of how to turn a damned thing loose.

JULY 18, 1894.

[Laughter.]

There is somebody by the name of Martin Irons; who he is I really do not know.

The late unlamented Martin Irons has heretofore enjoyed the undisputed distinction of being the blue-ribbon ass among all so-called labor leaders in the United States. But Irons, if he still lives, must look to his laurels. The able Mr. Eugene V. Debs evidently harbors a hellish design to pluck them from his brow and twine them about his own magnificent ears. Debs, by virtue of the autocratic power foolishly reposed in him, is the genius of destruction. He is waging a wicked, ruthless, reckless, and causeless war upon innocent people and upon the general public, in the pure wantonness of despotic power and pure cussedness of a malignant spirit.

JULY 3, 1894.

I nearly indorse that.

Now, if there is any Populist here, and I believe there is, if they have not consented to be swallowed up, I have a few words for their consideration.

Mr. GAINES. Do not forget that the contestant voted for Bryan.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Tennessee will have a full opportunity.

MENACE OF POPULISM.

That is what I have been talking about for years. This was in 1894.

Populism in its later manifestations is something worse than the vain and incoherent babblings of queer freaks and low demagogues.

[Laughter.]

It shows that misery seeks company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to have five minutes more.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask that the gentleman have unlimited time. He is making a very fine speech.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will use a part of the time.

Mr. BERRY. May I interrupt the gentleman by the inquiry, Is he reading this evidence in behalf of the contestant or the contestee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I am reading it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. Will he be kind enough to state whether the contestant and the contestee did not vote for William J. Bryan?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say that there was very considerable doubt about the contestant——

Mr. BERRY. You are answering for the contestant?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am trying to say that there has been great doubt on either side of the question.

THE MENACE OF POPULISM.

Populism in its later manifestations is something worse than the vain and incoherent babbling of queer freaks and low demagogues.

I do not know whether the Populists on this floor can fill that invoice or not. [Laughter.]

It is an organized revolutionary force, distinctly anarchist in its tendencies, utterly violent and vicious in its teachings. No sensible, thoughtful, reasoning man has any excuse for mistaking the nature and significance of Populism as it now is.

It has largely sought to ally itself with all the turbulent, incendiary, and vicious elements of society, and whenever it has been in power it has almost openly avowed its sympathy with lawbreakers. The language employed by its leaders is that of the anarchist beer dens in the slums of New York.

That is the association you are getting into when you try to associate yourselves with the Democratic party on this floor. [Laughter.]

The party indeed is an organized menace to the peace of society. Its rule means social and industrial chaos.

JULY 17, 1894.

The next is headed "No hope in Populism."

* * * It is certain that every thoughtful, sober-minded, and intelligent man will endure anything rather than have the country given over to the mad rule of a lot of flannel-mouthed anarchists.

[Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, several times in the progress of my political career I have spoken about the Populists in terms of sharp criticism, and I even intimated that they were steering a little in the direction of anarchy, but I never knew, and never mentioned for want of knowledge, that they had flannel mouths. [Laughter.] I call the attention of any Populist from Kansas to the following choice language:

Tyranny, despotism, anything is better than rampant anarchism and delirium tremens statesmanship of the Kansans and their infatuated followers.

Mr. BOTKIN. He borrowed that from the Republican papers and Republican speakers of Kansas.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. GREENE. I simply want to make this remark: My friend Mr. Carmack has reformed, and the gentleman from Ohio is still in the dark. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE] got up and pointed, it reminded me of a severe denunciation I once heard by a preacher, who called upon various characters represented in human nature to reform and repent. Among others he cried out, "Oh, ye hypocrites!" when a man jumped up and, pointing to a friend by the name of Ponder, said, "Why don't you stand up?" [Laughter.]

They are now tearing their shirts for free silver coinage. Yet they are the very fellows who reviled it with unmeasured scorn, as a "mere drop in the bucket," and spurned with contempt the very suggestion of uniting with the Democratic party to obtain it. * * * The ghastly caricatures, the characterless vagabonds, and the scurvy knaves that took the lead in that wild movement knew that they would have no place in any organism where character and intelligence were requisite to leadership. While shouting for silver, they are not the friends of silver.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1893.

Now, here is something that comes down to the more recent organization of the People's Party, and it is headed—

ADULLAMITES.

The People's Party was invented for the especial accommodation of all the misplaced and partyless patriots of the country—the stragglers and deserters of real, live, sure-enough parties. It is a sort of cave of Adullam for all querrulous and unsatisfied politicians—a place where they can get together and swear off their wrath in picturesque profanity. It is simply a great "cussin" club, and its platform is "Damn it."

[Great laughter.]

If there is any good to come of it, it is simply as a sanitary measure. As a receptacle for all the refuse and garbage, the dead cats and turnip tops, the so-called "People's Party" may serve a useful purpose.

[Laughter.]

The Democratic party will be cleaner, and the political atmosphere will be cleaner after all the John McDowells have been flushed out of the gutters.

JULY 11, 1892.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, we come to

MR. CRISP AND THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

* * * The appointment of a bullheaded and uncompromising free-coinage committee by the Speaker would do much to frustrate an effort to bring about an adjustment of differences of opinion.

I wish I had the names of that committee. I know that Mr. BLAND, of Missouri, was at the head of it. [Laughter.] I have heard him called an uncompromising free-coinage man before this, but never heard the other adjective applied to him. [Laughter.]

The committee appointed by Mr. Crisp before was just such a committee as would do all in its power to block and defeat any measure except an absolute free-coinage bill, which would not have a ghost of a show to become a law. * * * If Mr. Crisp is so completely under the control of the "free-silver or bust crowd" that he can not, or dare not, put a bit in the mouth of the rantankerous fanatics and give prudent counsels and common sense a fair show, Mr. Crisp is not the man who should be Speaker of the House.

JUNE 21, 1893.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that I should consider it a personal loss to have a gentleman capable of such language as that lose his seat in the House of Congress if we could only induce him to occasionally turn his attention to explanations of how much improvement there has been in the various elements of the politics that he denounced so bitterly a short time ago.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in that House that are called by the very expressive title was Mr. BLAND of Missouri, Mr. Tracey of New York, Mr. Kilgore of Texas, Mr. Epes of Virginia, Mr. Stone of Kentucky, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi [laughter], Mr. BANKHEAD of Alabama, and Mr. Rayner of Maryland. And now I am getting down to those not necessary to name, for they were not "bullheaded." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this shows and illustrates fully, not that the gentleman from Tennessee has been guilty of unprecedented acrobatic performances in politics, for he does not stand alone. It illustrates American politics; it illustrates the possibility of what can be accomplished by a man of brilliant genius and industry in the pursuit of fame. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asked for time to make his speech in this matter, he announced that he knew nothing about the case, but he wanted to have a little fun. His speech has demonstrated that fact. But I listened with considerable care and attention to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], and I want to say that neither the record in this case nor the testimony, nor the law of the case, will at all sustain him in the conclusions he has reached and the opinions he has set forth on the floor of this House.

This district, as has been stated, is composed of four counties; and before the contestant can claim that he was elected and is entitled to a seat on this floor from the Tenth Congressional district of Tennessee, it is incumbent on him to prove by a fair preponderance of the evidence two things: First, that the contestee did not receive a majority of the votes cast at that election; and in the second place, that he (the contestant) did so receive them.

Now, in what way has it been attempted to establish these facts? First, when he served his notice of contest he charged fraud in every county, almost in every precinct of every county. But it is a significant fact that in the counties of Shelby and Hardeman, in which was cast two-thirds of the entire vote of the district, although the contestant had charged that he had been defrauded of more than a thousand votes in the county of Shelby alone, yet when it came to the proof and to a hearing of the case he admitted that the election in both those counties was absolutely fair and free from fraud. He abandons his issue as to those two counties, where, as I have stated, two-thirds of the entire vote of the district was polled; and in those two counties, it is a little singular that the contestee, Mr. Carmack, received 64 majority.

Now, that takes out of this case those two counties. It takes out of the case two-thirds of the entire vote of the district. We come, then, to consider only a few precincts in the counties of Fayette and Tipton—two, I believe, in Tipton, and eight in Fayette. Those are the only precincts about which a contention is made before this House. The contestant stands before this House asking to have counted for him the Republican vote of the county of Fayette and the county of Tipton. No man has ever been more vindictive, no man has ever gone further, either upon the floor of this House or upon the stump in those counties, to denounce the Republicans of that district and of these two counties than the contestant himself.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, we now have the humiliating spectacle of a man who did this in campaign after campaign standing here asking to have Republican votes counted for him, votes that he never received, and asking the Republicans of this House to place him in a seat to which he was not elected.

It is true the contestant received the indorsement of the two branches of the Republican party in this, the Tenth Congressional district. One branch was the "Lily Whites," as they called themselves; the other, the "Black and Tans," as they were known. Let us look for a moment to see how these indorsements were obtained.

The white Republicans say that they indorsed Mr. Patterson because he was in accord with them upon the money question. There may have been some such reason for their action. I can readily see how there was; for just at that time the contestant was going over the country making speeches in the interest of "sound money," as he called it, or the "gold standard," and to that extent in the interest of the Republican party. But upon that question he had undergone a most miraculous change, as he had previously been an avowed free-silver advocate. The Republicans, however, inasmuch as he had come out at last for "sound money," doubtless thought that he would "stick;" and hence they indorsed him for that reason, and almost exclusively for that reason.

But after he had received this indorsement—after he had obtained the indorsement of the white Republicans for this position—he continued to make his speeches in the interest of sound money and in the interest of the Republican party until the day the election came. When that memorable occasion arrived, when the contestant was put to the test to say, under the solemnity of a ballot, whether he was for sound money or free silver, he goes to the polls quietly and casts his vote for William J. Bryan, the Chicago platform, and free silver.

Mr. MAGUIRE. And for Patterson.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. That fact is admitted. Thus it was that the white Republicans of the Tenth district of Tennessee realized that the contestant had put up a job on them, that he had not been sincere in securing their indorsement. That was enough of itself to have disgusted the white Republicans with him forever, as doubtless they are by this time down in Tennessee. But that is not one-third as bad as his treatment of the negroes. How did he get their indorsement? Mark you, I am speaking from the record.

Mr. LINNEY. The gentleman says that Mr. Patterson voted for Mr. Bryan. For what candidate did he declare himself during the campaign?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. There is no record that he ever declared for anybody. He evidently put himself in the attitude of playing "good God and good devil," so that if McKinley should be elected, he could say to him, "I made sound-money speeches for you all over the country;" and if Bryan should be elected, he could say, "See, I voted for you; I voted the Democratic ticket."

But what was his attitude in regard to the colored convention? They met for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress. They had a candidate of their own color—W. A. Fields. But the friends of the contestant went to this convention of colored men and said, "Here, we will make it to your financial interest if you will indorse Mr. Patterson." In other words, the Republican convention was bought and paid for; and W. A. Fields, the colored candidate, issued his circular to colored people of that district denouncing the purchase, and asking the colored people in God's name to refuse to be delivered in accordance with the sale which had been made.

Now, let us look for a moment at the testimony of W. M. Porter, who seems to have been a prominent colored man down there. Porter says that he attended the St. Louis convention; that he went there and explained to Mr. Hanna that there was a difference between the white and colored Republicans in his district; and Hanna told him to go home and see whether he could not harmonize that difference; and he went home and started out to do it. Now, what was the first important step that he took in the interest of harmony?

He was a delegate to the colored Congressional convention. What does he say in reference to this sale. When he was asked what he knew about it, he said:

They asked me what I thought about it, and I told them I thought it was a splendid thing if they could get any money. They said: "You understand how to manage the affair," and they took my counsel, and I issued out the money; and after I issued it out, there was $5 left, and Mr. Strickland came up and said I had worked all day and ought to have that, and I took it and went down town and treated away about $2 of it and bought beer and——

You see it was a proposition to sell outright.

Now, what further? The question was asked him, "Do you know this man Johnson?"

He answered, "Yes, sir."

The question was again asked, "Did you give him any money?" He said, "Yes; I gave him $5."

Q. He did not refuse it?
A. No, sir.
Q. He took it the first time you offered it?
A. Yes, sir; and cut up because I did not make it ten.

[Laughter.]

I told him I did not have that to spare; that no man got that much unless it was Froman, who went out and would not take that. Finally I gave him $15.

Mr. Speaker, this is the testimony by which the contestant in this case received the indorsement of the colored people of this district—the indorsement of the colored Republicans from the Tenth district of Tennessee.

Now, what else occurred? When this indorsement had been secured in this way, Porter, the man who disbursed the money, was selected to go out and make speeches for the colored people in the interest of the contestant. What does he do? He first states that he went into Fayette County, where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] says all of the colored people, or 95 per cent of them, were voting the Republican ticket, and for the contestant. What kind of a reception did he meet with in Fayette County?

He says that when he got to Fayette County he went, in the first instance, to W. S. Lally. He was the chairman of the Republican committee of that county. What did Lally tell him? He said he explained to Mr. Lally his purpose, which was to canvass the county for the Republican ticket and for the contestant. Mr. Lally said to him, "That is all right. You can go through the county and make speeches for the Republican ticket, but if you attempt to uphold the contestant in this county they will kill you before you get out of the county. It is all right for you to go and make your speeches so far as the Republican ticket is concerned. But," he says, "I want you to understand, if you go out in the county of Fayette, urging these colored people to vote for Patterson, they will kill you before you get out of the county."

They hated him and despised him in that county. Why did they? Because, sir, the testimony in this case discloses the fact that in this county, in the little town of Oakland, only a very short time before, the contestant had stood on the stump and denounced these negroes in language strong and emphatic. It was then that he declared that if he had to be elected to office by colored votes he would spurn to accept it, and did not want a colored man to vote for him.

What a wonderful change has come over the spirit of his dream! He not only wants those who voted for him now to be counted in his behalf, but he has asked us to give him the votes of a great many others who did not vote for him at all. Upon what theory or principle? There can be but one. That is that he bought them and paid his money for them and is entitled to have the goods delivered.

But, as I was saying, when this man struck the county of Fayette, Mr. Lally, the secretary of the Republican committee, tells him that in that county the negroes will kill him if he agitates the cause of the contestant, Mr. Patterson. He says the first speech that he undertook to make there the colored people put all kinds of questions to him, asking him if the contestant had been this, that, or the other, and if he did not make this or that speech denouncing them. How did he explain it to them? Here is what he said:

I always, like every slick politician, had a way to get out of everything when the darkies asked me questions.

[Laughter.]

He had a way of "getting out of everything." But, now, what else does he say? He says he went down into Fayette Corner—that is a precinct in the county of Fayette—and made speeches in the interest of the contestant. What did they do to him there? Why, sir, one of the greatest outrages that have ever been perpetrated in the South occurred to this distinguished colored orator when he struck Fayette Corner. He said when he went to the schoolhouse to make a speech, he had not fairly got started until all of the colored directors came to him and said, "If you are going to make a speech urging the colored people to vote for Mr. Patterson, you can not speak here. You must go out."

He said that he saw there was going to be trouble, and he got his gripsack and went out. He went and made his speech, but he had to do it in the woods, standing on a log, and in the rain at that. [Laughter.] The colored people refused to allow him to speak in their schoolhouse for the purpose of advocating the cause of the contestant, and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania says there is no reason why he did not get all of the colored votes in Fayette County.

But there is another thing that is worthy of consideration. This district was confessedly Democratic by some 2,000 or 2,500 votes, as is shown by the testimony of Mr. Dutrow, the chairman of the Republican committee of the district. This district had a majority of 2,500, a conceded Democratic majority; and yet, sir, we find, although it is charged by the gentleman that the contestee had control of the election machinery of the county and in the district, he is returned to the House and holds a certificate on a returned majority of only 365 votes.

Now, what effort was made? What was done? What improper thing transpired in the holding of this election in the Tenth Congressional district of Tennessee? Gentlemen, I am going to refer to the testimony concerning some of these districts in the order in which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] has discussed them. I challenge him, I challenge any man to controvert or dispute the correctness of what I am about to say. When it became evident that the negroes of Fayette County would not support the contestant in this case, what trick and job was put up by his friends in order to induce them to do so? Separate voting places were established. They met and declined to participate in the vote at the regular voting place and organized a polling place of their own. Nothing can be clearer than that. There can be but one legal election held at the same place on the same day.

When these men left their legal voting place and organized polls of their own, in order to place a guard and watch upon these colored people and upon their votes, they violated the law, and they knew it. What did this House say upon the same question? In the case of Gause vs. Hodges, in the Forty-third Congress, the majority of the committee used this language in reporting upon that matter. In that case in three counties—Independence, Jackson, and Woodruff—separate precincts were attempted to be established and set up, upon a provocation apparently more sufficient and stronger than the one set up in this case. What did the committee say?

INDEPENDENCE, JACKSON, AND WOODRUFF COUNTIES.

In each of these counties, at one or more voting places, persons considering that they had a right to vote, which right had been denied them at the regular polls, and perhaps others who simply desired to vote, organized what has been called "outside polls." The persons assuming to act as officers at these outside polls made returns to the clerk of the county, and the contestant claims that the votes thus returned shall be counted.

The committee are unable to find any authority for such a proceeding in either State or national law.

The national law provides a way in the election of Congressmen and Presidential electors by which persons having the right to vote can make that right available to them when it is denied them at the regular poll. These persons did not think proper to pursue this course. They resorted to this new scheme outside the law, subversive of the purity of elections and revolutionary in the extreme.

It can not be urged that the persons making these returns are election officers. Their certificate, then, can have no legal force, and can furnish no evidence that what they certify to is correct.

There is no evidence that a single one of these participants at the outside voting had any legal right to vote, and the whole claim for the allowing of the vote rests simply upon the certificate of these self-constituted and illegal officials.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the vote counted by the majority of the committee at these outside polls can not legally be counted, and it has been so held by this House.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Is it necessary to count these votes in order to seat the contestant?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. It certainly is. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say, this being the law, let us look at some of these townships in the order in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] has discussed them.

Take district No. 2, Eola. At this precinct the returned vote is, Carmack 172 and contestant 24. The majority of the committee in their report say that this vote should be changed because of the fact that the returns from this district have been impeached, and that the returns should stand, for the contestee 134 and for the contestant 63. By whom is it claimed, Mr. Speaker, that the return of three judges and two clerks, made upon their solemn oath, should be overturned? Remember, they have been placed upon the stand and have sworn that the election in this precinct was absolutely fair and free from fraud.

Who impeaches that return? Who impeaches that testimony to the satisfaction of the majority of this committee? There are but four witnesses in all. Mark you, four against five. The first is George B. Hendon. Hendon says that he was sent down there in the interest of the contestant and in the interest of a fair election. He says in his testimony that the principal distinction which he has attained in life is as a ballot-box stuffer in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. LITTLE. Who is that?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. George B. Hendon. He admits that he has stuffed ballot boxes in the interest of the contestant every time he has run for office, and is ready to do so again. Yet he swears in his testimony that there was fraud in this precinct, and asks to have it thrown out.

Who is the next witness? The next witness is R. M. Fowler. He says that he went down there as a bodyguard to Hendon; that on the way down they stopped and got a supply of whisky, and that he and the other witness, W. J. Smith, were drunk during the day of the election and do not know what occurred.

These are the supporting witnesses for this grand mogul, George B. Hendon.

The fourth and last witness is Howard Huskins, a negro. Huskins says that he saw many of the colored people vote for the contestant, and he furnished them the tickets. Yet, Mr. Speaker, he is an ignorant negro, as shown from his own testimony, for he says that on the tickets he furnished was both the name of McKinley and the name of a man for United States Senator, but he does not know who he was.

But it is shown that Huskins's testimony is absolutely false, because one of the very colored men who he says voted for the contestant was put upon the stand and says it is not true, and that he not only voted for the contestee, but worked for him all day at that precinct.

Now, these four men are the witnesses who impeach this return, and I say that they are witnesses whom no man, I care not whether he is a lawyer, judge, or juryman, would take for a moment to impeach the testimony of one reputable witness, much less of five. You would not consider it, would you?

I say put as many of these rascals on the witness stand as you would, yet you can not put enough of them in this House to impeach the testimony of one honest man, much less the sworn returns of five reputable officers. Now, when I tell you that that is all the testimony upon which the returns of this precinct are thrown out, I do but tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the record in this case shows, and I ask any man to controvert it.

But let us look at the other precincts. Take Fayette Corner. The vote in this precinct was, for the contestee, 138; for the contestant, 84. The majority of the committee admit—although they say they must throw this precinct out—they admit that the proof is not as satisfactory as they would like to have it. But they say that there are some circumstances that supply the place of direct proof, and they will work this township or precinct on circumstances. What are the circumstances that justify throwing out the votes for Fayette Corner? The committee say they are two—first, because the judges of the election would not allow Mr. Patterson's friends to select one of their own number as judge, and second, because they say his friends were not permitted to witness the count. What is the proof of that?

There is no contention made, Mr. Speaker, but what both parties, the Republican and the Democratic party, were represented in the selection of the judges of election in that precinct. It is not contended that there was not a Republican there, serving as the law provided that there should be; but they say they did not allow Patterson's friends to take part. I will show to you, Mr. Speaker, the character of the men they had been having there. These men sent there were experts in contested-election cases in Fayette County. They admitted on cross-examination that they had been ballot-box stuffers all their lives.

But it is claimed in this precinct that J. M. Crawford was not permitted to witness the count. That is circumstance No. 2; and that is all that is relied upon to exclude this precinct. The evidence in this case shows, and it is uncontroverted, that when Crawford went and demanded to witness the count he did so in the most violent and profane manner, and the judges said to him he would not be permitted to enter the room: "The room is small, and from the manner you come, you have come to make trouble, and we will not permit you to come in here."

Mr. CARMACK. And I would remind the gentleman the testimony shows that there was a crowd of others with him, all trying to get in at the same time.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. The judges did right, and every man with a fair mind, regardless of politics, will admit that the judges did do right; and yet these are the only circumstances by which this precinct is impeached and the vote thrown out absolutely, and I challenge my friend who has just taken his seat to deny it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. And is this district thrown out on this man's testimony?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. It was thrown out on no testimony of a direct witness, but simply on these circumstances, which, it is claimed, impeach the returns.

Take the precinct of Yumyum. There the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] says the most glaring frauds were committed. He says this is a large Republican and a large colored district. That is true. The proof in the case shows that there were from 500 to 600 colored voters in the district of Yumyum. But, Mr. Speaker, there were not more than 250 of them that ever voted or offered to vote. Why? The reason assigned for it is given in this record, and the testimony is furnished by Mr. Dutro, chairman of the Republican committee in the city of Memphis.

They said, "Mr. Dutro, why was it that the contestant did not get the votes in Yumyum, and yet did get so many in No. 5, which is right by the side of it?" He says, "Well, I will tell you. We refused to distribute any of the campaign fund in that district, and our people were very much chagrined at it." Yes, the colored voters were very much "chagrined" in Yumyum. Their brothers over in No. 5 were getting a distribution of the campaign fund, and they wanted to get it, too, and failing, they were very much displeased; and another witness says that they stayed away from the polls and did not vote and did not offer to vote. The reason for this is fully expressed and explained by Mr. Dutro's failure to distribute his campaign fund.

But who went to Yumyum to impeach the returns? Now, it is disclosed that the contestant was very unpopular in that district. He not only had very few of the colored people supporting him, but he did not have a white man in that district for him. So he sent two trusted and worthy lieutenants down to Yumyum, to see that they had a fair election. Who does he send? E. E. Carpenter. And Carpenter says on the stand that he went down there and he went expressly for the purpose of seeing that they had a fair election. And yet he discloses that the first important step he took in his endeavor to secure a fair election was an attempt to bribe every judge and every clerk of election there. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He offered one $50 and another $25.

Mr. BENTON. Does that appear in the testimony?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. It is shown that he made this attempt in the testimony, and I give the number and page in which it appears in the report I filed in this case, and you can turn to it. What else does he admit? He admits that he has been a warm friend of the contestant ever since he has been in politics, and he says that he served as a judge of election in Fayette County every year, and that he never yet had signed and sworn to a return that was not false.

He says that he has been stuffing ballot boxes every time there was an opportunity given him, and he admits that he is ready to do it again. [Laughter.] That is the fellow they sent down to Yumyum to get a fair election.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He said he had been doing that for Colonel Patterson?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. He said he had been doing it ever since Colonel Patterson had been in politics there, and he was ready to do it again.

Mr. STEELE. Is that a common practice in Tennessee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. It was in this district during the time it was under the control of the contestant. [Laughter.]

What else did he say? Why, the testimony discloses the fact, by 20 colored witnesses put on the stand, that the contestant was very unpopular there, and the colored people would not support him. When Carpenter failed to bribe the judges and when he failed to secure a fair election, he comes back home and reports that "We didn't come out so well at Yumyum." They said to him, "Now, Carpenter, your job is not over. This election has got to be contested. We want you to get ready and go back to Yumyum, and we want you to go as our paid agent and servant;" and he went. What did he go for? Carpenter was going back upon an entirely different mission.

Mr. ALLEN. He went back to get a fair election.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. He was going back to help the contestant to get his seat instead of to get a fair election. He rounded up 75 colored people in Yumyum, but only 36 of them were put on the stand. The record discloses the fact that these 36 were never permitted to go on the stand until Carpenter had taken them into a private room and drilled them as to what their testimony should be and who they must say they voted for, and I challenge my friend to deny it.

Now, this man Carpenter having failed to bribe the judges of election, it is decidedly probable that he had better success with the negro witnesses, and it is upon this character of testimony that this House is asked to disregard the vote of Yumyum and set aside the sworn returns of the officers of election and count the 38 votes for the contestant——

Mr. CARMACK. I want to remind my friend that some of the witnesses, and especially Carpenter, spoke of the character of the negro witnesses in that district where he formerly lived, and said there was none of them worthy of belief in a court of justice.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I remember, now, that that was in the record, but I was not disposed to give much credit to it, because I do not think there is a negro on earth that ought not to be believed in preference to Carpenter.

Carpenter admits that not only was he paid and received the money from the contestant to do this job, but says he was indicted in 1888 for the small offense of stuffing a ballot box, and the contestant brought him out of it after several trials, and so they stood like a band of brothers together, working on this November day in the interest of a fair election in the grand old State of Tennessee—this band of ballot-box stuffers and these perjured rascals.

But let us take district No. 6, of Galloway. In this district there were two elections. This was the district in which they set up outside polls. J. E. Griffin and A. S. Wilder, both witnesses, say that Braden, the officer selected to hold the election at this precinct, had stated that he would not hold an election, and upon that they proceeded to organize a voting place, and the majority of the committee say that the vote at that poll should be counted and the vote at the regular precinct should be thrown out.

What were the circumstances? Braden went to Galloway for the purpose of holding the election and opening the voting place, as it was his duty to do. He got two of the judges to serve and started out to find a Republican and selected one, an intelligent man, and started to the polls with him, when a friend of the contestant, a man by the name of Oscar Wilder, violently laid hands on him and said, "You shan't serve as an election judge in this precinct," and pulled him away. Then it was that the officer went back and searched and found another man and started off to open the polling place according to law, when these friends of the contestant said the second man should not serve, and then it was the officer said, "If that is the way we are to be treated, I won't hold any election."

That was just what they wanted him to say. They had been tantalizing him and trying to get him to say just that. When he said it they went to another place in the town and opened a polling place of their own. But when they did let the officer alone the uncontradicted proof is that he did find a Republican to serve, and he went and opened the polls, and the election was held fairly and honestly, free from fraud; so free that no objection or charge is made against it. And yet they say the regular box at this place must be thrown out because these side-show fellows had opened them a voting place down somewhere else, and had succeeded by their own misconduct in delaying the opening of the regular and legal polls.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this course of conduct can not be justified, and is not justified, by law or testimony.

But take Oakland; and what do we find? At Oakland the contestant's friends claim that they had a suspicion they were not going to be treated fairly; they did not know anything about it, oh, no; but they had a suspicion. They had been so absolutely pure in their political methods that they could even anticipate a fraud by suspicion. They employed legal counsel, who said to them, "Now, you fellows are not going to get a fair show; and when you go down to Oakland don't vote at the regular box, but open a voting place of your own; start one to suit yourselves." And so they did.

They went down there and organized themselves; they had themselves sworn in to hold an election, but this proceeding was so palpably a fraud, it was so outrageously against law and decency, that the judges who had themselves sworn in to hold that election at a place where the majority of your committee say the votes cast should be counted, when the time came they took their ballots and went off to the regular polls at some distance and there cast them. Not a single man of them would vote at the box he himself had opened.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is it not true that the record discloses the fact that those judges and clerks voted at their own box?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. It is not.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have a reference to the testimony which shows that they did.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. If the gentleman will give me his references, I will agree to read the testimony from the record. The record discloses the fact—and it is not contradicted—that the judges and clerks went to the regular voting precinct and cast their ballots; that they did not vote at the box they had organized. If the gentleman will turn to the testimony in regard to Oakland, he will find that I am correct. The gentleman is correct so far as Galloway is concerned.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am speaking of Oakland.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. But what else occurred? At this Oakland precinct, as the testimony shows, 80 colored people voted the Democratic ticket—voted for the contestee in this case—80 in one precinct.

Now, what excuse does this contestant give for having these votes which were cast at this outside poll in Oakland precinct counted? What does he say about it? Let me show you. He says, in his notice of contest:

> They were legal voters, and their votes ought not to be lost simply because they were badly advised as to which of the boxes they should vote at.

Yet it was his own followers who gave the advice. This outside poll was set up at their instigation, and the law was violated under their instructions. And then they come in here and beg the question, and say you ought not to throw out those votes because the voters had bad advice.

What else occurred? It is shown by the testimony that not only 80 colored voters in Oakland Township voted for the contestee, but it is shown that in other townships from 30 to 40 colored voters marched up and voted for the contestee. And in one of the precincts the evidence discloses the fact that after the friends of the contestant had put tickets with his name upon them in the hands of these colored voters, urging them to go and vote them, they went up to the polls and quietly let the tickets drop on the floor and asked the judges to furnish them with the Democratic ticket, and they voted it; and they took special pains to vote for the contestee.

The witness who testified to this remarkable state of affairs is a man who came from Pennsylvania—an old Federal soldier. He says that the first vote he ever cast was for Abe Lincoln for President of this country. And they try to impeach the evidence of this old Federal soldier in a very peculiar way.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him——

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I find by referring to the record—pages 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 48, and 49—that the clerks and judges voted at box No. 2 in the Oakland district. The gentleman can refer to the record.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. The judges themselves, as the gentleman will see if he will turn to their testimony, have sworn in this case that they voted at box No. 1.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The testimony of the judges and clerks themselves will be found on the pages to which I have referred, where they testify that they voted at box No. 2 and not at box No. 1—not one of them. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He has—not purposely, of course, but actually—misstated the testimony. I call his attention, for proof of what I have said, to the citations I have given.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Yes; and if I do not furnish the gentleman with citations of the testimony where the judges have testified that they voted at box No. 1, I will agree to abandon this case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is the testimony of the judges and clerks themselves that I have referred the gentleman to.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. And I am going to refer the gentleman to the testimony where they have sworn the other way.

But, as I was saying, it was sought to impeach the Federal soldier who swore that he saw these colored men drop these Patterson tickets and take tickets with the contestee's name on them and vote them. How do you suppose they tried to impeach him? By putting some witness on the stand to swear that he was not worthy of belief? No, Mr. Speaker. There was but one question asked upon the cross-examination by which he was sought to be impeached, and that was, "Are you not a pensioner? Don't you draw a pension?"

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is a Union soldier, who saw colored men throw down ballots at the polls with the contestant's name on them and take up a Democratic ballot, and they sought to impeach his testimony because he was a pensioner?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. They asked him that question for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. To impeach his veracity?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Yes; and in order to reject the vote.

Now, take the testimony in regard to the district of Mason. Here the testimony consists of that of four or five colored hirelings, by which they attempt to impeach the returns in this precinct by showing that colored voters went to the polls and cast their ballots for contestant; and yet they did not put a single voter on the stand, not a single witness amongst those who claimed that such a thing occurred, to prove how they voted or for whom they voted or when or where they voted. And it was at this precinct where they were also seen to drop the Republican tickets—the tickets with the contestant's name on them—and take up the tickets of the Democratic party, with the contestee's name on them, and deposit and vote them.

What else? Why, in the Mason precinct, as shown by the report of the majority of the committee, two colored men, whose testimony is set forth, by the name of Boyd, who say they voted for contestee, swore also that they stayed around the polls and worked with the men of their own race all day in the interest of the contestee, Carmack, and urging others of their race to do the same. And not only that, but they testified that other colored men were engaged in the same way, trying to secure votes for the contestee. This testimony is uncontroverted and undenied. There is no attempt to contradict it. How, then, can the gentleman from Pennsylvania assume that the colored people of this county were Republicans, and enthusiastic, as he expressed it, in their support of the contestant?

But let us take the precinct of Tabernacle. Here they also had a double election, as it is called. The regular officers were not there to hold the election. The officer in that precinct, after waiting for a proper length of time, and the regular judges not coming, proceeded, as the law directed him to do, to select judges from the freeholders, and open the polls and conduct the election. Shortly after the polls were opened the regular judges came, and said: "Here, we want to serve at this election;" and the ones who had opened the polls under the law said to them, "Take your seats and serve. We have no objection." But they declined to serve. They said: "No, we will not serve, for we believe you have stuffed the ballot box."

The box was opened and there was found to be but one vote in it, which had just been cast. Still they refused to serve and went to another part of the same precinct and opened another ballot box and held another election. There is no testimony that the election was not held at the proper time, in the proper place, and in the proper manner, and yet, notwithstanding the fact that these officers of election had a perfect right to open the polls and conduct the election under the circumstances, the majority of the committee claim that the purity of the election has been tainted and that this regular box contains nothing that is legal and binding or sacred about the ballots cast in it.

It amounts to simply saying to the contestant, or to any other man interested in an election, "If you think you can get your judges and clerks and other officers of election who will do you more good than those who are legally and regularly appointed, then you need not submit your claims to them, but you can go off and hold your own election with your own judges wherever you please." If the contestant had the right to set up a separate and distinct ballot box in the various voting precincts, every other candidate for every other office would have precisely the same right. Why, Mr. Speaker, such a proposition does not rise to the dignity of even good nonsense. It is ridiculous to assume such a position.

But they say there was a conspiracy in Fayette County, and the sheriff of Fayette County was a friend of the contestee, and therefore, on that account, they claim there was a conspiracy. Is there any proof of that in the record? It appears nowhere in this testimony. It is not established by a single scintilla of testimony; and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania claims that the circumstances to which he calls attention are proof of this conspiracy. I deny it. Let us see now what are the facts. In five precincts of Fayette County the contestant got a good, handsome majority of the votes polled, and they were so returned for him.

In the entire district the contestee's majority is only 365. Does any sane man believe that if they had entered into a conspiracy with the friends of the contestee to defraud the contestant of his vote in that county, they could not have carried all of the precincts as easily as those they did carry and not have given to the contestant five of them? Does anybody believe that if they started in to work such a conspiracy, they would not have returned for Mr. Carmack more than 365 majority?

The man who finds evidence of a conspiracy upon that testimony—upon testimony so flimsy, so light and airy as that—is either not viewing it from a fair and unbiased standpoint, or else he does not know the evidence of a conspiracy when he sees it. There is one way, and one only, by which the contestant can be seated in this case. That is for this Congress to say by its vote to the colored people of Tennessee and the colored people of this district of Tennessee, notwithstanding they despise the contestant and did not and would not vote for him, "We find you have been bought by and sold to the contestant; you are still slaves, and we propose to deliver you and count your votes for him, regardless of your wishes; for when you are sold and paid for, you must stay sold." You can not put it any other way.

But there is one other question here, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to call the attention of this House, and that is the question of the poll tax. The evidence in this case discloses the fact that 3,000 colored people had their poll tax paid for them by friends of the contestant in this case, and they voted at that election on poll-tax receipts so obtained. The laws of Tennessee require that before a man can be a legal voter he must pay the poll tax assessed against him before the election comes off.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For the preceding year.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Yes. Now, I do not controvert the doctrine that a man can vote upon a poll tax paid for him by an agent, provided the party paying it was his agent, or provided the party paying it, although he paid it without previous authority, had his action in paying it ratified by his principal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And provided his principal pays him back the money.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. But, Mr. Speaker, a ratification of the act does not consist alone in taking the receipt and voting on it, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] says. Every standard law authority, and every decision worthy to be classed as the decision of a court of competent jurisdiction in this country, holds that you must go further than that. They all hold that where a man's tax is paid by another not previously authorized to do so, then before he becomes a legal voter he must ratify that act, not by merely taking the receipt and voting on it, but either by paying the money back or promising to pay it. In this case no promise was ever made. None was ever exacted from any man to whom they furnished a poll-tax receipt that he would pay it back, either in the near future or at any other time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One question right there. Did they ever give any of these poll-tax receipts, paid for by the contestant, to anybody who did not promise to vote for the contestant?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. They say they did not if they knew it, and they thought they knew what they were doing.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is not a word of testimony anywhere in which it is stated that they promised to vote for the contestant in consideration of those receipts.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I will not yield to the gentleman to discuss that now.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I want to ask you a question, if you will permit me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LOUD). The time of the gentleman has expired.

A MEMBER. He has unlimited time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that he be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes that is a customary privilege under the circumstances.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Not now. I will yield when I get through with my remarks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I want to ask you a question pertinent to this discussion and not intended to disturb your argument at all. You are discussing the question of poll-tax receipts. I understand that the report of the minority claims only a deduction of seventy-five voters who voted upon poll-tax receipts alleged to have been paid for after the election. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Yes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. And that you make no claim upon any other poll-tax receipts?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. That is, for the purpose of this case, we do not deem that the proof was sufficient to throw them out.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is it.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. But I say to you that I have no doubt but what every one of them were illegal. The testimony is that these receipts were paid for by men who were never authorized to pay the poll tax of any one of these voters. And that is not all. They were paid for and issued to the agents in blank, who took them in bulk and carried them to the voting precincts and issued them and filled them in, as the occasion required, to the men who would promise to vote for the contestant.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the record show that they were issued in blank?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. The record shows that they were issued in blank and that they were hawked about at these voting precincts. For what purpose? For the purpose of aiding in a fair election? No. They were given out for the purpose of debauching the ballot of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should like to ask the gentleman where the record shows that they were issued in blank.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. The man who paid for them says he gave them to his agents and instructed them to furnish them to the men who would promise to support the contestant, and that if they were given to anybody else he did not know it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What page of the record?

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Turn to the testimony of Mr. Randall and you will find it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not know of that page at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Who was Randall? Tell who Randall was.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Randall was the secretary of the Republican committee, and he says that he was put in charge of that particular work.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What page was that? Will you state it?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I will find it for the gentleman.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Now, Mr. Speaker, this was not to relieve the voter of the burden of the poll tax, or anything else, other than to furnish him a consideration for his vote. And every court in this country has held it to be bribery pure and simple; and it is the meanest, most contemptible character of bribery that was ever resorted to. It is mean, because you simply go to a man and pay him a pitiful sum for putting his vote in the ballot box. It is contemptible, because it is degrading to manhood and the elective franchise.

I do not believe there is a lawyer in this House, I do not believe there is a man, whether he is a lawyer or not, who does not agree with me, regardless of what his politics may be, that this is the worst character of bribery, and when proven invalidates the ballot and makes it illegal. The supreme court of the gentleman's own State, the State of Pennsylvania, has something to say upon this subject of paying one's poll tax. I want to read it to him, because evidently from the discussion he has made he has never run across it. How do they say in the State of Pennsylvania the poll tax may be paid? I read, Mr. Speaker, from 12 Philadelphia, page 626:

> A citizen may vote upon the payment of another of the proper tax for him, provided such payment be appropriated at the time it is made in the discharge of the tax against the citizen by name.

The court decided that unless it is so appropriated at the time of the payment a voter is not a legal voter, and his ballot should not be counted. Where is there a line of testimony in this case that shows that there was ever one dollar of this poll tax appropriated to anybody's name until after the election, and for that matter not even to this day? They were issued in blank, and hawked and peddled out over the district, and there could be no appropriation.

The evidence shows that $150 of this poll-tax money that was to be paid upon these poll-tax receipts in this way was not paid until sixteen days after the election was over. The law of Tennessee says that the poll tax must have been paid before the voter can legally vote. That being the case, the committee says as to 75 of these votes there can not be a particle of question nor a shadow of doubt, the poll tax being $2 in the State of Tennessee. In my own mind I have no doubt but what the whole 3,000 ought to be thrown out; not a particle. It was debauchery, it was bribery, it was corruption, it was meanness and deviltry and everything that tended to prevent fairness of the ballot and purity of the election.

Now, this being the case, and these being the facts in this case, I submit from the record and from the testimony, and I ask you, gentlemen, regardless of your politics, must this contestee be unseated in this way? He is as justly and as honestly entitled to his seat in this House as any man, I do not care who he is. If he is turned out, it will not be upon the testimony and the law in the case, but it will be for some motive and for some reason that has never yet been made public upon this floor, and will not be when this debate closes. Gentlemen, you may perpetrate this outrage upon the contestee because you have it in your power; you may perpetrate this outrage upon the noble people of the grand State of Tennessee for the same reason—because you have it in your power.

Mark my word for it, it is not the last of it. Wrongs of this kind do not always go unrebuked and unpunished. It may be wrong, but I take to my soul considerable satisfaction from the reflection that—

> Time at last sets all things even,
> And if we do but watch the hour,
> There never yet was human power
> Which could evade, if unforgiven,
> The patient search and vigil long
> Of those who treasure up a wrong.

I believe it will be so in this case. Gentlemen, if this contestee is unseated upon this testimony and the circumstances in this case, he will be returned by his people, with their confidence and their love, by a majority that no man need ever question in the future. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print remarks in the RECORD upon the Cuban war resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks upon the Cuban question.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. Res. 227. Joint resolution providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives;

H. R. 294. An act for the relief of Robert Spaugh;

H. R. 4929. An act extending the time for the completion of bridge across St. Lawrence River; and

H. R. 8569. An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. R. 157. Joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States; and

S. R. 150. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of extra copies of the military publications of the War Department.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCDOWELL, to print remarks on the Cuban question.

To Mr. SIMPSON, on request of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, to print remarks on the Cuban question.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WHEELER of Alabama obtained leave of absence for four days, from April 20, on account of important business.

APPOINTMENT ON COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment on Joint Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin and Mr. BREWER of Alabama.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is there anyone else to speak on that side?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are only four Republicans on the floor, and gentlemen can proceed. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. We wanted to go on until 6 o'clock, but you can take it out of the time.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, replying to the resolution of the House of the 15th instant relating to the evidence before the court of inquiry which investigated the destruction of the battle ship Maine—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a schedule of papers, documents, etc., on the files of the Treasury Department, which are of no use in the transaction of business and of no historical interest, this schedule being transmitted in compliance with the act of Congress approved February 16, 1889—to the Joint Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HICKS, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7346) to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1133); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1913) to protect the insignia and the name of the Red Cross, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1135); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8480) providing for the sale of the surplus lands on the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indian reservations in Kansas, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1134); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1138); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3553) granting a pension to Bvt. Lieut. Col. Amos Webster, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1126); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STURTEVANT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6831) granting a pension to Taylor McFarland, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1127); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1118) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1128); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Pryor Perkins, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1129); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3596) granting a pension to Mrs. Bettie Gresham, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1130); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1131) granting a pension to Adonia Huard, of New Orleans, La., widow of Hypolite Huard, deceased, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1131); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3565) to grant a pension to Theresa Bonnaveau, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1132); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7696) for the relief of William Christenberry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1136); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 104) to increase the pension of Lucretia C. Waring, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1137); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SAYERS: A bill (H. R. 10001) imposing and providing for the collection of a tax on incomes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KNOWLES: A bill (H. R. 10002) to authorize the issue of Treasury notes, for the redemption thereof, for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10003) to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 10004) relating to retired officers of the Army in time of war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWN: A bill (H. R. 10005) to recognize the services of soldiers and sailors and encourage patriotic responses to calls for volunteers—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10006) for military postal service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 10007) to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to grant to the Fort Smith and El Paso Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HULL (by request): A bill (H. R. 10021) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States in time of war by organizing a field telegraph corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRENNER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 10008) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John H. Cheevers, late United States Navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10009) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Martin Walsh, late United States Navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10010) granting pension to Anthony Bollinger, late private Company E, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10011) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William H. Mozier, alias William H. Parliament, late private Company F, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRUCKER: A bill (H. R. 10012) for the relief of William E. Cummin, captain Company I, Tenth Regiment Michigan Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOCKERY: A bill (H. R. 10013) to increase the pension of Joseph H. McGee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 10014) granting an increase of pension to George Kerr, of Louisville, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FISCHER (by request): A bill (H. R. 10015) for the relief of August Bolten and Gustav Richelieu—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 10016) to remove the charge of desertion against Peter Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOY: A bill (H. R. 10017) for the relief of William H. Miller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 10018) granting a pension to Mary J. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 10019) to increase the pension of Isaac Morgareidge from $30 to $36 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MITCHELL: A bill (H. R. 10020) for the relief of the Central National Bank, of the city of New York—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolutions of Madison Lodge, No. 419, Knights of Pythias, of Uniontown, Pa., in support of House bill No. 6468, granting land at Hot Springs, Ark., for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a sanitarium thereon—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ALLEN: Petition of W. W. Lake and other citizens of Aberdeen, Miss., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BARHAM: Petitions of the First Baptist Church of Eureka, Cal., favoring bills to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the First Baptist Church of Eureka, Cal., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BELKNAP: Resolutions of brewers of the State of Illinois, protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of John A. Tolman Company and Durand, Kasper Company, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against an internal-revenue duty upon tea and coffee in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRENNER of Ohio: Petition of 40 citizens of Eaton, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 7130 and Senate bill 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BROMWELL: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill No. 8066, relating to appropriations for a national exposition at the city of Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Ohio Brewers' Association, protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: Petition of 20 citizens of Rogersville Junction, Tenn., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRUCKER: Telegram of Melze, Smart & Co., of Saginaw, Mich., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BULL: Petition of the Central Congregational Church of Providence, R. I., protesting against the passage of House bill No. 9481, to create a permanent reservation on Annette Island, southeastern Alaska, for the use of the Metlakahtla Indians and other natives of Alaska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FOSS: Petitions of Durand & Kasker Company, Reid, Murdock & Co., John A. Tolman Company, and Sprague, Warner & Co., all of Chicago, Ill., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas at present in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Peter Hand Brewing Company and sundry other brewers, of Chicago, Ill., urging as a matter of justice and fairness that in case an additional tax of $1 per barrel be imposed a rebate of 15 per cent be allowed on all stamps bought, in order to reimburse them for stamps destroyed, lost, and used upon returned beer, so as not to compel them to pay a tax upon beer not sold—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of the Congregational Church of Peacham, Vt., Rev. J. R. Williams, pastor, for the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Congregational Church of Peacham, Vt., for the bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Congregational Church of Peacham, Vt., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of Peter Smith, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, to accompany House bill for the removal of the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HURLEY: Petition of the Manufacturers' Association of Brooklyn, N. Y., indorsing President McKinley for the position he has maintained in seeking to secure peace with honor—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange, of Buffalo, N. Y., in favor of the passage of Senate bill No. 3354, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia (by request): Petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Rutherglen, Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation substituting voluntary arbitration for railway strikes—to the Committee on Labor.

Also (by request), petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also (by request), petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting in the District of Columbia and the Territories kinetoscope reproductions of pugilistic encounters and also the interstate transportation of materials of the same—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also (by request), petitions of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., for the passage of a bill to prohibit the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph, to protect anti-cigarette laws, and for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING: Sundry petitions of citizens of Salt Lake City, Ogden, Richfield, and other cities in the State of Utah, asking for an amendment to the patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. KITCHIN: Petition of J. S. Ray and 6 other citizens of Kernersville, N. C., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LAMB: Petitions of citizens of Richmond, Manchester, and vicinity, State of Virginia, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: Petition of Mickleton Grange, No. 111, Patrons of Husbandry, of Mickleton, N. J., relating to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LYBRAND: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of St. Paris, Ohio, favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCLEARY: Resolution of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Division, No. 117, Order of Railway Conductors, in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, letter of Capt. Ed. S. Bean, captain of Company D, First Regiment National Guard, State of Minnesota, favoring the Army reorganization bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MANN: Two petitions of citizens of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ODELL: Petitions of Rockland Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Sullivan County, N. Y., favoring the passage of bills to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories, to protect State anti-cigarette laws, to prohibit kinetoscope reproductions of prize fights, and to forbid interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Rockland Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Sullivan County, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the interstate transmission of newspaper descriptions of prize fights, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Rockland Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Sullivan County, N. Y., for the passage of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building and grounds—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the Rockland Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Sullivan County, N. Y., in favor of legislation which will more effectually restrict immigration and prevent the admission of illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes to the United States—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. PAYNE: Petitions of the Ontario County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Clifton Springs, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, to protect State anti-cigarette laws, the enactment of a Sunday-rest law, and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Ontario County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Clifton Springs, N. Y., in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of Ontario County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Clifton Springs, N. Y., favoring the passage of a bill to prohibit the reproduction of prize fights by kinetoscope in the District of Columbia and the Territories and the interstate transmission of newspaper descriptions of such fights—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Ontario County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Clifton Springs, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Petitions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Hobart, and Christian Endeavor Society of South Edmeston, N. Y., in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Christian Endeavor Society of South Edmeston, N. Y., for the passage of bills to forbid the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RIDGELY: Petition of C. B. Young and other citizens of Chanute, Kans., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of Order of Railway Conductors, Division 181, Chillicothe, Ohio; Order of Railway Conductors, Division 166, Newark, Ohio; Order of Railway Conductors, Division 26, Toledo, Ohio; Graham C. Campbell and 32 others, Burkeville, Va.; J. L. Roser, M. D., Jellico, Tenn.; B. H. Patterson and 30 others, Baxley, Ga.; C. H. Otey and 16 others, Arthur, Tenn., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Grand Rapids, Mich., favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 3027 and House bill No. 6705, for pure flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, Conn., favoring the passage of House bill No. 8066, relating to appropriations for a national exposition at the city of Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TODD: Memorial of Kalamazoo Lodge, No. 50, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, that the destruction of our battle ship Maine and its crew should be the foremost issue in the war with Spain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 22, 1898.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art father of the fatherless and judge of the widow, we come into Thy presence bowed and heavy in heart because of the departure from among us of the senior Senator from Mississippi—a gallant soldier, a great lawyer, an eminent statesman, wise, upright, fearless, tender, gentle, kindly, and constant, loyal to friendship, magnanimous, and generous to all men. Every home in Mississippi bewails his loss as that of a father, and all who knew him well honored, revered, and loved him.

Grant Thy blessing to his bereaved and heartbroken wife. Support her under this crushing bereavement. Sustain his daughter and all the members of the family.

And grant, our Heavenly Father, that this unspeakable loss to every one of us, to the Senate and to all who knew and loved him, may bring home to us the sense not only of sorrow, but of cheer in the hope of resurrection and eternal life, which Thou hast given to us in Thy Son, in whose sacred name we offer our prayers. Amen.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the prayer of the Chaplain be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection to the request, and the order is made.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. HAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 238) to readmit Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment; and on page 2 of the bill, in line 14, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not to exceed 3,000 men;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
W. J. SEWELL,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

REPORT ON CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate to print 20,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, and the testimony and reports of consuls.

The amendments were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "7,500" and insert "6,500."
In line 7 strike out "12,500" and insert "13,500."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PRINTING OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT ACT.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That 5,000 copies of H. R. 9944, as signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses, be printed for the use of the Senate.

DEATH OF SENATOR WALTHALL.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce to the Senate that fifteen minutes after 5 on yesterday afternoon, the 21st of April, EDWARD CARY WALTHALL, late a Senator in this body from the State of Mississippi, departed this life at his place of residence in this city.

This distinguished soldier, this true patriot, this wise statesman, this accomplished gentleman has left behind him a memory fragrant with good deeds and courteous words. It is not my intention now to extend any remarks upon his character or his services. At a time which the Senate will appoint those who knew and loved him here will speak in his eulogy. I simply desire to offer for the consideration of the Senate the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EDWARD C. WALTHALL, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased which will take place in the Senate Chamber to-morrow, Saturday, at 12 o'clock m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory his remains be removed from Washington to Holly Springs, Miss., in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Saturday, at the hour named, and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. MONEY, Mr. BERRY, Mr. BATE, Mr. PETTUS, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. GRAY, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. CANNON.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps (through the Secretary of State), the Major-General Commanding the Army, the senior Admiral of the Navy, and Commissioners of the District of Columbia to attend the funeral of the Hon. EDWARD C. WALTHALL, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi, in the Senate Chamber at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the select committee appointed to take order for the funeral of the late Senator EDWARD C. WALTHALL be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the said committee.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the Senate do now, in honor of the memory of the late Senator WALTHALL, adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 23, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 22, 1898.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Subsistence Department.

Col. William Hoit Nash, assistant commissary-general of subsistence, to be Commissary-General of Subsistence, with the rank of brigadier-general, April 21, 1898, vice Cushing, retired from active service.

Artillery arm.

Philip Raymond Ward, of New York, to be second lieutenant, April 20, 1898, to fill an original vacancy.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Charles H. Ross, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Burlington, in the State of Iowa, to succeed M. A. Frawley, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

THIRD LIEUTENANTS, REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Eugene Blake, jr., of Maryland, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Edwin V. D. Johnson, promoted.

Frank B. Goudey, of Massachusetts, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed William H. O. Hay, promoted.

James F. Hottel, of the District of Columbia, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed John P. J. Ryan, resigned.

Paul C. Prince, of the District of Columbia, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed William E. W. Hall, promoted.

William J. Wheeler, of Virginia, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Samuel P. Edmonds, promoted.

Philip H. Scott, of Virginia, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Walker W. Joynes, promoted.

Frank W. Smith, of Massachusetts, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Henry L. Peckham, promoted.

Herman H. Wolf, of Ohio, to be a third lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed John G. Berry, promoted.

POSTMASTER.

Elisha W. Smith, to be postmaster at Franklin, in the county of Venango and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of John E. Adams, whose commission expired March 9, 1898.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 22, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to concurrent resolution 36 of the Senate relative to affairs in Cuba.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 156) readmitting Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and House bill (with Senate amendments) of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. R. 156. Joint resolution readmitting Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

H. R. 8428. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments—to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 9944, to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, on which there are disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate; and I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. HAY as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that on account of the peculiar conditions existing, which it is unnecessary for me to more particularly refer to, the conferees have had an informal meeting and have agreed, and I submit the report of the conferees of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That can only be by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can come only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The report should be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment; and on page 2 of the bill, in line 14, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not to exceed 3,000 men;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
W. J. SEWELL,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of this depends upon the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope before consent is given we shall have some idea given us by written statement or otherwise as to the effect of this report.

Mr. HULL. There is a written statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to hear the statement read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the Senate and House have agreed as follows:

1. Amendment numbered 1 of the Senate provides for two terms of enlistment, one for volunteers not organized into organizations under State laws for a term of three years and those organized under State laws for a term of one year. The Senate recedes from this proposition, and the agreement is that the entire enlistment of both classes shall be uniform for a period of two years.

2. The House agrees to amendment numbered 2, which provides for two assistant surgeons for each regiment of volunteers in place of one. This makes the number of assistant surgeons the same as we had during the civil war.

3. The third amendment of the Senate, which makes it imperative on the governors to appoint officers as they are now commissioned in the militia, the Senate recedes from, so that the governor may or may not appoint such officers, in his discretion.

4. The fourth amendment, authorizing the President to organize companies, troops, battalions, or regiments possessing special qualifications: The Senate recedes from its amendment and the conferees agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "and," in line 10, and inserting the words "not to exceed 3,000 men;" so that the President may organize such special organizations up to but not exceeding 3,000.

5. The fifth amendment is the rank of officers on the staff of corps commander; the House agrees to reduce the rank to lieutenant-colonel.

6. The sixth amendment provides for an engineer officer on the staff of the commander of a division.

7. The seventh amendment reduces the rank of staff officers of division commanders from lieutenant-colonel to major.

8. The eighth amendment adds an engineer officer to the staff of a brigade commander, from which the Senate recedes.

9. The ninth amendment adds one surgeon to the staff of a brigade commander, to which the House agrees.

10. The tenth amendment simply provides that the staff appointments terminate immediately upon the necessity for such details ceasing.

J. A. T. HULL,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded the reading, and I do not object. I think this is an improvement on the bill as it originally passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to enter my protest against amendment 4 as agreed to by the conferees. I think all the volunteer forces should be raised by a call upon the governors of the States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in regard to amendment 4, "not to exceed 3,000 men," I do not object to it, but I want it distinctly understood that that amendment is accepted on the understanding that these men are to be mustered out immediately upon the cessation of hostilities.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the bill as framed require the mustering out?

Mr. COX. I think it does, although not in as plain language as I wish it did.

Mr. HULL. I think there can be no question that under the terms of this bill every man enlisted under the bill will be mustered out.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill requires it?

Mr. HULL. Absolutely requires it.

The report of the conferees was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the request that I made yesterday for unanimous consent of the House that the contestant, Mr. Patterson, be heard in his own behalf, and I am willing that he should be allowed to speak at this time or immediately after a speech from the other side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are perfectly willing that the gentleman should proceed at once.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the contestant to address the House? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I now yield fifty-five minutes to the contestant, Mr. Patterson.

Mr. PATTERSON (the contestant). Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House for this opportunity. I have prepared what I desire to go into the RECORD, and as it will take every moment of the time allowed to me to present to the House what I have to say, and there is ample opportunity for the other side to reply, I shall not for that reason yield to interruptions during that time.

Mr. Speaker, he who stands on the banks of the Potomac when at high tide, with no object within the range of his vision but a whirlpool, may be deceived by appearances and imagine the current is running to its source; but when his vision has a wider sweep he is no longer deceived by the driftwood and knows its course is eastward to the sea.

So he who seeks the solution of a cause pregnant with important results to the individual litigants, or to the public, is often puzzled with doubt and uncertainty when looking only to the conflicting circumstances immediately surrounding the transaction. But when he looks beyond to the environments, about which there is no dispute, doubt is dispelled and the truth is transparent in the midst of contradictory testimony. Every important issue, whether to be determined in the tribunals of justice or in the halls of legislation, is always surrounded by undisputed facts which, when properly understood in their relations to the main fact, throw a flood of light upon it, laying bare the truth and justice of the case.

Be it known, I have been a Democrat from my youth up, until now my life measures three-score years. Always active in party service, prior to 1890 I was engaged in professional pursuits. In 1890, without solicitation on my part, I was nominated and elected without serious opposition to the Fifty-second Congress. I entered public life a pronounced Democrat and an earnest advocate of tariff reform. As tariff reform had been almost the sole issue in the three preceding Presidential campaigns, I had been a student of the question and had participated in its discussion. As the discussion of the silver question had not materially entered into any Presidential campaign, I had never given it serious consideration.

Without professing any knowledge of the subject, or so much as attempting its elucidation in any speech I had ever made, I assumed, like most of my colleagues from the South, that I was for free coinage, and so stated whenever I made reference to the subject. It was not considered by me a party issue. The contestee, at that time editor in chief of a daily newspaper published in Memphis, denied that it was a party issue, and bitterly denounced his party associates as "fanatics and maniacs" who were attempting to make it such.

The country recognizes in Grover Cleveland the foremost champion of a sound currency. Whatever may be the inconsistencies of others, he was known to all the world as an unflinching and consistent opponent of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. With a full knowledge of his record, Tennessee was the first State in the Union to demand his nomination in 1892. But for the persistent efforts of the delegations from the Southern States he could never have been nominated in the national convention over the opposition of his own State.

Shortly after the nomination, and before the campaign opened, the Senate passed a free coinage bill and sent it to the House. I voted against its consideration. Some of my Democratic colleagues took me to task. I was charged with materially aiding in the defeat of the measure, and the prediction was made that my action would result in my retirement to private life. But I had in the contestee a zealous if not an able defender. He not only denounced my assailants, but gave me unstinted praise. That fall I was returned to Congress by a majority of 5,376 over the candidate of the Farmers' Alliance. I had no Republican opponent.

When I returned to Washington in December, 1892, to attend the short session of the Fifty-second Congress, I was elated over the election of Mr. Cleveland. I rejoiced in a triumphant Democracy. I believed we had in Mr. Cleveland a great conservative leader who had the confidence of the entire country, and I thought I saw in the coming future a long era of Democratic ascendency.

It was at this juncture that I saw for the first time the danger signal. It was pointed out to me that prior to the passage of the Sherman law 90 per cent of all the duties collected on importations was paid in gold, and it was then less than 8 per cent. I realized a want of confidence in the stability of our currency not only pervaded our own but foreign markets. Day by day it became more apparent that nothing but the most prompt and patriotic action on the part of the President and Congress, giving our own people and the world to understand that the public credit was inviolable, would avert a great disaster. Day by day it became more apparent that while the Democrats had achieved a signal triumph at the polls on the tariff question, now that they had assumed the responsibilities of government they were hopelessly divided on a question of far greater moment which directly threatened the public credit and the welfare of the people in all the walks of life.

On the day that Grover Cleveland delivered his inaugural address the receipts of gold at the custom-houses had fallen to less than 4 per cent of the amount collected. As I witnessed the scene and saw the cutting sleet beat into his face, I thought it was symbolical of that other storm which was soon to burst over his head. How he stood erect in that great emergency, undaunted by faction or loss of party prestige, for the honor of his country and the welfare of his countrymen, let history determine. It was during this period I unselfishly and assiduously devoted myself to the study of the financial problem. I tried to find the path of duty and patriotism as best I could. No student ever studied a problem under more favorable conditions.

As I progressed I saw the abstractions of science daily illuminated by the commercial transactions transpiring throughout the country. I saw the man of affairs by actual experience arriving at the same conclusion in his countingroom which the scholar by abstract reasoning reached in the privacy of his library. I was thus engaged when the intelligence came that India had closed her mints to silver, resulting in that commodity taking a wild leap downward in the market. I daily witnessed that not a dollar of gold was going through the custom-houses into the Treasury; and then I saw our country, like a stranded ship, go down into the vortex of a great financial maelstrom. I arose from that investigation thoroughly convinced that it was utterly impracticable for this country, or any other country, to throw open its mints to the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver and hope thereby to secure and maintain the bimetallic standard.

I was then and am now unalterably convinced that it is impossible. I believed then and believe now that the attempt would result in silver monometallism. I thought then and think now that it would be a frightful calamity to the country and to all the people of the country for the United States, in the face of civilization and the enlightened opinion of mankind, to abandon the gold and adopt the silver standard.

It seems that contestee studied the problem and arrived at the same conclusion, for on the 26th day of July, 1893, he wrote:

> The Commercial has not advocated and does not advocate the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the present ratio. The Commercial believes in the utilization of both metals in our currency, but it recognizes that it is not possible for this country to maintain the parity of the gold and silver dollar at the present ratio.

At the extra session of Congress in 1893 I voted to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law and against the free coinage of silver. Subsequently I voted for and advocated every measure which looked to the establishment of the country more firmly on a gold basis, for the improvement and extension of our banking facilities, and for opening the way for a permanent place in our circulation for silver by making it our only money below the denomination of $10.

In the meantime I adhered to the doctrine taught by contestee, that the free coinage of silver was not a party issue or a test of any man's democracy. On the final passage of the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law I made a short speech, in which I said it was not a test of party fealty, but a scientific problem about which Democrats differed and had the right to differ. I claimed the right to remain in the party organization and there to advocate my views on the question, and I freely conceded the same right to Democrats who differed from me.

In 1894 I was opposed for the nomination by a free-silver advocate of marked ability, and after a long canvass, in which I distinctly advocated the cause of sound money, I was nominated in the primaries by a majority of 2,300 and was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by a majority of 4,696 over my Republican competitor, Mr. J. W. Brown, who testifies in my behalf that my election was conceded by the Republicans, who made no serious effort to defeat me.

After my election in 1894, down to the nomination of Mr. Bryan at Chicago in 1896, I persistently advocated the cause of sound money. I was principally instrumental in calling the sound-money convention which met at Memphis in May, 1895. It was the first nonpartisan convention called to consider the financial question, and it was composed of men whose presence would reflect honor on any country or any cause. Subsequently the advocates of free coinage had a convention at Memphis in which the free-silver Democrats and Populists made their first coalition. It was there that the bimetallic league was conceived which was afterwards organized here in Washington. Up to the meeting of the national convention at Chicago I did all any man of my capacity could do to prevent a declaration in favor of free coinage, but the Bimetallic League had its way and the adoption of what is known as the Chicago platform and the nomination of Bryan was the result.

In the meantime contestee had veered with the popular tide. He is singularly gifted in the use of vituperative adjectives and adverbs. The fulsomeness of his praise is only equaled by the fierceness of his denunciation. At all times and under all circumstances he is a stranger to moderation and forbearance. At one time the leaders of the silver movement were "fanatics and maniacs," bent on the destruction of the Democratic party; now they were the paragons of wisdom and the possessors of every public virtue. At one time Mr. Cleveland was an ideal statesman in whose leadership he rejoiced unceasingly; and now he was the "Buffalo Hangman." At one time he gave me unmeasured praise for voting against the consideration of a free coinage bill; and now I had betrayed my trust and my party.

At one time he was cyclonic in his denunciation of the Populists, and hurled at them every epithet in his vocabulary; and now he wooed them as softly as a cooing dove. He tortured Altgeld, Debs, and Sovereign during the Chicago riots to the extent that men can be tortured with pen and ink; and now he was ready to make them an apology as obsequious as the torture had been cruel. A delegate from the State at large to the Chicago convention, he exulted in the work it accomplished. There was no limit to the ardor of his zeal. In a vision he saw Lombard and Wall streets "crucifying mankind on a cross of gold," and he determined to go to the rescue.

In that great emergency he intuitively saw that deliverance would never come until he could secure for his country the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, overthrow government by injunction, inaugurate Bryan as President, and secure for himself a seat on this floor as the representative of "crucified mankind." After the adjournment of the convention he immediately returned to Memphis, and declared himself a candidate for Congress. It is needless to say that every Democrat who did not adopt his new-born faith was now a traitor to the party.

At this juncture, I was disheartened. To me the action of the Chicago convention was an appalling political mistake. Personally I was disposed to follow the example of Turner of Georgia, and go at once to private life. This perhaps would have been the wiser course. But there were thousands of Democrats in the district who believed with me and insisted on my candidacy. I could not bring myself to the conclusion that it was my duty to get out of the Democratic organization. I believed with others that the Chicago platform was a miscarriage. I thought it was a mistake that could be and would be corrected. I never realized the extent and permanency of the movement and that it was a situation beyond control.

On the other hand, I could not yield my convictions on a subject so paramount in importance and so far-reaching in its results. I had persistently clung to the idea that it was not a party question or a test of party fealty. For three years I had insisted, in season and out of season, that a man could believe what he pleased and say what he pleased on the silver question and still be a Democrat. In this way I reached the conclusion that I could consistently with duty and honor announce my candidacy subject to the action of the Democratic party. In doing so I distinctly

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 9944, to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, on which there are disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate; and I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. HAY as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that on account of the peculiar conditions existing, which it is unnecessary for me to more particularly refer to, the conferees have had an informal meeting and have agreed, and I submit the report of the conferees of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That can only be by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can come only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The report should be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment; and on page 2 of the bill, in line 14, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not to exceed 3,000 men;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
W. J. SEWELL,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of this depends upon the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope before consent is given we shall have some idea given us by written statement or otherwise as to the effect of this report.

Mr. HULL. There is a written statement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would like to hear the statement read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the Senate and House have agreed as follows:

1. Amendment numbered 1 of the Senate provides for two terms of enlistment, one for volunteers not organized into organizations under State laws for a term of three years and those organized under State laws for a term of one year. The Senate recedes from this proposition, and the agreement is that the entire enlistment of both classes shall be uniform for a period of two years.

2. The House agrees to amendment numbered 2, which provides for two assistant surgeons for each regiment of volunteers in place of one. This makes the number of assistant surgeons the same as we had during the civil war.

3. The third amendment of the Senate, which makes it imperative on the governors to appoint officers as they are now commissioned in the militia, the Senate recedes from, so that the governor may or may not appoint such officers, in his discretion.

4. The fourth amendment, authorizing the President to organize companies, troops, battalions, or regiments possessing special qualifications: The Senate recedes from its amendment and the conferees agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "and," in line 10, and inserting the words "not to exceed 3,000 men;" so that the President may organize such special organizations up to but not exceeding 3,000.

5. The fifth amendment is the rank of officers on the staff of corps commander; the House agrees to reduce the rank to lieutenant-colonel.

6. The sixth amendment provides for an engineer officer on the staff of the commander of a division.

7. The seventh amendment reduces the rank of staff officers of division commanders from lieutenant-colonel to major.

8. The eighth amendment adds an engineer officer to the staff of a brigade commander, from which the Senate recedes.

9. The ninth amendment adds one surgeon to the staff of a brigade commander, to which the House agrees.

10. The tenth amendment simply provides that the staff appointments terminate immediately upon the necessity for such details ceasing.

J. A. T. HULL,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded the reading, and I do not object. I think this is an improvement on the bill as it originally passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to enter my protest against amendment 4 as agreed to by the conferees. I think all the volunteer forces should be raised by a call upon the governors of the States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in regard to amendment 4, "not to exceed 3,000 men," I do not object to it, but I want it distinctly understood that that amendment is accepted on the understanding that these men are to be mustered out immediately upon the cessation of hostilities.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the bill as framed require the mustering out?

Mr. COX. I think it does, although not in as plain language as I wish it did.

Mr. HULL. I think there can be no question that under the terms of this bill every man enlisted under the bill will be mustered out.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The bill requires it?

Mr. HULL. Absolutely requires it.

The report of the conferees was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the request that I made yesterday for unanimous consent of the House that the contestant, Mr. Patterson, be heard in his own behalf, and I am willing that he should be allowed to speak at this time or immediately after a speech from the other side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are perfectly willing that the gentleman should proceed at once.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the contestant to address the House? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I now yield fifty-five minutes to the contestant, Mr. Patterson.

Mr. PATTERSON (the contestant). Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House for this opportunity. I have prepared what I desire to go into the RECORD, and as it will take every moment of the time allowed to me to present to the House what I have to say, and there is ample opportunity for the other side to reply, I shall not for that reason yield to interruptions during that time.

Mr. Speaker, he who stands on the banks of the Potomac when at high tide, with no object within the range of his vision but a whirlpool, may be deceived by appearances and imagine the current is running to its source; but when his vision has a wider sweep he is no longer deceived by the driftwood and knows its course is eastward to the sea.

So he who seeks the solution of a cause pregnant with important results to the individual litigants, or to the public, is often puzzled with doubt and uncertainty when looking only to the conflicting circumstances immediately surrounding the transaction. But when he looks beyond to the environments, about which there is no dispute, doubt is dispelled and the truth is transparent in the midst of contradictory testimony. Every important issue, whether to be determined in the tribunals of justice or in the halls of legislation, is always surrounded by undisputed facts which, when properly understood in their relations to the main fact, throw a flood of light upon it, laying bare the truth and justice of the case.

Be it known, I have been a Democrat from my youth up, until now my life measures three-score years. Always active in party service, prior to 1890 I was engaged in professional pursuits. In 1890, without solicitation on my part, I was nominated and elected without serious opposition to the Fifty-second Congress. I entered public life a pronounced Democrat and an earnest advocate of tariff reform. As tariff reform had been almost the sole issue in the three preceding Presidential campaigns, I had been a student of the question and had participated in its discussion. As the discussion of the silver question had not materially entered into any Presidential campaign, I had never given it serious consideration.

Without professing any knowledge of the subject, or so much as attempting its elucidation in any speech I had ever made, I assumed, like most of my colleagues from the South, that I was for free coinage, and so stated whenever I made reference to the subject. It was not considered by me a party issue. The contestee, at that time editor in chief of a daily newspaper published in Memphis, denied that it was a party issue, and bitterly denounced his party associates as "fanatics and maniacs" who were attempting to make it such.

The country recognizes in Grover Cleveland the foremost champion of a sound currency. Whatever may be the inconsistencies of others, he was known to all the world as an unflinching and consistent opponent of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. With a full knowledge of his record, Tennessee was the first State in the Union to demand his nomination in 1892. But for the persistent efforts of the delegations from the Southern States he could never have been nominated in the national convention over the opposition of his own State.

Shortly after the nomination, and before the campaign opened, the Senate passed a free coinage bill and sent it to the House. I voted against its consideration. Some of my Democratic colleagues took me to task. I was charged with materially aiding in the defeat of the measure, and the prediction was made that my action would result in my retirement to private life. But I had in the contestee a zealous if not an able defender. He not only denounced my assailants, but gave me unstinted praise. That fall I was returned to Congress by a majority of 5,376 over the candidate of the Farmers' Alliance. I had no Republican opponent.

When I returned to Washington in December, 1892, to attend the short session of the Fifty-second Congress, I was elated over the election of Mr. Cleveland. I rejoiced in a triumphant Democracy. I believed we had in Mr. Cleveland a great conservative leader who had the confidence of the entire country, and I thought I saw in the coming future a long era of Democratic ascendency.

It was at this juncture that I saw for the first time the danger signal. It was pointed out to me that prior to the passage of the Sherman law 90 per cent of all the duties collected on importations was paid in gold, and it was then less than 8 per cent. I realized a want of confidence in the stability of our currency not only pervaded our own but foreign markets. Day by day it became more apparent that nothing but the most prompt and patriotic action on the part of the President and Congress, giving our own people and the world to understand that the public credit was inviolable, would avert a great disaster. Day by day it became more apparent that while the Democrats had achieved a signal triumph at the polls on the tariff question, now that they had assumed the responsibilities of government they were hopelessly divided on a question of far greater moment which directly threatened the public credit and the welfare of the people in all the walks of life.

On the day that Grover Cleveland delivered his inaugural address the receipts of gold at the custom-houses had fallen to less than 4 per cent of the amount collected. As I witnessed the scene and saw the cutting sleet beat into his face, I thought it was symbolical of that other storm which was soon to burst over his head. How he stood erect in that great emergency, undaunted by faction or loss of party prestige, for the honor of his country and the welfare of his countrymen, let history determine. It was during this period I unselfishly and assiduously devoted myself to the study of the financial problem. I tried to find the path of duty and patriotism as best I could. No student ever studied a problem under more favorable conditions.

As I progressed I saw the abstractions of science daily illuminated by the commercial transactions transpiring throughout the country. I saw the man of affairs by actual experience arriving at the same conclusion in his countingroom which the scholar by abstract reasoning reached in the privacy of his library. I was thus engaged when the intelligence came that India had closed her mints to silver, resulting in that commodity taking a wild leap downward in the market. I daily witnessed that not a dollar of gold was going through the custom-houses into the Treasury; and then I saw our country, like a stranded ship, go down into the vortex of a great financial maelstrom. I arose from that investigation thoroughly convinced that it was utterly impracticable for this country, or any other country, to throw open its mints to the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver and hope thereby to secure and maintain the bimetallic standard.

I was then and am now unalterably convinced that it is impossible. I believed then and believe now that the attempt would result in silver monometallism. I thought then and think now that it would be a frightful calamity to the country and to all the people of the country for the United States, in the face of civilization and the enlightened opinion of mankind, to abandon the gold and adopt the silver standard.

It seems that contestee studied the problem and arrived at the same conclusion, for on the 26th day of July, 1893, he wrote:

> The Commercial has not advocated and does not advocate the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the present ratio. The Commercial believes in the utilization of both metals in our currency, but it recognizes that it is not possible for this country to maintain the parity of the gold and silver dollar at the present ratio.

At the extra session of Congress in 1893 I voted to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law and against the free coinage of silver. Subsequently I voted for and advocated every measure which looked to the establishment of the country more firmly on a gold basis, for the improvement and extension of our banking facilities, and for opening the way for a permanent place in our circulation for silver by making it our only money below the denomination of $10.

In the meantime I adhered to the doctrine taught by contestee, that the free coinage of silver was not a party issue or a test of any man's democracy. On the final passage of the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law I made a short speech, in which I said it was not a test of party fealty, but a scientific problem about which Democrats differed and had the right to differ. I claimed the right to remain in the party organization and there to advocate my views on the question, and I freely conceded the same right to Democrats who differed from me.

In 1894 I was opposed for the nomination by a free-silver advocate of marked ability, and after a long canvass, in which I distinctly advocated the cause of sound money, I was nominated in the primaries by a majority of 2,300 and was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by a majority of 4,696 over my Republican competitor, Mr. J. W. Brown, who testifies in my behalf that my election was conceded by the Republicans, who made no serious effort to defeat me.

After my election in 1894, down to the nomination of Mr. Bryan at Chicago in 1896, I persistently advocated the cause of sound money. I was principally instrumental in calling the sound-money convention which met at Memphis in May, 1895. It was the first nonpartisan convention called to consider the financial question, and it was composed of men whose presence would reflect honor on any country or any cause. Subsequently the advocates of free coinage had a convention at Memphis in which the free-silver Democrats and Populists made their first coalition. It was there that the bimetallic league was conceived which was afterwards organized here in Washington. Up to the meeting of the national convention at Chicago I did all any man of my capacity could do to prevent a declaration in favor of free coinage, but the Bimetallic League had its way and the adoption of what is known as the Chicago platform and the nomination of Bryan was the result.

In the meantime contestee had veered with the popular tide. He is singularly gifted in the use of vituperative adjectives and adverbs. The fulsomeness of his praise is only equaled by the fierceness of his denunciation. At all times and under all circumstances he is a stranger to moderation and forbearance. At one time the leaders of the silver movement were "fanatics and maniacs," bent on the destruction of the Democratic party; now they were the paragons of wisdom and the possessors of every public virtue. At one time Mr. Cleveland was an ideal statesman in whose leadership he rejoiced unceasingly; and now he was the "Buffalo Hangman." At one time he gave me unmeasured praise for voting against the consideration of a free coinage bill; and now I had betrayed my trust and my party.

At one time he was cyclonic in his denunciation of the Populists, and hurled at them every epithet in his vocabulary; and now he wooed them as softly as a cooing dove. He tortured Altgeld, Debs, and Sovereign during the Chicago riots to the extent that men can be tortured with pen and ink; and now he was ready to make them an apology as obsequious as the torture had been cruel. A delegate from the State at large to the Chicago convention, he exulted in the work it accomplished. There was no limit to the ardor of his zeal. In a vision he saw Lombard and Wall streets "crucifying mankind on a cross of gold," and he determined to go to the rescue.

In that great emergency he intuitively saw that deliverance would never come until he could secure for his country the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, overthrow government by injunction, inaugurate Bryan as President, and secure for himself a seat on this floor as the representative of "crucified mankind." After the adjournment of the convention he immediately returned to Memphis, and declared himself a candidate for Congress. It is needless to say that every Democrat who did not adopt his new-born faith was now a traitor to the party.

At this juncture, I was disheartened. To me the action of the Chicago convention was an appalling political mistake. Personally I was disposed to follow the example of Turner of Georgia, and go at once to private life. This perhaps would have been the wiser course. But there were thousands of Democrats in the district who believed with me and insisted on my candidacy. I could not bring myself to the conclusion that it was my duty to get out of the Democratic organization. I believed with others that the Chicago platform was a miscarriage. I thought it was a mistake that could be and would be corrected. I never realized the extent and permanency of the movement and that it was a situation beyond control.

On the other hand, I could not yield my convictions on a subject so paramount in importance and so far-reaching in its results. I had persistently clung to the idea that it was not a party question or a test of party fealty. For three years I had insisted, in season and out of season, that a man could believe what he pleased and say what he pleased on the silver question and still be a Democrat. In this way I reached the conclusion that I could consistently with duty and honor announce my candidacy subject to the action of the Democratic party. In doing so I distinctly announced my disapproval of the nomination of Bryan and my uncompromising opposition to the financial plank in the Chicago platform.

In this way did I collide with the contestee in the Tenth Congressional district of Tennessee. It comprises Fayette, Hardeman, Shelby and Tipton counties. By the census of 1890, Fayette had a population of 28,878; Hardeman 21,020; Shelby 112,740, and Tipton 24,271. This preponderance of Shelby, owing to the growth of Memphis, is much greater now than it was then, but at that time it had 38,571 more population than the other three counties combined. It had more than twice the white population and a large majority of the Democratic voters of the district. It was the declared policy of the party in the district to make nominations for Congress by means of a primary election. This was done in 1894. My friends were naturally very much in favor of a primary, first, because of the preponderating vote of Shelby, and, secondly, because in the event a convention was called, the three country counties would inevitably defeat my nomination under the two-thirds rule which obtains in Democratic conventions. For the same reasons the friends of contestee were opposed to a primary.

The district committee was composed of five members, three of whom were sound-money and two of whom were free-silver Democrats. When the committee met to take action it was known that a majority were in favor of a primary. Prior to that time my friends had approached the friends of contestee with a proposition to the effect that we would consent to a primary in which none but known Democrats should be allowed to vote, with the understanding that each one of us should have a judge and clerk of election of our own choosing at each voting place. This offer was rejected.

When the committee met, the two free-silver members retired from its deliberations and thereupon the majority of the committee ordered a primary in which Populists and free-silver Republicans were excluded from participation, and none but known Democrats were allowed to vote. At that primary I was the only candidate and was nominated by 5,600 votes.

The two free-silver members of the committee, after they withdrew, proceeded to arbitrarily, and without the semblance of right, appoint three free-silver Democrats to take the place of the three sound-money Democrats, and this revolutionary and illegal committee called a convention. In making the call all party lines were obliterated and all men without regard to color or past party affiliations who would agree to support the nominee of the convention were invited to participate in the selection of delegates, and were eligible to election as delegates. The contestee was nominated by a convention thus constituted.

I have now derived my title and the title of contestee to the nomination, and I do not hesitate to say that I held the commission of the party organization. I say that no fair-minded or just man can read the record and come to any other conclusion. The only pretext for discrediting my nomination is grounded on the assumption that every sound-money Democrat is disqualified to hold a commission in the party and was by reason of his opinions beyond the pale of the organization.

Some two weeks after my nomination by the Organized Democracy the Republican Congressional convention was held at Memphis. When I was 50 miles away canvassing in the country, for reasons of its own, distinctly set out in its platform, that convention indorsed my candidacy with great unanimity. It recognized me as a Democrat by expressly declaring it would not make a nomination. It was a choice between contestee and myself. The reasons assigned in its platform for its action were that my friends were in favor of fair elections, and I was a sound-money advocate. I made no concessions to it and it made none to me. The Democratic organization which nominated me and the Republican organization which indorsed my candidacy each had its own campaign committee and operated independently. No overture was made by either organization to the other, and the transaction was alike honorable to both.

It was now that the fortunes of contestee waned. He who had returned in triumph from Chicago a few short weeks before was now sinking under the tide of Republican as well as Democratic opposition. With him it was "help me, Cassius, or I sink." Who in this emergency could sustain him like Bryan? Bryan had no scruples about party regularity. With an utter disregard of the traditions and associations of the past and an utter abandonment of party alignments, policies, and principles, he had succeeded in molding the advocates of free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 into one great political organization of which he was the chosen leader. On the battle flag of one division of this grand army was inscribed the motto, "Free silver and protection;" on another, "Free silver and free trade;" on another, "Free silver and government ownership of railroads;" on another, "Free silver and the overthrow of government by injunction;" while on the guidon of the commander in chief was inscribed "Free silver the paramount issue."

Bryan was as swift as the wind in coming to the relief of contestee. In his speech at Memphis, after delivering a panegyric on contestee, he said:

> If we are right in the position we have taken, if the Democratic party is right in its platform, then the man who does not stand upon that platform, no matter how good a Democrat he may have been before, is no Democrat now; and no man can claim to be a friend of mine who says he wants to elect me because I am the regular nominee and then tie my hands and make me powerless.

No man can misunderstand the significance and importance of this language. I am not finding fault with Mr. Bryan. Whatever else may be said of him, he has been consistent and faithful to his ideals. First elected to Congress in 1890 by a coalition of Democrats and Populists, he voted for Weaver in 1892, and was recognized in Congress more as a Populist than as a Democrat. Prior to the Chicago Convention he had publicly and defiantly declared at Jackson, Miss., that he would not support the nominee of that convention in the event it adopted a platform in favor of the gold standard. As he was then the nominee of that convention he took no backward step, and proceeded to remorselessly excommunicate every Democrat who was not for the free coinage of silver.

The effect of this speech in the district was instantaneous and far-reaching. The free-silver Democrats who were supporting me on account of the regularity of my nomination almost to a man abandoned me and transferred their support to contestee, while a very large proportion of the sound-money Democrats abandoned Bryan and voted directly for McKinley. The city of Memphis, which usually went from 3,500 to 4,000 Democratic, gave a majority for McKinley, and he received in the district 7,526 more votes than did General Harrison in 1892.

And yet such was my fealty to the Democratic organization that I stood at my post in the party ranks exactly where I stood in 1894, and all I claimed was the right to maintain my convictions and denounce what I believed to be a grave party mistake. I saw 1,500,000 Democrats break ranks and vote for McKinley in order to avoid what they regarded as a great impending disaster. I saw a Democratic President and every member of his Cabinet withhold their support from Mr. Bryan. I saw every Democrat to whom the party looked for leadership five short years before driven from its councils. I saw Mr. Bryan, the nominee of the party for the Presidency, go into the district and appeal to Democrats to repudiate me and vote against me, notwithstanding the regularity of my nomination. I saw both of the electors for the State at large and the district elector canvass the district against me. I saw the State committee, acting on the advice of Mr. Bryan, repudiate my nomination and indorse the candidacy of contestee.

In short, I saw the free-silver organization composed of Democrats, Populists, and free-silver Republicans ruthlessly trample under foot party ties and associations, and under the leadership of Mr. Bryan ride roughshod over every Democrat who dared to protest. And I, in the midst of these environments, still delusively hugging the hope to my heart that the time for reconsideration in the councils of the party would come, went to the polls and for the sake of regularity voted for every elector on the Bryan ticket.

No honest man with my convictions could do more to maintain his party relations. But alas! how delusive the hope, how vain the sacrifice! I am at last brought face to face with the alternative where I must surrender my convictions on a great public question involving the welfare of my country or bow my neck to the headsman. I will never capitulate; I accept the inevitable.

The canvass proceeded to its close on the lines which Bryan himself had drawn. If it was fierce, prescriptive, and harsh, Bryan had so willed it. If Democrats were divided into factions fiercely inveighing against each other, Bryan would have it so. The order had gone forth to castigate every sound-money Democrat until he bowed in submission to the Bryan knout or in despair broke away from his party affiliations. There was to be no toleration for dissenters, and every Democrat, however old or however scarred in the party service, had to embrace the Chicago creed or go to the stake.

The sound-money Democrats and Republicans had a large majority in the district, and the defeat of contestee was inevitable if a fair election could be secured. Bryan's speech had prepared the way for the employment of desperate means to accomplish desperate ends.

In view of the very able, impartial, and judicial presentation of the case by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Judge KIRKPATRICK], in the majority report, and his argument and that of his associate [Mr. COCHRANE], before the House, I shall not attempt in the brief time alloted to me to discuss the facts of this case. I will content myself with briefly calling the attention of the House to a few salient facts incontestably established by the proof.

1. The sound-money Democratic vote in the district was large. Mr. Thomas G. Boggs, the secretary of the Sound Money League, a gentleman of high character and great intelligence, with better opportunities for information, perhaps, than any other man in Memphis, testified that the league had a membership of 2,000, 80 per cent of whom were Democrats. He also testifies that the Patterson Democratic Club had a membership of 3,500; and that in Memphis, a city of 100,000 people, 75 per cent of the men engaged in banking, commercial, manufacturing, and professional pursuits, were my supporters. I was nominated, when there was no other candidate, in a Democratic primary by 5,600 votes.

2. The record is replete with proof that the election machinery in the district was in the hands of contestee's partisans, and my friends were untiring in their efforts to secure for me representation at the polls. And the evidence is clear that they were denied representation at every voting place where fraud is charged in counting the vote as cast.

3. The record shows, and the majority of the committee so find, that I was actually elected by a majority of 36 on the face of the returns; and contestee secured the certificate of election from the governor because the sheriff of Fayette County, an intense and reckless partisan of contestee, who did not dare to go on the stand to testify in his behalf, refused to receive one return from Galloway, in said county, wherein it was shown that I received 247 votes, and another return from Oakland, in the same county, wherein it was shown I received 154. If these returns had been forwarded to the governor, as it was his duty to do, instead of contestee being apparently elected on the face of the returns by a majority of 365, I would have been elected on the face of the returns by a majority of 36.

4. In the tenth district of Tipton County, where the sound-money Democrats were especially intelligent and alert, the proof shows I received 212 votes and contestee 41, and the officers of election, all of whom were unscrupulous partisans of contestee, reversed the returns, giving contestee 212 and me 41 votes. This crime was confessed by one of the judges to an unimpeachable citizen of the county after the returns were made out and before they were sent to the governor, and the confession was wrung from him because the evidence disclosed in the record pointed irresistibly to the truth of the admission.

5. Contestee's partisans had resolved that mankind should not be "crucified on a cross of gold," and so in their desperation they applied these methods without regard to race or color. At Braden all the colored Republicans except 3 declined to vote at that box, and so none but the sound-money Democrats were caught in the trap. The proof shows conclusively that 14 white men of the highest respectability, including the principal citizens of the place, and 3 colored men voted for me. They allowed me 4 votes in the returns and counted the other 13 for contestee. The commission of this crime was so transparently proven in the record that it was admitted by contestee's counsel in the argument before the committee. In district 9, at Mason, the colored Republicans declined to vote at that box and voted at another box in the same district. The proof shows that 16 white men voted scratched tickets; 4 voted for the Palmer and Buckner electors, and 6 for B. F. Sherrod, the sound-money candidate for Representative; and not a scratched ticket, a vote for Palmer and Buckner, or for Sherrod, ever came out of that box. The colored judge, who had sense enough to know he could not protect my interest, testified that another judge, after the polls closed, under pretense that his feet were cold, took the cigar box in which the ballots were deposited into another room where there was no fire, and there the counting was done. He explains by saying that the picture on the cigar box from which the counting was done was not like the picture on the cigar box in which the ballots were deposited. It is useless to add that the judge whose feet were cold did not testify on behalf of contestee.

6. There are 7 other voting places involved in this contest, there being 12 in all. I will not go into particulars further than to call the attention of the House to the fact that up to these contested precincts, all of which were normally Republican, I had beaten contestee in the balance of the Congressional district 1,207 votes. In these Republican precincts, where the commission of fraud was predicted weeks before the election; where my friends persistently sought representation at the polls, and where it was in every instance denied, contestee, after the returns from Galloway and Oakland had been suppressed by the sheriff of Fayette County, had enough votes counted for him to overcome my majority of 1,207 in the balance of the district and give him a majority on the face of the returns of 365. Had his partisans taken up arms on the morning of the election and driven from the polls every sound-money Democrat and every Republican at each of the 12 voting places involved in this contest, I would have beaten him by a substantial majority. That he holds the seat by virtue of the votes of sound-money Democrats and Republicans cast for me and counted for him is beyond controversy with any fair-minded student of this record.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is a legislative and not a judicial body. I have therefore congratulated myself that the record in this case was referred to a subcommittee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Judge Kirkpatrick) was chairman. A stranger to me, I never knew his mind until his conclusions were announced to his associates. I now know he has been painstaking, exhaustive, and judicial in his study of the case. This is especially gratifying to me in view of the fact that political importance has been attached to this contest. It is useless to disguise the fact that the advocates of sound money would be glad to know I had a good case; and the advocates of free coinage would be glad to know I had a bad one. The asperities which have grown out of the contest I regret, but I know he who would avoid asperities in public life must have flexible convictions. I have been represented on one side of the House as an extreme partisan Democrat, and on the other as one who has gone over to the Republican party. These representations are made for a purpose and they are not true. I wish to say in all candor that I am not conscious of any material modification or change in my political opinions.

In the better days of the contestee and before he discovered anybody was pressing a "crown of thorns on the brow of labor," he stated in an editorial, dated December 2, 1892, after Mr. Cleveland was elected and before he was inaugurated:

> The currency question is not a political issue. It does not touch any of the essential principles upon which the two great parties are divided. It is nonsense to say that a man who believes in a strict construction of the Constitution, who holds to Jeffersonian principles as to the functions of government, who is opposed to centralization, and who is in favor of local self-government is not a Democrat because he believes that it would be dangerous for the country to undertake alone the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

By that standard I am every inch a Democrat.

Bryan, on the contrary, says the man who does not believe in the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 by this country independently of all other nations is "no Democrat now."

By that standard I am not a Democrat. If Bryan is to be accepted as the Democratic Messiah and the Chicago platform is to be accepted as the Democratic plan of salvation, then I utterly disbelieve in the one and utterly repudiate the other. I know Bryan and his followers have absolute control of the Democratic organization and will remain in control of it until after the next presidential election. I have no doubt Bryan will be again nominated on the Chicago platform, or a platform even more objectionable. I realize that the forces marshalled behind him are formidable and may possibly carry the country. I recognize the fact that in making silver the paramount issue and in bringing otherwise discordant organizations under his standard, Bryan and his associates from the standpoint of political expediency have managed their affairs with great skill and adroitness. I further accept as true the inevitable result that these discordant organizations are utterly powerless to bring about tariff reform or to accomplish the adoption of any other Democratic measure until after the "paramount issue" has been disposed of. So far as I am concerned, without taking the time to count the number or reckon the cost, I will take my stand with the sound-money Democrats who do not indorse Bryanism and who believe its approval by the country would be extremely disastrous to the public welfare. With them I will take council and abide their resolution.

Personally I believe an alignment of the sound-money forces is desirable. It is useless to disguise the fact that the sound money Democrats are now in the minority. They can not hope to hold the offices or to assume directly the responsibilities of government. However, by virtue of their number, intelligence, and patriotism they hold the balance of power. Teller is not a Democrat, Jones is not a Populist, and Butler is not a Republican. And yet Teller, Jones, and Butler marshal their forces under the leadership of Bryan, the great political three in one, for the single purpose of reversing the order of civilization by discarding the gold and adopting the silver standard. On the other hand, the Republican party has gone forward and occupied the ground held by the late Democratic Administration by explicitly declaring for the maintenance of the gold standard and the stability and parity of our currency. This is the exact and only issue. We can accomplish nothing in the one direction but silver monometalism, and in the other it is in our power to place the United States on an enduring financial basis. The issue is single, but it is momentous. To vote as we believe does not make us Republicans any more than voting as they do makes the free silver Republicans Democrats. It would be just as logical to insist that the Republican party was Democratic because, differing with Mr. Cleveland in most things, it agrees with him substantially on the financial question, as it would be to say that the sound money Democrats are Republicans because, differing with the Republican party in most things, they agree with it on the so-called "paramount issue."

Wellington was not a Prussian, Blucher was not an Englishman, but Wellington and Blucher won the battle of Waterloo; and so in view of the situation which confronts the country I see no reason why the sound-money Democrats and the sound-money Republicans marshaled under their respective standards should not accept the issue so defiantly tendered and go forward in their allied strength to deliver the Republic from the danger which menaces it. The danger passed, we may then hope, but not until then, for a reorganization of the Democratic party on the lines laid down by its founders.

Mr. Speaker, I have done with this miserable business. The record shows that personally I preferred the private station to a seat on this floor acquired at the end of a contest. I saw the annoyance, the vexation, and the humiliation through which I would have to pass. My own happiness and the happiness of my family did not lie in that direction. It is a path I would have shunned. I was a peer on this floor for six years and in that time I made many valued friends. When I saw these friends converted into judges to pass on my conduct and motives, I avoided them from a sense of delicacy and propriety. And yet, connected with my attitude before the country, I find something to give me gratification. Men like contestee and myself, in the busy activities of American life, can only attract public attention for an hour. Once seen and we are lost forever in the ungarnered reputations of our times. And yet there are those who will remember us and treasure our good deeds and wish to forget our evil ones. Our children and our children's children are always interested in our history. When I look back on my brief and inconspicuous public career I am not ashamed of the legacy I leave my children. An ex-Confederate soldier and representing a district from the South that was intensely Confederate during the war, I have without apology for the past and without compromising its sacred memories on all occasions attempted to feel and think and act as an American citizen who saw in the welfare of the whole country the happiness and prosperity of every part of it.

When the panic of 1893 came with all its distress and accompanying complexities, I did not pause to learn the current of public opinion, but I tried to investigate the cause and did that which I believed was best for the country. I thought I saw in the free-silver propaganda not only a menace to commercial prosperity, but a menace to the public credit and the national honor. I have done what I could to prevent either being sullied. When, to my great sorrow, I saw a large majority of my own party take a different course, instead of surrendering my convictions I have maintained them and done my utmost to prevent what I believed would be a catastrophe to the party and the country. I believe in party fealty, but I believe in fealty to country first. Whether right or wrong, I believed I was right and I am willing to take the consequences of my belief. Whether right or wrong, I do not believe the present attitude of the Democratic party on the financial question, which it asserts, and which I think is paramount in importance to all others, is one that will redound to the honor of the country, the maintenance of the public credit, or the general welfare of the people, and I am willing to take the consequences of my unbelief. Those who are so eager to retire me to private life are not more anxious to accomplish their purpose than I am to go.

What I have done in the past has been from a sense of duty, and not from the love of place, and in my future conduct I hope to be inspired by the same motive. All that I ask from those who so radically differ from me is to believe I think I am right on a great public question which concerns the welfare of our country, and that while I think so I will have the patriotism to say so, and to maintain my convictions even at the cost of my political fortunes. I take some pride in this. I look to the future to vindicate my course, but whether it will or not, I am persuaded a man who holds fast to the truth as God has given him light to see it does not live in vain. Difficulties may bristle in his pathway, faction may hawk and tear at him, and he may suffer the keenest of all regrets which follow the stab of timid and recanting friends, but there is joy in the consciousness that error will ultimately perish and truth will survive forever. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

[Mr. ALLEN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9944) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has as much time as he desires, in the time of this side. How much time is left to the minority, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. One hour and twenty-two minutes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is only as a matter of justice to my constituents and against my own inclination that I consume the time of this House. I should rather prefer that the House would proceed with all possible swiftness to the final act of this little drama, and ring down the curtain as quickly as may be on the closing scene. Whatever may be the action of this House, it will be but a trifling incident in the country's history, and of no transcendent importance even in my own. While the world stands every day will have its to-morrow, and I am not yet so old that I need grieve for the event of one little hour. If this term in Congress represented to me, as possibly it does to another, the last floating fragment of a shipwrecked ambition, I might clutch at it with desperate eagerness and contemplate its loss with agony of soul. Such, I am proud to say, is not my condition.

So far as my individual political fortunes are involved in this contest, if I know my own heart, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely indifferent to the issue. There is another and a higher tribunal which will review these proceedings and sit in solemn judgment upon your verdict. If this House shall decide against my right, to the arbitrament of that great tribunal I shall make my appeal. It is within the power of this House, by a mere act of force, to strip a member of his commission. It is not within its power to take from him the respect of his neighbors, his constituents, his friends. It may, by the same act of force, bestow that commission as a gift from its own hands upon another, but it can not bind up with the gift the esteem and confidence of his people at home. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is a possession, gentlemen of this House, which it is not yours to give nor yours to take away. I had rather lose this seat, having obtained it, as I believe, by the honest, unbought suffrages of my countrymen, than to receive it as the gift of this House, having been denied it by my people at home. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I had rather be stripped bare of all official honors and go back to the plain people from whom I sprung than to barter their respect and confidence for the meretricious splendors of a passing hour. [Renewed applause.] I had rather remain forever on a common level with the great mass of my countrymen than to creep and crawl to some petty eminence of official power and from there look down on an outraged and indignant people. [Applause.]

That man, Mr. Speaker, has lived too long who lives to despise the plain people by whose strong arms he was lifted up, over whose shoulders he has climbed to greatness; who, in his declining years, in the evening of his life, seeks to barter the honest loyalty of his lifelong friends for a sordid, selfish, and precarious alliance with his lifelong enemies. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, there may be advantages in such a situation which my poor mind can not discern; but to me it seems that there is no object in this world more to be pitied than the man who abandons the friends of his youth and the home of his childhood to become a despised and distrusted menial in a stranger's house. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If such a man have not the heart of a courtier or a slave; if he was not born to

> Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
> Where thrift may follow fawning;

if his soul be not utterly dead within him, there must come a time when he will look down with shame on his present condition and look back with longing to the friends he has deserted and the people he has betrayed. No matter with what Brummagem glitter and tinsel pomp he may be surrounded, the time will surely come when, like the captive Jew amid the splendors of a foreign land, he will sit him down by the waters of Babylon and weep when he remembers Zion. What shall he do then, Mr. Speaker, when those who have taken him captive require of him a song? How can he sing the Lord's songs in a stranger's land?

Oh, Mr. Speaker, he must learn to chant hymns to his conqueror in a foreign speech and babble the praises of his master in an alien tongue. [Applause.] But even this is not all, nor the worst. He must drink the cup of humiliation to the very dregs. He must turn with bitterness upon his own country. He must become the accuser of his own friends; in that last and lowest depth of his descent, in which all pride and self-respect have perished utterly, he must learn to malign the land where his mother rocked his cradle and slander the people among whom he was born. [Applause.] A few years ago the contestant stood in his place in this House and denounced as false and slanderous a tirade of abuse against the people of his own district.

He stands here to-day to repeat the very accusations he then denounced, against the very people he then defended, amid the plaudits of the very accusers he then opposed. [Renewed applause.] It is hard, Mr. Speaker, to believe that it is the same person who has appeared in these two rôles; and yet in all essential particulars they are one and the same. When this contestant ceased to rant about negro domination and began to cant about purity of elections, he changed his methods without changing his character. I say to the honorable gentleman, the mere fact that he has added his voice to that of the defamers of his people lends neither truth nor dignity to the slander. He can not elevate to a plane of respectability the calumniators of his country, though he may easily and by a very short step descend to their level.

I stand here, sir, to repel the assaults made upon my people from whatsoever quarter they may come; to refute the accusations against their honor and good name by whatsoever lips they may be uttered; and having done that, I am ready to accept with a light heart whatever verdict the House may choose to record. Side by side with that verdict shall stand the testimony and the law, which shall vindicate or put to shame the action of this House. [Applause.]

It has been said, Mr. Speaker, with grave injustice I hope, that every step in the trial of a contested-election case is but a mockery of law and of legal procedure; that at last the question is decided upon considerations of party interest or of party prejudice, and that all these tedious and costly proceedings are but barren and empty formalities, the mere husks and shucks of the law, in which there is no kernel of justice and no grain of right.

If I should assume, Mr. Speaker, as I do not and shall not, that the dominant party in this House would be controlled by such considerations, that it would be influenced by some sense of political obligation incurred, that it would be governed by the absurd and preposterous belief that a political or party advantage is to be gained by seating this contestant, then I should have frankly to admit that I have nothing which I can oppose to such a motive. I must frankly say to this House that in the last campaign, with all my heart and soul, I supported the nominees and the platform of the Chicago convention. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I expect to do the same thing in 1900. [Renewed applause.]

Politically speaking, there is not and can not be any common ground between myself and the majority of this House. I can not come to you and say that in the last campaign, while I publicly proclaimed myself a supporter of the regular Democratic organization, I was secretly false to my public professions. I can not appeal to you on the ground that, while I was a Democrat every day, I was a Republican every night. I can not appeal to you by saying that, while I proclaimed myself a supporter of Bryan at the front door, I was for McKinley in the back alley. [Laughter.] A man can not be the kind of a Democrat I am, Mr. Speaker, and aid the Republican party any more than he can be the kind of Republican you are and aid the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

I shall not assume, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, that this House will be governed or influenced by any such considerations; but such is not, and has not been, the assumption upon which this contestant has proceeded. From the very beginning of this contest he has made his appeal, not to the law, not to the evidence, not to a sense of right and justice upon the part of this House, but to the very personification of party spirit and of party power. He has made his appeal from the very beginning to a tribunal unknown to the Constitution and the law.

Mr. Speaker, about three days after the election—on the 6th day of November, I believe it was—the contestant published an interview in an afternoon paper in Memphis, in which he said he had not yet decided whether or not to prosecute this contest; that the people were annoying him on every street corner to make known what his intentions were, and he begged them in this interview to wait a day or two until he could receive the advice and counsel of certain friends before making up his mind. A few hours after that something occurred, some fact transpired, that caused the gentleman to suddenly come to a conclusion, and he prepared another statement, which was published in the morning paper, announcing his purpose to prosecute this contest to the bitter end.

It so happened, Mr. Speaker, that upon the same day there appeared an Associated Press dispatch from New York containing an interview with the Hon. John R. Fellows, saying he had just called upon the Hon. MARK HANNA and appealed to him to come to the relief of the Hon. Josiah Patterson in the contest he was about to prosecute for my seat. [Laughter.] About the time, Mr. Speaker, when this contestant was travailing in an agony of doubt and uncertainty, appealing to his hot and importunate partisans not to press him to an immediate decision, but to wait, wait until he could hear from certain friends whose names and whose habitations he did not give—about that time, perhaps at that very hour, the Hon. John R. Fellows, of New York, was closeted with the Hon. MARK HANNA, of Ohio, appealing to that omnipotent and universal Warwick to come to the relief of the Hon. Josiah Patterson, of Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, these things may have been mere coincidences, but there was what Mr. Blaine used to call "a suspicious contemporaneousness" in the proceedings; and that suspicion will be deepened if we follow the honorable gentleman to the city of Washington and see him here pursuing the same eminent individual, dogging his footsteps like a shadow and clinging to his person like an undergarment. [Laughter.] Let us see him especially on the day after that great Senatorial election in Ohio, which gave new life to the Republican party and established the Almighty on his throne [laughter]; let us see him on that day ascending the steps of the White House, and let us see him meeting there the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR. Let us see him take that gentleman in his arms and say to him: "GROSVENOR, I am just going up to see the President and tell him that there is no Republican in the country that rejoices as much over Senator HANNA'S election as I do." [Laughter and applause.]

Then let us see him again, Mr. Speaker, a few moments afterwards, appealing to two newspaper correspondents who had been interested witnesses of this unguarded ebullition—let us see him appealing to them tearfully and prayerfully and frantically, for God's sake, not to publish this moving incident, because it would ruin him in Tennessee—"For God's sake, don't let the people at home know that I have been caught in a compromising position with the Hon. MARK HANNA." [Laughter.]

Gentlemen on the Republican side, that is the man. If you want him, take him. If you can make him useful in your business, you are welcome to him. [Laughter.] I mention these facts, Mr. Speaker, in order to show the desperate methods resorted to by this contestant to obtain a seat in this House. He invoked the magic name of Bryan to carry him through a Democratic constituency.

He is now invoking the magic name of HANNA to carry him through a Republican House. When he gets through here and some new exigency or new necessity confronts him, God knows what he will do.

Mr. Speaker, the contestant and myself must both go back to the Tenth district of Tennessee; we must there fight out our differences; and I say to him the time will come when it will be said of him, as was once said of another and, if possible, a greater man, "This man might have been spared if he had not appealed unto Cæsar." [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss more elaborately the details of this case, I wish to direct a few remarks to some of the speeches that have been made on this floor. I shall not stop to discuss the remarkable production written and read upon the floor by the contestant himself. So far as I could gather its meaning, it seemed to be chiefly an essay upon the personal pronoun and the single gold standard—what "I" have done, what "I" think, what "I" am going to do, and what "I" am. [Laughter and applause.] I shall not attempt to discuss that remarkable essay, but I wish to direct a few remarks to the speech made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

I always tremble, Mr. Speaker, at the thought of confronting so valiant a tongue slugger and so accomplished a lip artist as the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] His prowess in this arena entitles him to be regarded as the veritable "blue-gum nigger" of debate, an oratorical scorpion whose tongue is his tail. [Laughter.] In the course of that gentleman's criticism upon myself, my distinguished friend from Nebraska interrupted him to say that I had reformed but the gentleman from Ohio had not. Mr. Speaker, it will be a very sad day for reform if he ever does. I feel about the gentleman from Ohio a good deal like an old colored preacher down in Tipton County, in my district, felt about a certain convert. This preacher had just concluded a powerful exhortation and the voices of the congregation were quavering on the second line of that good old hymn—

While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

It was just at this juncture that a particularly tough old reprobate, with chicken feathers all over his head, got up in the back part of the audience and started toward the altar. The preacher for one moment stood speechless and aghast with horror, then, throwing up his hands, he exclaimed at the top of his voice, "Deacon Simmons, for Gawd's sake blow out de lamp." [Laughter.] If the honorable gentleman from Ohio should ever show a disposition to reform and come in our direction, I want to "blow out the lamp" before he gets there.

The gentleman from Ohio says that "politics sometimes make strange bedfellows." They do indeed. We do not need to be reminded of that fact when we see the white beard of the distinguished statesman from Ohio gleaming above the coverlid side by side with the illuminated countenance of this contestant. [Laughter.]

It seems but yesterday that the gentleman from Ohio was denouncing the contestant upon this floor as a "political guerrilla" and a "political tramp." In his character of tramp the contestant has at last arrived at the hospitable door of the gentleman from Ohio. I trust the gentleman will make him saw wood for his dinner. [Laughter.]

The gentleman saw fit to read certain editorials of mine—editorials written in 1892—in which I opposed making the silver question the dominant issue of that campaign. It is true, Mr. Speaker—and I am at the confessional now, confessing all my sins as well as proclaiming all my virtues [laughter]—it is true that at that time I was a somewhat blind and enthusiastic supporter of Grover Cleveland, while the gentleman from Ohio and his leader, Mr. McKinley, were denouncing him because of his hostility to silver and his support of that monster iniquity, the single gold standard. I am sorry I did not receive to my heart the warnings uttered by the gentleman from Ohio then. I am sorry he has forgotten them now. [Laughter.]

As to what the gentleman has said about my opposition to the Populists, I will simply say that we have had our fight and buried our differences. The Populist nominee for Congress in 1892 and the Populist nominee for Congress in 1894 stumped the district for me in 1896. I will say further that at the time these editorials were published both the contestant and myself were making war upon the principles of the Populist platform.

We went together before the Populists of Tennessee and appealed to them to lay aside their vagaries with respect to the subtreasury bill and the land-loan scheme and come and unite with us, and we would both stand by them for the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the proposition that he and I made to them from every stump in Tennessee. In 1896 they accepted our proposition, and I have manfully stood by the promise I made, but this contestant has not. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the facts and the law of this case have been argued so clearly and so ably by my distinguished friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE] and my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] that I feel as if I were traveling over a beaten track and repeating a twice-told tale. But there are certain general considerations which I wish to present because they bear strongly on the inherent probabilities of the case and are necessary to a clear understanding of its merits. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], as well as the contestant and his counsel, lays a great deal of stress upon the claim that the contestant was the regular nominee of the Democratic party.

Through page after page of his printed brief he denounces me as a bolter and a disorganizer and claims that he was the regularly chosen candidate of the regular Democratic organization—the same organization of which William J. Bryan, whom he claims to have supported, was the Presidential nominee. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, he refused to enter into a joint discussion with me on the express ground that I was a bolter and that such discussion would tend to create disaffection in the ranks of the regular Democracy and make possible the loss of Tennessee to the State and national Democracy.

He was so much afraid that Bryan would lose some votes! He took the Democratic organization under his special care and protection. He was the protector, the champion, the guardian angel of the regular Democracy in the Tenth Congressional district. He would not suffer any bolter or disorganizer like myself to do harm to the great Democratic party and its chosen leader. Why, in the spring of 1896, contestant even went so far as to say in a published interview that he would "swallow anything the Democratic party puts into its national platform without retching, even though it declare for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. Why, if the Democratic party should declare for the free and unlimited coinage of pewter, I would still stick to and shout for the grand old Democratic party."

His newspaper supporters openly appealed to free silver Democrats to support the contestant as the regular nominee, just as Colonel Patterson, as they declared, was giving a loyal support to William J. Bryan. In order to enforce this appeal, the contestant himself, in the opening speech of his campaign, intimated that if Bryan should be elected, he (Patterson) would feel it to be his duty to vote for the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to concede all the importance which the gentleman claims for this question. But let me ask him if he has paused to consider the personal consequences to himself if perchance he should sustain that contention? He bore his assumed character of the regular Democratic nominee and loyal supporter of Bryan to the end of that campaign. To the very last hour of it he continued to appeal in this character for the suffrages of his people. But the gentleman now no longer claims to be even a member of the regular Democracy.

When this contest was shifted from a Democratic constituency to a Republican House, he shifted his political affiliations to suit the exigencies of the new situation. In a dozen flamboyant interviews for the edification of the Republicans of this Chamber he has proclaimed himself the implacable foe of the very organization in whose name he appealed for the suffrages of his constituents, and by whose aid he claims to have been elected a member of this House. I say to the honorable gentleman that he was not the nominee of the Democratic party; but if he was, and if, as he claims, he was elected to this House as the chosen candidate and representative of that organization, then he can not hold a seat here as a member of another party without betraying the trust of his constituents and disgracing the commission he holds. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I might safely leave the gentleman to rend his viscera upon either horn of this dilemma. [Laughter.] But in memory of the kindly feelings of other days, when I was a faithful follower of his standard, I intend to extricate him from this predicament, and I will do so by showing that his alleged Democratic nomination was a farce and a fraud.

The entire question of the regularity of our respective nominations is comprehended in the disputed election of Congressional committeeman for the county of Fayette. If Dr. J. A. Albright was elected, a majority of the committee was favorable to me. If Mr. Hendon was elected, a majority was favorable to the contestant. Now, the undisputed facts in regard to this election, which occurred at the primaries in 1894, are that the canvassing board of the district canvassed the incomplete official returns from Fayette County and announced a majority for Hendon as the result of this canvass; but the further facts are that the returns from some districts did not reach the canvassing board, because through mistake they had been addressed to the former secretary of the county committee, who had gone out of office just one week before and who happened then to be absent from the State, and they did not reach the chairman of the county committee, who was a member of the canvassing board, until after the other returns had been canvassed.

That these delayed returns are absolutely authentic and correct is admitted by all, and that Dr. Albright was elected as shown by the complete official returns was never denied throughout the controversy by any living man. Hendon's claim is based upon the bare technicality that the canvass of the incomplete returns concluded the whole question. It must be borne in mind that the contestant at the time of election of committeeman from Fayette County had absolute control of the party machinery, and Hendon himself, his candidate for committeeman, was one of his principal managers and manipulators. The contestant's contention, therefore, simply amounts to this, that the fault or failure of his own friends to bring the complete official returns before the canvassing board concludes the case against the candidate whom they desired to defeat.

It is claimed that Hendon's election was contested before the canvassing board, decided, and acquiesced in. The only basis for this claim is that upon the discovery that the returns from some of the precincts were missing a letter or telegram to that effect was sent to Col. Casey Young, who laid the matter before the canvassing board at its meeting in Memphis. The board simply decided that its authority was strictly limited to canvassing the official returns and that they could hear no evidence outside of the returns.

It is not true, Mr. Speaker, as stated by the contestant, that his alleged committee made any offer or suggestion with respect to giving my friends a fair representation at the primaries. There was no such offer or suggestion nor any intimation to that effect, nor did I or my friends ever hope to obtain anything of that kind at their hands.

But, Mr. Speaker, higher authorities than either the contestant or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] have passed upon this question. The whole matter was submitted to the Democratic State committee, which passed upon the question just as they did upon a contested nomination from the Seventh district, in which my friend and colleague, Colonel COX, was interested. That committee decided, with practical unanimity, that mine was the regular committee, mine the regular convention, and that I was the regular nominee. I was recognized as such by the chairman of the national executive committee and by the chairman of the national Congressional committee. I was so recognized by every Democratic electoral candidate and by every one of my present Democratic colleagues in this House. I was nominated by the largest Democratic convention ever assembled in the city of Memphis—a convention presided over by that grand and heroic old Democrat, the late Senator Isham G. Harris—blessed be his memory forever! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The contestant was nominated by a so-called Democratic primary, which was even more farcical and fraudulent than the one in which he obtained his nomination over Col. Casey Young two years before. Although there was none to oppose him, though there was absolutely no excitement and not a single carriage or worker at the polls, the returns from that election showed a Democratic vote of about 3,500 in the city of Memphis alone, or almost as many as he received of Democrats, Republicans, and all on the day of election. Now, it so happened that, knowing the habits of this contestant in Democratic primaries, we placed watchers at the different polls in Memphis and at other places in the district and kept count of the voters; and the result showed that the vote returned for him in the city of Memphis alone was about four or five times as large as the vote actually cast for him in all the four counties of the Congressional district, including the city of Memphis. [Laughter.]

Why, for instance, Mr. Speaker, in the Second Ward of the city of Memphis the vote actually cast was 38, and the vote returned was 234. In the Fourth Ward 59 men voted, and the number of votes returned was 323. In the Fifth Ward the number of votes actually cast was 50, and the number returned 417. In the Seventh Ward the number actually cast was 128, and the number returned 221. In the Eighth Ward the number cast was 97, and the number returned 408. In the Ninth Ward the number cast was 23, and the number returned was 397. In the Tenth Ward the watchers, instead of stationing themselves where they could watch the count without being suspected, went in and sat down in the presence of the judges and notified them of their purpose. The result was that while in the other wards the returned vote ran from 200 to 400 and over, the vote returned from this ward was only 45, or only 12 more than the vote actually cast.

All these facts, Mr. Speaker, were published broadcast, and the officers in those primaries were publicly challenged to deny them. Not one of them has ever denied these charges to this good hour. Why, sir, we placed upon the witness stand the man who had charge of the box in the fifteenth district, which is a suburb of Memphis, and he testified that the number of votes actually cast for the contestant in that district was 37, while the number returned was 347. Why, in a number of districts a considerable vote was returned for this contestant, though no polls were opened and not a solitary vote was cast.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. And nobody running against him?

Mr. CARMACK. No; he was just doing this from force of habit. [Laughter.]

Yet the next day the contestant came out in an interview returning thanks for this magnificent outpouring of the unterrified Democracy; it was, he said, the proudest moment of his life. [Laughter and applause.] The plain fact was that they simply stuffed the ballot boxes to the limit, made false and fraudulent returns, and then praised God for the performance. [Laughter.] The whole truth is, Mr. Speaker, that this pretense of a Democratic nomination on the part of this contestant was simply a fig leaf, an utterly inadequate fig leaf, intended to partially conceal the nakedness of his undemocracy. [Laughter.] That fig leaf was simply for campaign purposes, and now that the campaign is over, he casts aside even this primitive vesture; he proceeds to unmask his beauty to the moon, and he goes bounding forth before the bulging eyeballs of his startled countrymen in all the picturesque loveliness of beauty unadorned. [Great laughter and applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, one party and one nomination would not suffice for this insatiate archer. A solemn and deliberative conclave of colored Republicans ringed his Jovian brow with a black-and-tan halo, and the "Lily Whites" added another of a paler tint. One Democratic and two Republican parties, he would have us believe, united to crown him with their indorsement; and thus bearing his threefold balls and triple scepter, he went forth conquering and to conquer. [Laughter and applause.] Contestant was now prepared to do business with all parties, and in pious obedience to the apostolic injunction "to be all things to all men." [Laughter.]

Among Democrats he was a Democrat; among Republicans he was a Republican; and on one of the islands of the Mississippi River, inhabited mostly by negroes, his partisans actually circulated the report that the Hon. Josiah Patterson was a colored man. [Great laughter.] Mr. Speaker, the remarkable confusion which prevailed in that district with respect to the contestant's political and ethnological status [laughter] reminds me of nothing so much as of the Mississippi flatboat man who declared that he was "half horse and half alligator, with a heavy cross of snapping turtle." [Laughter.] He seems to have been one of those hybrids sometimes begotten in the hot lust for office, a political mule, having neither pride of ancestry nor hope of posterity. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I am going to tell the plain truth as to the methods by which the indorsement of that Black and Tan convention was secured for this contestant. It was secured by debauchery and corruption. It was bribed. It was bought. The Black and Tan movement was a revolt on the part of the colored Republicans who had grown weary of being used by the white politicians simply as the tools of their trade. The leaders of this movement had made vigorous efforts to secure proper representation for the colored brother at the Republican State convention, and again at the Republican national convention, but in every case had been outwitted and overreached by the white politicians. They then organized for the Congressional campaign under the leadership of William A. Fields, an able colored Republican of excellent character, a justice of the peace and ex-member of the legislature. When that convention was about to assemble, one of Fields's lieutenants, by the name of Johnson, came to him with the information that Patterson's friends were buying up his supporters.

This man Johnson had located the scene of operations in the house of Mose Strickland, who had been one of Fields's most active supporters. He went there, walked in unannounced, walked into the back room, and there found the said Strickland with a colored supporter of this contestant dividing out a roll of greenbacks among a party of Fields's supporters. Johnson denounced them for selling out Fields and they tried to coax him into silence and offered him a part of the money. These facts are not and never have been denied.

Why, Mr. Speaker, contestant's leading friends and managers no longer pretend to deny, but openly confess, that they did obtain control of that Black and Tan convention by bribery and corruption, and if this contestant will ask me for the names of his friends who have made this remarkable confession I will give them to him on the floor of this House. [Applause.] William A. Fields issued a circular to his people in the district, in which he said:

To the colored voters of the Tenth Congressional district of Tennessee:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: Because of a somewhat prominent connection with a movement mostly confined to colored Republicans, undertaken in the early summer for the purpose of ridding the party of notorious "bosses" and organizing on a basis of fairness and honesty, I deem it proper and my duty to make the following statement:

On the 7th of September a "handful" of colored men styling themselves "delegates" met in "convention" in the city of Memphis, and, along with other "proceedings," "called" the Republican Congressional convention of the Tenth district to meet in the same place the next day, September 8, at same time constituting themselves delegates thereto. This small clique of political adventurers met the next day as arranged, and for and in consideration of a certain sum of money, corruptly received by them and divided among themselves, they did then and there proceed to indorse the Democratic nominee for Congress, and to bargain and advise that all the colored voters of the district should support and vote for the candidate of the Democratic party.

I object to such action and protest against it in the name of common decency and of the honest voters of the district. First, because these men, without show or shadow of authority, for so much money in hand, basely and corruptly received, did misrepresent and bargain to sell out the honest, intelligent, and patriotic colored voters of the county and district.

Secondly, I object and protest because the man whom they indorse, for so much cash in hand, has by his public utterances on occasions innumerable during the past five years shown himself the bitterest, most implacable enemy of the colored people. He has denounced us as savages, unfit and incapable to exercise the rights of citizenship, a menace to American civilization.

Thirdly, I object and protest because this corrupt and venal action on the part of a few thoroughly discredited, self-styled leaders, tends wrongly and falsely to fix upon the honest masses of colored voters the name and reputation of selling their votes to the highest bidder without regard to principle or decency.

Finally, as a humble member of the Republican party, as one among the honest voters of my people, I call upon all honest, intelligent, and patriotic men of my race in the Tenth Congressional district to vindicate themselves and their integrity of purpose in political matters by repudiating, to a man, this monstrous corruption on the part of these demagogues and tricksters. We have been shamefully sold "for a price." Let those who made the corrupt bargain "deliver the goods" if they can.

Let us demonstrate to the world that we do not intend to obey the selfish behests of corrupt "bosses" on the one hand, nor on the other to be basely betrayed and sold out "like dumb driven cattle" by the no less venal and corrupt "leaders" of our own race.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. A. FIELD.

MEMPHIS, TENN., September 25, 1896.

Mr. Speaker, this contestant was not the nominee of anything except of a stuffed ballot box and a debauched negro convention. I was the nominee of the regular Democratic party, representing a platform and a sentiment, however, which appealed to many more than the members of the Democratic party; and it was under these conditions that contestant and I went before the people of the Tenth Congressional district. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] would have you believe that as the contestant was the regular Democratic nominee he must have gotten the Democratic vote, and because he was indorsed by the Republicans he must have gotten the Republican vote.

Now, mark how plain a tale shall put him down. In the county of Shelby there is no pretense that a single vote was fraudulently cast, fraudulently counted, or fraudulently returned. If the contestant actually received the Republican vote, then he only received 158 Democratic votes in the entire county of Shelby, including the city of Memphis. If, on the contrary, he received any large proportion of the Democratic vote, he must have failed to receive a very large proportion of the Republican vote. The same is true of the county of Hardeman, in which he makes no charge of fraud.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to deal with the county of Fayette, in which the contestant locates most of his charges of fraud. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] has conjured up a horrible conspiracy to defraud, whose chief actor is alleged to be Mr. J. E. Boswell, the sheriff of the county. One of the principal grounds for charging this conspiracy is the failure of the county court to appoint the judges and clerks of election, leaving the appointment to be made, as in such cases the law requires, by the sheriff, with the advice of three justices of the peace or three freeholders. This charge necessarily assumes that the county court was into the conspiracy to defraud the contestant. If this be true, then there was no necessity whatever, so far as the alleged purpose was concerned, in relegating this duty to the sheriff.

The county court itself, if it had desired to defraud this contestant, could have selected suitable instruments for that purpose as readily as the sheriff himself, and the fact of its not doing so will hardly strike a reasonable man as evidence of its purpose to accomplish what it did not attempt to do. The county court having failed to appoint judges and clerks, the sheriff proceeded to appoint them, in strict compliance with the law and according to the uniform custom of the county. Contestant's own managers in that county testified that the judges and clerks were appointed precisely as they had always been in that county.

The county court never had exercised the right to appoint judges and clerks, but had uniformly left that duty to be performed by the sheriff, with the advice of three justices or three freeholders. Such had been the uniform custom during the whole time that the contestant had control of the party machinery in that county. It is a little remarkable, Mr. Speaker, that in every case where the methods and precedents established by this contestant and his friends have been followed they have instantly seized upon it as conclusive evidence of a criminal intent. [Laughter.] The suspicion may be perfectly natural with them, but I protest against the injustice of judging other people's motives according to their own standard of political morality.

If this was a conspiracy to which the sheriff was a party, how do we account for the fact that in a number of districts persons were appointed as judges and clerks entirely satisfactory to the contestant, and even the very men whom he had named and selected? That the sheriff of this county was and is my supporter is true, and I am proud that it is true. He is an honorable man, a gentleman, and a Democrat. But I emphatically deny that there is the slightest ground for the false and reckless accusations that have been made against him. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the contestant arrogated to himself the right to name judges and clerks, and Sheriff Boswell failed to find any mention of him in the constitution or the law. The contestant had not, except in his own estimation, risen to the dignity of a separate political party.

Another evidence of a general purpose to defraud, which the committee finds eminently satisfactory, is the fact that in some districts the negro vote was largely for the contestant and in other districts overwhelmingly for me. This seems strange, incomprehensible, and incredible to a majority of this committee. Yet if the fact be that way, and if it be shown to be so in districts where there is no question as to the honesty of the count, it is hardly worth while to waste time in speculating upon it. Now, it is shown by contestant's own witnesses that I received one-third of the negro vote in the Moscow district.

In the Oakland district, counting the two boxes, I received about two-fifths of the negro vote, and that fact is not disputed by a syllable of testimony in the record. Yet in the adjoining district I received only one-tenth. Why, then, seek to base a conclusion upon an assumed improbability of what the undisputed testimony shows to be an actual fact? Mr. Speaker, the fact is easily explained. The contestant's manager in that county testified that in district No. 9, where he owned large interests, the entire negro vote was, through his influence, cast for the Democratic ticket in 1892 from President down.

The negro is subject to local influences, and where the white men of any particular community are practically united and active it is but reasonable to suppose that they can and do exercise a large influence over their negro dependents. In all of the districts where the negro vote was polled for contestant he had a respectable body of rich and influential white supporters, who actively organized the negroes in his interest. There is, therefore, nothing at all strange in the difference of sentiment of negro voters in districts Nos. 4 and 5. In No. 5 contestant had a number of active white supporters. In No. 4 he had none, and in addition to this the chairman of the Republican Congressional committee testified that he had failed or refused to send any campaign fund into that district, and that the negroes there were very much dissatisfied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to present some preliminary observations with respect to this county which, in my judgment, are necessary to any intelligent study of the facts of the case. Fayette County for many years has been a strongly Democratic county.

For years past the contestant had been in absolute control of all the election machinery in that county, and it has steadily rolled up majorities of from 1,000 to 2,000 for him and the rest of the Democratic nominees. It is shown beyond question that I received practically the entire Democratic vote in that county. That I should have received, therefore, a majority of the total vote is perfectly natural, unless we are to assume that the contestant has heretofore obtained his majorities by fraud.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the people in that county are negroes, and the contention of the contestant now is that the negroes are all Republicans and that as Republicans they must have voted for him. Upon this point I desire to introduce the contestant himself as a witness. His testimony deserves the highest degree of credibility, upon the principle that when a man makes a statement against his own interest, it is to be accepted as true, no matter what the character of the witness may be. [Laughter.] In 1893 the contestant made a speech upon the floor of this House, in which, in answer to a question from General HENDERSON, of Iowa, he said:

> The truth about the matter is that the Republican party makes the mistake of assuming that every colored man is naturally and per se a Republican, and if his vote is not counted for the Republican party and its candidate, there must have been some fraud. That is altogether a mistake.

Mr. Speaker, that statement by the contestant is proven to be true by the testimony in this case. Numbers of contestant's own witnesses testify that the negroes frequently vote the Democratic ticket. His principal manager in that county cites the fact that in one large negro district, in which he resided at the time, about 200 negroes voted the Democratic ticket from President down, and that not a single one of them voted the Republican ticket. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be understood as saying that there has never been any fraud in Fayette County. The truth is that there are and for years have been two Democratic factions in that county, one known as the "ballot-box stuffers" and the other as the "antiballot-box stuffers."

The former, up to the last campaign, were in absolute control of all the party and election machinery. The latter, under the leadership of a number of the best and most influential citizens of the county, have waged open warfare on the fraudulent election methods of the other faction. They have held that where the white people are practically united the bulk of the negro vote can be honestly controlled, if only patience, tact, and careful management are brought to the task. The other faction have not thought it worth while to put themselves to this trouble, preferring the easier method of stuffing the ballot box and falsifying the returns. The men who were active in the management of my campaign were the men who for years past have been standing out manfully for a free ballot and a fair count. These facts are shown in the record, and it is further shown that their Democracy has been called in question by the contestant's friends because they would not condone the frauds perpetrated by them. On the other hand, the contestant has been most intimately identified with all the ballot-box stuffers and election crooks of that county.

There was not one man conspicuously identified with his campaign in that county, and who appeared upon the witness stand, who is not shown to be an habitual election criminal by his own testimony; not one. I challenge him here and now to name one, to name one man, who took a conspicuous part in the management of his campaign in that county who is not steeped in fraud to the very lips. Name one! One! One only! I repeat the challenge! Name one friend who took a conspicuous part in your campaign in Fayette County who is not shown to be smeared with election frauds from his head to his heels—name one!

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. Can you not do it?

Mr. CARMACK. And yet, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] tells us that the Republicans of that district supported Colonel Patterson because he and his friends were in favor of honest elections. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, we have in this record not alone the fact that the contestant has habitually associated with men of this character, and selected his political managers exclusively from among them; not alone the fact that he has acquiesced in and accepted the benefits of their frauds, but that he has been an open instigator and inciter of crimes against the elective franchise, and that fact I will establish out of the contestant's own mouth and out of the mouths of his witnesses.

For years, Mr. Speaker, he has been delivering the most violent and intemperate harangues against the crime of negro suffrage. For years he has traversed that district declaring that he wanted no negro to vote for him and that he would not accept an office if he had to obtain it by negro votes. For years he has been execrated and denounced by the Republican press and the Republican politicians of the State as the embodiment of everything corrupt and wicked in politics. I do not fear to challenge my Republican colleagues from Tennessee to say if this is not true. For years he has been proclaiming that this is a white man's country and that the white men must fight to control it by all methods, at all hazards, and to the last extremity. Upon whatever occasion he has addressed the people, whether at a Confederate reunion, a political barbecue, a female seminary, or a Sunday-school picnic, "This is a white man's country" has been the burden of his song. It never ceased, in his estimation, to be a white man's country until after the Hon. Josiah Patterson had ceased to be a white man's candidate. [Laughter.]

In a speech delivered at a Confederate reunion at Somerville, in this very county of Fayette, in 1889, the contestant devoted the principal part of his remarks to a denunciation of the evils of negro suffrage.

> Invariably is he manipulated—
>
> Said he—
>
> by white men who have forfeited the respect of their neighbors and who care nothing for the negro but to advance their own interests or ambitions.

Mr. Speaker, that sounds to me very much like an impartial comment upon the man who debauched the Black and Tan convention to promote his own interests and ambitions. But, continuing with this speech, the contestant said:

> The time has come when thinking men should look this question fairly in the face. We must not deceive ourselves or others. The races will never amalgamate. They will never separate and distribute themselves between political parties. As long as there is a contest pending for political supremacy the negro will belong to one party and the white man to another. This is the status of the race question in the South, and it might as well be understood that the white man intends to assert his intelligence, his courage, and resources to maintain at every hazard the ascendency. When asked by what legal or constitutional right the white man asserts his supremacy, we answer that there is a "higher law," and appeal to that unwritten law of civilization, which is that virtue, intelligence, and manhood shall rule the world.

Mr. Speaker, we must consider the circumstances under which this speech was delivered. It was delivered in a county having an undoubted negro majority. At that time a contested-election case was pending in this House from that very district on account of frauds alleged to have been committed in that very county. It was delivered at a time when the contestant was engaged as volunteer counsel for men under indictment in the Federal courts for the commission of those frauds. It was at such a time and under such circumstances that the contestant delivered this speech advising the people to abandon all effort to control the negro vote by argument or persuasion, telling them that the negro would always and must always be the political enemy of the whites; and then, in answer to the question propounded by himself, how under such circumstances the white man was to control, he made his appeal to a "higher law"—a higher law than the Constitution, a higher law than the statutes of the country. Let me ask if any ingenuity can import into this speech any other meaning than that of an open defense and instigation of election crimes?

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the Republican then contesting Mr. Phelan's seat in Congress copied this extract into his brief as an evidence of the total depravity of Democratic leadership in that district. [Laughter.] And even when he appeared as counsel for the parties indicted in the Federal court, he demanded the acquittal of his clients by a repetition of the same political harangue, denouncing the crime of negro suffrage, proclaiming that this was a white man's country and the white men had a right to and intended to rule it at all hazards, even declaring that he had rather see that community cursed with yellow fever, cholera, and all the plagues of Egypt than to see it under the domination of the Republican party. It was this most extraordinary speech that was reproved by Hon. Howell E. Jackson from the bench because of its intemperate character and because it was an insult to the honesty and intelligence of the jury.

When we are told, Mr. Speaker, that the contestant received the solid Republican support of that county, I put the question to every man of common sense if all the probabilities are not against it and if it will not require the most powerful and unquestioned evidence to establish that fact.

There is another fact that adds to its improbability, and that is the fact that the leading white Republicans of that county, including the chairman of the Republican county committee, were bitterly opposed to the contestant and supported me in that campaign. Contestant's principal manager taunted me on the witness stand with the fact that nearly all the leading Republicans of that county were my friends and supporters. They supported me not from any particular affection for myself, but because of their invincible repugnance to the contestant. I ask the House to bear these facts in mind when they come to judge as to the weight of the testimony and the credibility of witnesses in this county.

I desire now, as briefly and as rapidly as possible, to review the testimony in those districts where the gravest charges have been made. The first district is No. 2, or what is known as the Eola district. The chief witness for this district is a gentleman by the name of George Hendon, who was sent, together with one R. N. Fowler, from Somerville to "vote the negroes," as he expressed it, for Colonel Patterson. Hendon testified that he and his brother, Mr. Thomas Williamson, and Mr. T. K. Riddick had been Colonel Patterson's principal managers in that county for some years, and that they had controlled the politics of the county in his interest. His interest in the election, he said, was due entirely to his personal devotion to Colonel Patterson. Mr. Hendon first emerges from the twilight of tradition into the broad sunlight of history in 1888, when he broke up a Republican meeting, called to celebrate the election of Harrison, by threatening to kill a prominent white Republican if the meeting was held.

This Republican was forced to appeal to the circuit judge and other prominent Democrats to protect his life against Hendon's violence. Mr. Hendon proclaimed himself, with every manifestation of pride, to be an all-round election crook. The following extract from his testimony gives a pretty fair idea of his character:

Q. Haven't you said over and over again that negroes had no more business voting than mules?
A. I have.
Q. And that expressed your true belief about it, didn't it?
A. It did.
Q. Does it express your true belief about it now?
A. It does.
Q. Did you ever engage in stuffing ballot boxes, Mr. Hendon?
A. I have.
Q. Did you ever engage in stuffing ballot boxes for Josiah Patterson?
A. I don't know; but if I didn't it was because I didn't have the chance.
Q. If you had a chance, you would do that for Colonel Patterson?
A. Yes, sir; I would.
Q. You have been a great political friend and partisan of Colonel Patterson for a number of years, haven't you?
A. I have.
Q. And he is a great friend of yours?
A. I presume so. I take him to be.

This is the man upon whose testimony you are asked to disfranchise the people of that district. Mr. Hendon did not live in that district. He was sent there with this man Fowler because the contestant was so unfortunate as to have no friends in the district upon whom he could rely. The contestant complains that we refused to appoint a white supporter of his a judge at that precinct. The truth is that he had only one white supporter in the entire district on the ground, and he a disreputable character by the name of "Jap" Smith, who was too drunk even to vote. Hendon's testimony was to the effect that a negro by the name of Howard Huskins issued tickets to the negroes, and that he took down their names as they went up and voted. Upon this point he is flatly contradicted by Huskins himself, who says that the name was written down whenever the ticket was delivered and not when it was deposited, and Hendon himself admits that the negroes did not uniformly go up and deposit their ballots as soon as the ticket was delivered. So the whole of this testimony rests simply upon the fact that a certain number of tickets were issued.

So far from Hendon's testimony being corroborated, as claimed in the report of the majority, by Fowler, Huskins, and Smith, it is contradicted by them in material particulars. Huskins is an ignorant negro, who did not even know the name of the candidate for Congress upon the tickets he claims to have issued. He claimed prior to the election to be a Carmack man, but he was paid $5 of Patterson money for his services on the day of election. Fowler was paid $10, but his testimony was not worth the tenth part of what was paid for it. Indeed, so far from corroborating Hendon, he corroborates the returns. He was sent there for the purpose of helping Hendon "secure a fair count," and when asked how many Patterson tickets he saw voted he answered: "About 30;" or only 6 more than the number returned.

So far as the Honorable "Jap" Smith is concerned, his testimony, even under the most favorable conditions, would not corroborate anything. When contestant controlled the machinery in that county, "Jap" was always the sheriff's deputy, holding the election in district No. 2. He was an old standby of the contestant. When asked if he had not uniformly stuffed the ballot box, sworn to false and fraudulent returns, and committed perjury, he declined on the advice of counsel to answer the question, on the ground that his answer might incriminate him, as it undoubtedly would if he had told the truth. He cheerfully admitted that he got drunk whenever he could get the money, and always made it a point to get drunk on election day. On this particular election day he was roaring drunk until he got too drunk to roar [laughter], and was carried home insensible. He was impeached by a number of credible witnesses, and no man could be found in the county who would believe him on his oath in a court of justice.

In district No. 3 a majority of the committee acknowledge that they have grave doubts, but they promptly proceed to resolve these doubts in favor of the contestant. They admit that the testimony for contestant is not satisfactory as to this district; but as it is the best they can get, they will have to put up with it. Their grounds for rejecting this district are that the contestant's friends were not allowed to have a particular judge of their choice, and that the judges did not throw open the door and allow the contestant's representative, one J. M. Crawford, to come in while the count was proceeding. As to the first objection, it is sufficient to say that the judges appointed an intelligent negro Republican, who could read and write, in strict conformity to the law.

The freeholders, who chose the judges, refused to regard the contestant as a political party, but took him at his word and considered him as a candidate claiming to be the regular Democratic nominee and a supporter of Bryan, as I was. As to the second objection, the proof shows that the room in which the election was held and the vote counted was a very small room, crowded with furniture; that Crawford did not ask to be allowed to witness the count, but demanded it in a violent, profane, and threatening manner. This man Crawford, an old friend of contestant, was a ballot-box stuffer of long standing and great renown, having been under indictment in the Federal courts for such offenses. When he demanded entrance, a crowd of my friends and others gathered around the door, declaring that if Crawford went into the room, they would do so too.

But Crawford finally did enter the room, and promptly proceeded to justify the action of the judges in excluding him by trying to intimidate the negro judge and prevent his signing the returns. That the negroes in this district frequently voted the Democratic ticket is shown by contestant's own witnesses, as is also the fact that he was exceedingly unpopular and, in fact, utterly detested by them. It was in this district that the negroes refused to allow his colored orator, Porter, to speak in their schoolhouse as soon as they found out he was for Patterson.

My friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE] has so thoroughly covered district No. 4 and so utterly annihilated the contestant's contention with regard to it, that I shall waste little time upon it.

Take the sworn statements of the officers and judges of election, thoroughly honest and reputable men, and set them against the testimony of contestant's hired men and of their drilled and instructed witnesses, and no impartial mind can hesitate to accept the sworn returns as the real truth of the controversy.

The contestant's man, Carpenter, expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the judges appointed at that precinct, saying that he would not be afraid to risk his life with them. He was so well satisfied, indeed, that he made no effort to "keep tab" on the voters according to his original intention. Mr. Carpenter, who had formerly lived in that district, frankly declared that there were very few negroes in the district, if any, whose testimony under oath was entitled to credit. As he and a disreputable negro by the name of McGowan selected the witnesses for contestant for that district and put them through their preliminary paces, I am inclined to agree with him with respect to these particular witnesses at least.

The recommendations of the committee as to No. 8, or the Oakland district, are in utter defiance both of the law and the evidence. In this district contestant's friends, about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, after the vote had been proceeding about four hours, without one solitary thing having occurred during that time of which complaint is made in this record, went off and organized a separate poll. That this was entirely illegal is shown by the very authority which is cited to justify it, which reads as follows:

> In extraordinary cases, and where it appears that in no other way can the actual will of the voters be ascertained, a resort to methods not technically in accordance with statutory direction may be justifiable; and upon proof that a full, fair, and honest election has been held by those only who are qualified voters, under these circumstances the returns from such an election, when duly proved, may be considered and counted.

According to this, a separate polling place thus set up, with so-called officers thus selected, without any legal authority whatever, bound by none of the sanctions and subject to none of the penalties of the law, can only be justified or excused when "there is no other way" to make known the will of the voter. Can it be alleged that it was the only possible way for the voters to express their choice in that district, when there, a few yards distant, a regular election was regularly proceeding, under regularly selected officers? Is it sufficient to justify this action that somebody had some suspicion that something wrong would be done? But even if wrong or fraud had been contemplated and attempted, was "there no other way" in which the voters could protect themselves without opening an illegal election?

Why, Mr. Speaker, if we are to accept the findings of this committee, they did find another way in a number of districts to make their votes effective in spite of the alleged frauds of the election officers. Why did they not adopt the plan which according to the majority of the committee was so entirely successful at districts No. 2, 10, 11, of Fayette County, and No. 10 in Tipton? Such a revolutionary proceeding, setting aside all the forms and sanctions of law, is not to be justified according to the law cited in this report except when there is "no other way." And yet this very same report finds that contestant's friends in that county had planned and practiced "another way" by which the choice of the voters was determined with absolute accuracy under like conditions.

It is true that contestant's friends, appreciating, no doubt, the force of this objection, had invented an excuse to obviate it. They pretended to believe that firearms had been stored in the room where the election was being held and that they feared that somebody would be murdered if an attempt was made to keep count of the votes as they were cast. This pretense is proven to have been an absolute falsehood, having no shadow of foundation in fact, and the men who circulated it did not believe it. I am glad to note the fact that the majority of the committee has treated it with the contempt it deserves, for it is not even mentioned in their report. This rumor about the firearms, which was put in circulation on election day, and never heard of until then, is the alleged excuse for organizing a separate election; and yet it is shown that days beforehand contestant's friends had made all their arrangements to hold this separate election.

The plain truth of the matter is that contestant's friends found that they were not able to control the negroes at this box. In spite of all they could do, two-fifths of the negroes voted for me at this box, and no effort is made to dispute this fact. It stands proven, established, uncontradicted by a syllable of proof in the record. Finding that my friends were controlling the negro vote, the contestant's managers started this rumor for the purpose of frightening as many as possible from the polls. Why, Mr. Speaker, the very men who organized this separate election, upon whose suggestion and upon whose advice it was opened, went and cast their votes in the regular box, and did so after seeing and talking with contestant's attorney of record in this case.

The report of the committee alleges several grounds for suspecting a purpose to defraud in this district. One is the failure of the sheriff to appoint a certain man as judge of the election, after saying he was going to do it. Now, Mr. Speaker, the sheriff—that is to say, the sheriff's officer at this box—had no authority to appoint the judges; it was to be done by him on the advice of three justices, or, in their absence, of three freeholders. The appointment in this case was made with the advice of three freeholders, and one justice of the peace there present approved the appointment. The appointment was made in exact conformity to law as it had been universally construed in that county and State and in exact accordance with the uniform, unbroken precedents of many years.

Another excuse is the alleged "extreme confidence" of my supporters, which statement is based simply upon some wild talk about betting on the part of one man and two boys; and lastly the committee alleges the tremendous fact that six men solemnly swear that they voted for contestant in box No. 1, whereas the returns only give him 5! It is a little remarkable that the committee should have alleged this terrible fact about the 6 votes as an evidence of conspiracy to defraud, and yet themselves in summing up this district only accord 5 votes to the contestant at box No. 1. Why was this committee not fair enough to tell the plain truth about this matter, and say that one of the six men who swears to have voted for contestant voted two tickets folded together, one for myself and one for Patterson, both of which tickets were thrown out, as the law requires? This man had promised both parties before the election and assured both afterwards that he had voted according to his promise. He voted this double ticket to keep the letter of his promise. Yet upon such flimsy testimony as this the committee bases its charge of a conspiracy to defraud.

The majority of the committee are very keen to find suspicious circumstances to justify their report, but singularly blind to circumstances of like character on the other side. It is a terribly suspicious circumstance that a supporter of mine who had no connection with the election did some wild talk about betting 50 to 1 on the result. It is not at all suspicious that contestant's chosen managers in other districts, who claimed the right to dictate the appointment of judges of election, actually had bet money on the election. It does not occur to this committee as at all suspicious that in a near-by district a justice of the peace who, according to contestant's contention, should have had a controlling voice in the appointment of judges, had been paid $25 by him, or that the man who sought to force his own appointment as judge had been paid $25.

It is not at all suspicious that nearly every man who worked for him at the polls and a very large proportion of those who appeared for him on the witness stand had been paid money by the contestant or by his friends. It is a damning fact if a Republican judge at a precinct which gave a majority for me had to "make his mark," but it is not considered worthy of mention when contestant's friends, as at Galloway, organized a separate box and appointed an ignorant negro who has to make his mark. Nor is it at all suspicious when at this same box contestant's judges retire into a back room and lock the door before proceeding to count the vote.

Mr. Speaker, I will deal briefly with only one other district in this county—the Macon district, or No. 11. The committee bases its finding with regard to this district chiefly upon the testimony of one Dennis Clay, corroborated, as they claim, by Gentry and Boswell. Of this man Clay nothing harsh could be said that would not understate the truth in regard to his character. He is a perfect monster of vice and depravity, a combination of meanness, cowardice, and ferocity such as, in my knowledge of men, I have never known. Brutal and inhuman in dealing with the negroes, he is utterly craven in dealing with men of courage and spirit. One of his common practices was to entrap a poor negro into some petty offense and then obtain his labor without reward by holding over him the threat of a criminal prosecution. He was impeached by witness after witness, and no man could be found willing to swear that he was worthy of belief on his oath.

Of Mr. Gentry we need only say that he cheerfully confessed himself a ballot-box stuffer, and said that he thought it was perfectly right as between a Democrat and a Republican to commit election frauds, though he confessed to some conscientious scruples on the subject as between two Democrats. He admitted that he was an officer of election in 1894, and that the ballot box was stuffed for contestant upon that occasion. It was just after that performance that he received an appointment, through contestant's influence, as messenger in this House—a position which he only held for three weeks, being drunk, as he cheerfully admitted, from the day he landed in the city of Washington to the day he left it.

Mr. Gentry was regularly employed by the contestant at a salary of $50 per month, and was still borne on the pay roll at such salary when he testified in this case. The testimony of Clay was to the effect that he called out to Boswell whenever a voter cast a ballot for the contestant, and that Boswell marked it down and kept the count. So far from Boswell's testimony corroborating the testimony of Clay, as claimed in the majority report, it materially contradicts it and supports the sworn returns of the election. Boswell on cross-examination admitted that he did not know whether Clay called out wrong to him or not, and when asked how many votes he himself saw cast for Patterson answered: "About 50." This was just 6 more than the number returned. That any man who pays the slightest regard to the credibility of witnesses can accept such testimony against the sworn statements of men of unimpeachable character is to me incomprehensible, and especially so when we bear in mind the fact, proven and undenied, that two of these men had been approved and selected in advance by contestant's friends in that district.

The contestant has drawn a terrible bill of indictment against the election officers in districts Nos. 9 and 10 of Tipton County, the polling place in both districts being in the town of Mason. In the former district he made one fatal mistake—that is to say, in addition to his other evidence, he undertook to prove by the voters themselves how they cast their votes, with the result that he proved just exactly the number of votes counted and returned for him by the election officers. It was precisely the same mistake, with precisely the same result, as at box No. 1 of the Oakland precinct. If the contestant had not himself by this error of judgment positively established beyond doubt or question and by his own proof the correctness of the returns in district No. 9, the committee would doubtless have found abundance of "suspicious circumstances" to justify the rejection of these returns; as it is, they are forced to admit them.

But in district No. 10 they carefully avoided this error. They put witnesses upon the stand, the chief of whom was one Mr. T. W. Green, who swore that they kept count of 169 votes that were cast by negroes for the contestant; but upon the most rigid cross-examination Mr. Green, though he professed to be acquainted with every negro in the district, could not remember a solitary one who so voted, even when their names were read to him. I say without hesitation that this testimony would not be regarded as evidence in any court of justice in the land. If the sworn returns of the election officers are to be impeached by outside testimony, other than the testimony of the voters themselves, it is at least necessary that the names of the voters alleged to have been defrauded, shall be given, in order that there may be an opportunity to rebut the testimony.

That these men, who claim to have kept the count, could not or would not give the name of a single individual voter whom they saw vote for the contestant is strongly suggestive of a deliberate purpose to prevent the refutation of their statement by this method. The testimony of the judges and clerks and the officers of election is clear and positive and their characters unimpeached. The district for years has been strongly Democratic, the contestant in past elections having always carried the district by overwhelming majorities. In these past elections the very men by whose testimony the election of 1896 is sought to be impeached counted and returned the vote. They acknowledge that all the facts and circumstances alleged to be indicative of a purpose to defraud contestant characterized the elections held by them. Yet they swear that such election and the count and return of the vote were absolutely honest and fair. I received almost the solid Democratic vote of this Democratic district.

I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that if this contestant had attempted to prove by the voters themselves for whom they voted for Congress, he would have established the verity of the election returns in district No. 10 as completely as he did in district No. 9.

Mr. Speaker, I now close this case and submit it to the judgment and the conscience of this great jury. My duty has been done and I am ready to receive with patience the verdict of this House, only begging leave to remind you that your verdict must be rendered under the solemn sanction of your oaths according to the testimony and the law. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have been more concerned to defend my constituency against calumnious accusations than I have been to retain a seat for the fragment of a term in Congress. I would that the words I have uttered were more worthy of the noble constituency whose cause I plead.

In their name I appeal from whatever there may be of sectional prejudice and passion in this House, to whatever there may be of a broader, higher, and nobler sentiment. These people, sir, are of high and noble lineage. The blood of the heroes who fought at Kings Mountain and at New Orleans is in their veins. They are the sons of the sires who blazed the pathway of civilization through the primeval forests of America and builded a temple of liberty in the wilderness of this western world. [Applause.] In whatever sphere of action it has pleased God to place them, whether in the quiet walks of peaceful citizenship, or in the highest stations of civic power and duty, or amid the storm of death on the red field of battle, they have everywhere illustrated those high qualities of American manhood that have made glorious the history of this Republic. [Applause.]

I am proud to be the champion of such a people. I speak, sir, for my native State, for my native South. It is a land that has known sorrows; a land that has broken the ashen crust and moistened it with her tears; a land scarred and riven by the plowshare of war and billowed with the graves of her dead, but a land of legend, a land of song, a land of hallowed and heroic memories. To that land every drop of my blood, every fiber of my being, every pulsation of my heart, is consecrated forever. [Applause.] I was born of her womb, I was nurtured at her breast, and when my last hour shall come I pray God that I may be pillowed upon her bosom and rocked to sleep within her tender and encircling arms. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains to the minority?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULL). Ten minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman from New York, Mr. COCHRANE, will close the argument upon our side of the case. Therefore we will wait——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman from New York, Mr. COCHRANE, will close our side of the case. He is the only speaker, I believe, who is left.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it the intention that all your time remaining shall be consumed by one gentleman?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think that is the understanding. How much time have the minority?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Only ten minutes; and they will not use that time if it is the intention that all the remaining time on the other side shall be used by one speaker.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WHITE] would like the privilege of addressing the House for about ten minutes; and then the gentleman from New York will follow. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have the privilege of addressing the House for ten minutes and that the argument on our side be then closed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It comes out of your time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then you do not need to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am asking for unanimous consent. Inasmuch as I understand the minority do not propose to use their remaining ten minutes, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have the use of those ten minutes. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that the gentlemen on that side desire to use any other than their own time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is all. We want to take the vote at half past 4.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How many minutes remain to the majority, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty-nine minutes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that a full hour, or very nearly a full hour, remains before half past 4 o'clock. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCHRANE] had expected to use forty-five minutes. We would very much like to have the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WHITE] occupy——

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would extend the time on the other side ten minutes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We can not agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (to Mr. KIRKPATRICK). Give the gentleman from North Carolina ten minutes of your time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Very well; we will agree that the gentleman from North Carolina shall occupy ten minutes of our time, leaving forty minutes for the gentleman from New York to close on our side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that his side has only forty-eight minutes remaining.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Out of that time I desire to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina eight minutes, and then the gentleman from New York will close the case on our side. Let us understand this matter. I want the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You have it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand there are to be no more speeches on the other side of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. You surrender the balance of your time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands, then, that the majority surrender the balance of their time; that the ten minutes belonging to the minority are to be occupied by the gentleman from North Carolina; and that the debate be then closed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is not the agreement at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wants to know what the proposed agreement is.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I want the Chair to understand my proposition. My proposition is that the gentleman from North Carolina have eight minutes to address the House, and that then the debate be closed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the usual——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is that the gentleman from North Carolina have eight minutes and that the debate be closed by the gentleman from New York. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. One word. The usual rule has been that those who open have the right to close, but with only one speech. We do not object to that; but we shall object to there being two speeches, the time divided. We reserve the remainder of our time, to be occupied in an intermediate speech.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. You can do that, but let it be understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCHRANE] is to close the debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to see whether I understand this agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no agreement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes now to yield eight minutes of his time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WHITE]. That gentleman is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if half of what has been said against either of these gentlemen contending for a seat on this floor is true, I doubt very much whether either ought to have a seat in the Congress of the United States. [Laughter and applause.]

There is an old adage, Mr. Speaker, "that when thieves fall out just men can get their deserts." It is a great pity that the Rebublicans of Tennessee, in this particular district, had not a man to bring forward as a candidate at the time that these two Democrats were fighting over the position.

But the bone of contention between them seems to be as to how the negro vote was cast in that district. Both sides seem to have been basing some bold claims upon these votes, and also that there is a "higher law"—as they both claim—than either the statutes of the United States or the Constitution itself, and yet both sides claim that they are entitled to a seat on this floor by virtue of those negro votes. Well, my opinion is, Mr. Speaker, that if the contestee is correct in his statement, and taking his own evidence as true, in the language of the lawyers, if political honesty were an indictable offense, you could not obtain a bill against him, not even in a court of equity.

I shall have to vote for the contestant, not from any pleasure or feeling of consideration grown of love or political affiliations, but on the ground that we are taught in morals that a man is never required to choose between two sins, but he may be required at times to choose between two evils; and when that condition is presented to me, I always take the lesser one. [Laughter.] I shall accept Mr. Patterson, therefore, as a kind of reformer—as the smaller of two evils presented to me—and swallow him with my eyes closed. [Laughter and applause.]

This case, however, Mr. Speaker, is not the only one which seems to indicate that somebody on this floor thinks that there is "a higher law" in reference to the negro voter, whenever his condition is being considered here, than the Constitution even of the United States. I took the pains, while the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] was speaking, to run over the statements given by the members from his State with reference to the votes cast in that State in the last election; and I have made a little calculation which I will submit to you. I find that in the State of Mississippi—and these figures, I suppose, are based on the census of 1890—according to a statement made by the gentlemen from his State, as laid down in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, there were 1,146,268 population in the State of Mississippi.

According to the ordinary election rules throughout the country, at an average, there ought to have been 229,252 votes cast in that election. And yet the combined votes cast for the Democratic members of the Mississippi delegation occupying seats on this floor were only 42,694. And about how many votes did the Republicans receive? Of course they got all the balance—only 3,214. Somewhere in the neighborhood—notwithstanding the Presidential election then pending—somewhere in the neighborhood of 150,000 voters that we may presume to have had a right to vote; and even presuming the right of "transferring," as we have heard it expressed on this floor, had a right to cast their votes in that election—in the neigborhood of 150,000 votes of black men were suppressed and not allowed to vote because they were negroes.

The question, Mr. Speaker, that ought to concern the United States Congress at this time, in my opinion, is as to whether or not there is a republican form of government in the State of Mississippi, the State of South Carolina, the State of Louisiana, and other Southern States when you take up this record and examine the votes cast. The question is, sir, as to whether the United States will sit supinely by and see that these matters are relegated to the States themselves, and that gentlemen can come here and occupy seats by the suppression of the vote of their district, simply because they are of a different complexion, of a different race or different politics, without any investigation made or protest entered. The lifeblood of the Union is thus being sapped; little by little it may be, but surely sapped, and one day or the other it will not be a Cuban question that confronts us; it will not be a question of standing by and putting down the Spaniards, but it will be a question as to whether or not the Federal Constitution in this great Republic of ours shall be perpetuated or not. [Applause.]

These are matters that may not be exactly germane to the subject under consideration, but matters that should engage the thoughtful statesmen of the country. These are matters that ought to be looked into. The votes—districts in Southern States like that under consideration—with a voting population anywhere from 30,000 to 50,000, yet the combined vote cast is less in some instances than 5,000. And why is this? Not because there is an indifference on the part of the black men about their franchise; for outside of his own home and his own beloved family, there is no one thing so dear to the heart of the colored man as his right to American citizenship, and yet he is not permitted to exercise that right.

Still gentlemen come here and speak about the "negro" and the "darky," and talk of him in dialect and old plantation language. It seems to me that such language, coming from the plantations in Mississippi and elsewhere, had better be uttered at home and not brought here in this dignified body. They come, however, and claim that there are "fair elections" in all these cases where such a disparity in the votes is shown.

You can not feel this, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, as I do. There is a great contention on that side of the Chamber, and sometimes on this side of the Chamber, for the leadership. But I am easily the leader of one thing, and that is the black phalanx on this floor. [Laughter.] I have no rival, and I will not be disturbed in that leadership. [Laughter.] Let the leaders on these two sides get together, including myself, that we may legislate for the whole people.

The condition reminds me of an anecdote I once heard at school when I was a boy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Well, I will not tell my "school anecdote." [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. We surrender the remainder of our time. May I ask what time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven minutes on the minority side and thirty-nine minutes on the other.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time assigned to me in which to consider this conteste-delection case of Josiah Patterson against E. W. Carmack, from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, I shall attempt to confine myself to a discussion of the facts as they appear in the record of this case and to the application of the legal principles which I conceive properly to apply to them. I shall not attempt to discuss the political aspects of this case. That has been done by the gentlemen who have preceded me. I have listened with interest and with pleasure to the entertaining addresses of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack], the contestee in this case.

But not a single argument has been put forward by either of those gentlemen which bears upon the merits of the case in the remotest degree. What matters it to us, Mr. Speaker, whether the contestee or the contestant in this case have in years past been Republicans, Democrats, or Populists; or, if they have been Democrats, whether they were Gold Democrats or Silver Democrats? What have we to do with the past history and the record and the affiliations and the personalities of these contesting parties? The simple question for us to determine is who, upon the law, and who, upon the evidence in the case, is entitled to the seat in this House. It is a contest between two Democrats, both claiming to represent the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and therefore we may approach it, at least on the Republican side, without political bias or prejudice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand full well that it is difficult for members of the House, not having made a study of the record in the case, to arrive at a rational and proper conclusion upon the merits of it. I know full well the difficulty which a member of the committee encounters in considering the case. But, fortunately, this case is so constituted that its controlling features are within a narrow compass. The salient points of the case are such that they may be easily and readily grasped, and it shall be my effort, in the short time that I have at my disposal, to place them before the House in as comprehensive a form as I may be able to do.

This case was the first one which was taken up by your Committee on Elections No. 3. Two full days were given to the argument of the case, double the time that was given to any of the others that came before the committee. It was then referred to a subcommittee, and I, speaking as one of that subcommittee, can say that we approached the consideration of the case free from political affiliations, free from personal prejudice or bias, and influenced only by a desire to do even and exact justice between the parties to the contest, and to find out who was entitled to the seat, fairly and honestly, upon the record which was presented to us.

Now, to begin with and in order to consider its proper bearing upon the case, let us look for a moment at the origin of the contest. This contest, as has been intimated, had its origin in point of time in the year 1894. In respect to place, it had its origin in the Congressional convention of that year for the Tenth district of Tennessee which nominated a Democratic candidate for member of Congress. The cause of this contest was the division of the party into the two factions of Gold Democrats and Silver Democrats. In that convention the contestant in this case was the choice of the convention over his silver opponent. He was elected and served his term as a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress. The same convention which nominated him in 1894 selected a Congressional Democratic committee.

The Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee is composed of four counties—Shelby, Hardeman, Tipton, and Fayette. The county of Shelby is twice as large as any of the other counties. From that county two Gold Democratic members of the Congressional committee were selected. From the county of Hardeman and the county of Tipton, a Silver Democrat was selected from each. From the county of Fayette there was a contest, a Gold Democrat and a Silver Democrat each claiming the election. That convention decided, upon the merits of that controversy, in favor of the Gold Democrat.

Nothing more was heard from that contest until the time came in the year 1896 for the Congressional committee so selected to call a Congressional convention. Then the Silver Democrat from Fayette County renewed his claim and presented anew his contest to the committee. Upon a hearing he was again defeated. Twice were his claims adjudicated adversely to him. Thereupon he withdrew, and with the two Silver Democrats from that convention formed a new committee. That committee called the convention which nominated the contestee in this case. The original committee called the convention which nominated the contestant.

It is obvious from these facts that the claim of the contestant to be the regular nominee of his party is well founded. His candidacy bears the stamp of regularity. The convention which nominated the contestee was called by two bolting members of the committee, who associated with themselves a third man whose claims had been twice judicially determined against him. No regularity can be predicted upon such a state of facts. But for the purposes of this argument I care not one iota who was the regular nominee in that contest. Those are the facts. I leave them to your consideration.

I care not whether the contestant or the contestee was the regular nominee of the Democratic party. The question is, Who got the most votes at the polls? I mention the facts here as leading up to another point in my argument, which is, that the seat of the controversy was in the county of Fayette. It was in that county that the contest arose, beginning over the differences in the party as to the money question, and as growing out of that who was elected a committeeman on the Congressional committee from that county.

After the nomination of the contestant in the manner in which I have described, it became a matter of importance as to what the Republicans would do. The district was safely Democratic, but here were two Democrats running against each other. The chairman of the Republican Congressional committee has testified in this case that the views of the contestant were more nearly in accord with those of the Republican party on the money question, and that he was the choice of 90 per cent of the Republican voters in that district, and therefore he received the indorsement of both wings of the Republican party for the office which he now claims.

Now, let us see what the situation is with regard to Fayette County, the storm center in this contest. Ten districts are contested here to-day. Eight of those ten are in the county of Fayette. Only two of them are in Tipton County, which adjoins Fayette. The ten districts form one contiguous territory. Outside of those ten districts the contestant is conceded to have a majority, according to the returns, of 1,207. He was defeated in the entire district, according to the returns, by 365. So that it was necessary in these ten contested districts not only to overcome his returned majority of 1,207 in the remaining part of the district, but also to give him enough more to give him a majority of 365 in the district.

And it must be borne in mind that in these ten districts the colored vote was very large. One thousand one hundred and twenty colored voters and 950 white voters resided in these contested districts. So that it was necessary for the contestee, in order to overcome the majority of 1,207 against him in the rest of the district and get a majority of 365 in the entire district, to get every white voter in these contested districts, and to get about three-quarters of the colored voters in addition.

An effort has been made to make it appear that the colored voters in these ten districts were in revolt against the contestant. Such is not the fact. The evidence in this case does not warrant any such conclusion. We know almost well enough to take notice of it judicially that in Presidential years, no matter what may be the case in local elections, the colored man almost invariably votes the Republican ticket. Now, what was the evidence in this case? I quote from page 13 of the supplemental record, where Chairman Dutro, chairman of the Republican Congressional committee, testifies as follows:

Q. Now, do you know the political preferences of the colored people in the Tenth Congressional district and can you tell us whether they are Democrats, Populists, or Republicans?

A. They are Republicans.

Q. Now, do you mean by this that they are all Republicans, or that the overwhelming majority are?

A. I wouldn't want to state that they are all Republicans, and I wouldn't want to state that the greatest percentage are, but I am satisfied and found that some are under obligations to white people, and will vote as they want them to. There is not many of them. I made a special effort to find out in which districts they were, and I didn't find but few.

Q. Do I understand you then that your answer is this: That the colored people are all or nearly all Republicans, but that some may be influenced by white men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you make for us, Mr. Dutro, any estimate of the per cent of colored people who can not be controlled by white men to vote against the Republican ticket?

A. I should think there was 95 per cent of them that could not do anything with. I am speaking on national and State elections; of course, on local elections that is a different thing.

Q. Well, now, you have stated that you paid special attention to Fayette County and made repeated trips to that county. Did you find in Fayette County any greater dissatisfaction among the Republican voters there than you found elsewhere?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is it not your opinion, then, that not less than 90 per cent of the colored voters could not be influenced?

A. Yes, sir; I think that is true.

He testifies further that he issued special instructions while distributing Republican tickets just previous to the late election that all be voted straight, as he recognized the situation, knew that the silver men had a majority of the election judges, and feared that they might throw out the votes if any name was scratched.

Still further, William Porter, a prominent colored man, a witness for contestee, testifies that he canvassed nearly the entire Congressional district, and that his canvass of Fayette and Hardeman counties was particularly close, he making speeches in every civil district in Fayette County, and leaving that county upon the day previous to the election.

He swears that his meetings in Fayette County were very largely attended by the colored people, his own opinion being that he spoke to practically every colored voter in Fayette County. He states further that his custom was at the conclusion of his speeches to take a vote as to how the colored men present stood upon the political issues of the day, and that the overwhelming majority in every district in Fayette County was in favor of the straight Republican ticket and Josiah Patterson for Congress. He kept a list of all colored persons of whom he heard who did not propose to vote this ticket, and sent their names in to the Republican committee. Of such persons in Fayette County there were only 53 out of a total vote of between 3,000 and 4,000.

So that, in the seven voting precincts in Fayette County, where the negro vote is largest and outnumbers the white vote many times, and where there was every reason to suppose that Mr. Patterson would get the largest majorities, the returns show that Carmack received over 6 votes to Patterson's 1, while in the remainder of the county, including the precincts where the white vote was the largest, Patterson's majority is 348.

Let us go a step further in this case. We have seen that the contest over the nomination arose in Fayette County. We have seen that this contest over the election centers around ten contested precincts in Fayette County or contiguous thereto. We have seen that in these precincts, which are largely colored, the contestee must have received over three-fourths of the colored votes, and we have seen that this is incredible. Now let us consider the election law of the State of Tennessee and its provisions in regard to the selection of election judges and the organization of voting places, and let us see how this law was carried out in these precincts which are contested. The election code of Tennessee provides as follows:

The sheriff and, if he is a candidate, the coroner shall hold all elections. The county court shall appoint three judges for each election place, who shall be of different political parties.

Now, in all four of these counties, except the county of Fayette, that provision of the law was in a measure at least complied with. The county court selected the election judges for every voting precinct, and they were published in the newspapers of the county in October preceding the elections, as the law of that State requires; but in this single county of Fayette not a single election judge was appointed by the county court. Not one in all the voting precincts of this county. This provision of the law was in no respect complied with. What should be done in a case of that kind?

The election law of Tennessee further provides as follows:

If the court fails to make the appointment, the sheriff, with the advice of three justices of the peace, and if none be present, three reputable freeholders shall appoint said judges.

In that county the sheriff was the warm personal friend and the close political adherent of the contestee. They were political brothers, so to speak. The friends of the contestant applied before election day, in view of the fact that the court had failed to make the appointment of judges, to the sheriff to appoint the judges in accordance with the provisions of the law, to give them representations at the polling places and to make public by publication in the newspapers who those appointees were to be.

The law absolutely required that both parties should have proper representation in the electoral boards. The sheriff failed to give such representation in these ten contested districts. Nothing of the kind was done; no publication was made; and that being so, he absolutely failed in that respect to carry out the provisions of the law.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me further call attention for a moment to the character of the judges selected by the sheriff, in these contested districts in Fayette County, to represent the Republican party and the contestant in this case.

No. 2 (Eola). Cephus Futrel, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; made his mark on the returns. (Record, page 412.)

No. 3 (Fayette Corners). Billie Marbury, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; made his mark on the returns. (Record, page 414.)

No. 4 (Yumyum). Harry Thompson, professes ability to read a little; signs his name by mark. (Page 416.)

No. 6 (Braden). Austin Rogers, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; makes his mark. (Page 419.)

No. 8 (Oakland). Louis Wilson, ignorant negro; could not read or write; makes his mark. (Page 420.)

No. 10 (Piperton). William Wright, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; makes his mark. (Page 432.)

No. 11 (Macon). Abe Haslett, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; makes his mark; an idiot. (P. 434.)

No. 9. Mack Harris, an ignorant negro; could not read or write; makes his mark. (P. 429.) Mack Harris voted the Democratic ticket. (Redd's Dep., p. 504.)

No. 10 (Rossville). G. W. Taylor. Taylor, it seems, could read and write, but in this election voted for Carmack, according to his own statement.

No. 6 (Galloway). All the judges of election were white Democrats.

Such was the character of the judges that this sheriff, the close friend and political adherent of the contestee in this case, selected to represent the Republican party and the contestant at the voting places in the county of Fayette. Now, what is the law bearing upon this state of facts? It has been reiterated over and over again by Congress and needs no repetition here. I refer briefly to the following cases:

Threet vs. Clark, Digest Elections, Fifty-first Congress, page 182; McDuffie vs. Turpin, ib., 295; Hill vs. Catchings, ib., 804; Buchanan vs. Manning, Digest Election Cases, Forty-seventh Congress, 2 Ells., 295-336; Donnelly vs. Washburn, Digest Election Cases, Forty-sixth Congress, 1 Ells., 48, and the majority report in Thorp vs. McKinney, decided in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

It has been held in these cases that—

Where the course is systematically pursued of appointing on the election boards, to represent the minority or opposition party, persons not indorsed by that party, and as to whose loyalty to the party whose interests they are expected to guard there is a question, or of appointing persons who are unable to read and write when there would be no difficulty in finding men well qualified in those respects, this ought of itself to be considered evidence of conspiracy to defraud on the part of the election officers. (Report Threet vs. Clark, Digest Election Cases, Forty-first Congress, page 182.)

It is abundantly proved, and in fact nowhere denied, that it was possible to appoint at each of said precincts and wards competent persons and well-known Republicans to act as judges of election, and the failure to do so is prima facie evidence of fraud and misconduct on the part of the electoral boards. (Page 7 of majority report in Thorp vs. McKinney, Fifty-fourth Congress.)

The same principle has been adopted by this Congress in the case of Thorp vs. Epes, recently decided. I have thus given very briefly some of the general features of this case.

We have seen that contest for the formation of the Congressional committee occurred in 1894 in Fayette County. We have seen that this contest was renewed in 1896. We have seen that the contest over the result of this election centers around Fayette County. We have seen that the contested districts are in Fayette County. We have seen that outside of them the contestant had a large majority, and that that was overcome by the result of the vote in these contested districts in Fayette County, notwithstanding there was a large colored voting population there.

We have seen, in addition to that, that the county courts willfully refused to obey the law in appointing election officers in this county. We have seen that the sheriff violated the law in not giving the Republicans and the contestant proper representation there and in unlawfully appointing ignorant judges of election who could not read or write. We have connected one by one the links in the chain of circumstances leading up to just what we would expect to happen there, viz, gross frauds and illegalities operating against the contestant in this case. Fayette County has been the storm center of this election contest in all its various phases.

Now, briefly let me call your attention to three or four precincts and see just what was done therein. I shall not have time to go over them all, nor is it necessary, for the result in three or four of them will determine this case. Let us first take the precinct of Galloway. This was the case where there were two boxes, which have been referred to. In this district there were three justices of the peace, two favorable to the contestant and one favorable to the contestee. They met the night before election and requested the sheriff's officer, who was to hold the election there, to appoint a judge satisfactory to them.

This he declined absolutely to do, and on the morning of election, although under the law the polls were to open at 9 o'clock, the opening was delayed until 11 o'clock by this officer under the vain pretext, as he claims, that he could not find a satisfactory Republican judge. It is conceded that there were upon the ground 200 Republicans, but notwithstanding that fact he went three-quarters of a mile out of his way in order to get an ignorant colored man to act as a Republican judge, and notwithstanding the fact that the Republicans on the ground agreed upon a man and requested him to make the appointment as one which would be satisfactory to them.

These facts upon their face carry an impress of fraud. Why should this officer holding this election refrain from appointing a man of their own choice if he intended to give the Republicans a fair and honest representation? Having got the board selected according to his own idea, the Republicans appeared there with pencil and paper prepared to keep a tally and count of the number of Republican votes. Then the officer holding this election, whose name was Braden, declared that he would not hold an election at all, and he and his board, consisting of three judges and two clerks, got up and left the building and went away.

There can be no question about these facts. They are sworn to by Justice Griffin and Mr. Wilder. They are sworn to by these two witnesses in the case, and it is not controverted by a single witness on the part of the contestee. There were six officers—a sheriff's officer, three Democratic judges and two Democratic clerks—any one of whom could have been produced to have controverted these facts if they were not true. Not one of them was called except one, and he declares that he was not there at the time and does not know what took place. So we have the positive evidence of these two witnesses that the sheriff's officer absolutely declined to hold the election there and that he and his board got up and left the building at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day.

It is an elementary rule in law as well as in morals that the failure of a person to deny what is charged against him is attributable to his inability honestly to make the denial. We must take these facts as absolutely substantiated, as absolutely proved. What is to be done in view of an agreed state of facts like that? What is the legal principle which is to be applied? Again the law of Tennessee answers the question. I quote again from the Tennessee statute:

If the sheriff or other officer whose duty it is to attend the particular place of voting fail to attend, any justice of the peace present, or, if no justice is present, any three freeholders, may perform these duties, or in case of necessity may act as officers or inspectors.

Here we have a board refusing to hold the election, going out of the building, and it is not contradicted that they did so. Then this justice of the peace—Justice Griffin—in strict conformity with the statute of Tennessee in such case made and provided, assembled a new board, selected three judges and two clerks in strict accordance with the law of Tennessee, swore them in, and proceeded to hold an election just as the Tennessee State law provided he might do. It was a board organized in strict accordance with the law. After the voting had commenced, after ballots had been deposited in the box, Braden and his original board returned to their place and reopened their polling box.

The gentleman from Arkansas has argued—and I will admit it to be true for the purposes of this argument—that there can be but one voting place in any precinct. I claim that that being so, box No. 2, as it is designated in the case, was the legal box, under the undisputed facts in this case and under the law of the State of Tennessee; and I claim that every vote deposited in box No. 1, so called, was an illegal vote; that after that election board had dispersed and gone out and announced their purpose of holding no election, and had not returned until the other place was organized and the other box opened in accordance with the law of Tennessee, box No. 1 failed to become a legal box and that every vote cast therein is a nullity. In that box there were deposited 62 votes for the contestee. In box No. 2, organized in strict accordance with the Tennessee law, there were deposited 247 votes. These were disregarded by the election officers in making up the returns and the 62 were counted.

Mr. Speaker, it has been claimed here that both these boxes should be counted. Very well, if you count them both you set a precedent which you must follow in the precinct of Oakland, where a similar state of facts occurred. And if you count both boxes in both precincts, then you elect the contestant. That gives him a majority over the 365 and elects him to the seat which he claims he is entitled to. But if you do not—take whichever horn of the dilemma you please, I care not which; argue if you will that there was but one legal box in that precinct, and it makes a difference of 309. Throwing out the 62 and counting the 247, it makes a difference of 309 in the result, which brings the contestant within 56 votes of an election.

There was another voting place in this civil district known as Braden, and there this state of affairs existed. Seventeen votes, it was proved, were cast there for the contestant, yet only 4 were returned for him. It was admitted on the argument before the committee that 13 votes had been taken from the contestant and given to the contestee. Under the law established in such cases, we would be justified in suppressing the returns upon the ground of fraud and giving to each party the votes he has legally proved. We have not done so. We have simply changed the result by adding 26, which, it was admitted by the contestant, might be done in this case, making a difference in the result of 26, or bringing the contestant within 30 of an election.

In regard to this precinct of Galloway, I should have remarked as a corroborative circumstance of the fact that fraud was intended that it was proved by the evidence of two witnesses that Dr. Battle, in whose office box No. 1 was established, and a close friend and adherent of contestee, made a cold-blooded business proposition to the Republican managers that he would see that all the votes were counted for the contestant, Patterson, if the votes for the other candidates should all be counted for the contestee. He swears to that himself; and as bearing somewhat on the election methods there, I wish briefly to call attention to his testimony on this point, given at page 198 of the supplemental record.

58. Q. Do you know of any conversation between Mr. Osca Wilder, Mr. Cunningham, John Braden, and a number of others there in your office before the polls opened that morning?

A. I know of a conversation between Mr. Osca Wilder and myself.

59. Q. Do you know of any propositions having been made to Mr. Osca Wilder there at that time?

A. Yes, sir; I proposed to Mr. Osca Wilder to settle this thing and not have a big row among the white people here.

60. Q. Did you propose any means or manner of settling it?

A. I was not the officer of the election to hold or run it. Only talked as a citizen in order that there should be harmony among the white folks. I suggested to Mr. Wilder that it would be better to put in a Patterson man and count the vote fairly as far as Patterson was concerned.

61. Q. Was Mr. Wilder willing to this?

A. No, sir; I don't think he was. He was talking like he was, but I don't think he was.

62. Q. You didn't think he was willing?

A. No, sir.

63. Q. Was that the only conversation you ever had with Mr. Wilder?

A. No, sir. We had had various conversations before that, months and weeks before the election.

64. Q. Do you know anything, or hear anything, about a proposition being made to Mr. Wilder that if he would agree to the election being held up there that he and his friends should vote there, and that Colonel Patterson should have all the votes cast for him?

A. I was the one that proposed that to Mr. Wilder.

Now, let me pass on rapidly to the voting precinct of Eola, in district No. 2. In this district the Republican judge was an ignorant colored man who could not read or write. The colored voters here voted an open ticket. Four witnesses testify that one of their number gave out the open tickets with the contestant's name upon them. All of these witnesses swore that they saw those ballots deposited in the box. They swore that 61 ballots were cast in this way. They stationed themselves so that they could see the ballots handed out to the voters and by them deposited. The names of the 61 voters were kept and are produced. One white man in addition testified that he voted for contestant. Here were 62 votes sworn to by these four witnesses which were deposited in that box for the contestant.

None of the 62 voters were called to disprove it. None of the six election officers save one were sworn or attempted to make any denial, only one election officer put upon the stand. Not one of the clerks, not the sheriff's officer who held the election, only one of the judges—only one of the six who participated in holding that election—went upon the stand to deny this evidence, and his denial is evasive and inconclusive.

Here you have the evidence of four witnesses, corroborating each other and corroborated by all the circumstances of the case, that 62 votes were cast for the contestant in this voting precinct. Yet there were returned for him only 24.

Counting for him only, therefore, the difference between the 62 and 24 votes, it gives him a majority of 38, enough to elect him to the seat claimed here. We need not apply the stringent and drastic rule of law that we would be authorized to apply in such cases—that where the returns are impeached for fraud, we can throw them out and only count for each candidate those votes he actually proves he received. That rule will be unquestioned. We do not seek to do it in this case. It is not necessary. If we count for the contestant only the votes clearly proven to have been received by him at these precincts, it will give him the election.

I take up the case of Yumyum. This was a district where the black people were very largely in excess, and where they were well organized and enthusiastic for the contestant. They were organized in the most careful, deliberate, and effective manner for this election. Yet the returns for that precinct only give 10 votes to the contestant and 305 votes for the contestee. There were less than 100 white voters and over 300 colored voters in the precinct, and yet, as I have said, there are only 10 votes returned for the contestant and 305 for the contestee.

What is the evidence in regard to this precinct? Why, 39 witnesses went on the stand and testified that they voted the Republican ticket, with the name of the contestant on it, for member of Congress. Nobody contradicts it, nobody attempted to impeach or discredit them. Therefore either the returns are to be discredited in this case or else the 39 witnesses and the friends and workers for contestant have been guilty of willful perjury and subornation of perjury. You can not assume otherwise. You must assume, on the testimony given, that these returns were grossly falsified or else the 35 or 40 witnesses who swore they voted for the contestant swore to what they knew was false.

These 39 include all the witnesses who were called to testify. How many more would have so testified it is impossible to tell. But the number was sufficient to discredit the returns as absolutely unreliable. It is needless to go further over these contested districts. The same element of fraud which prevails in the districts considered prevails throughout the entire 10 districts. Fraud was rampant in every one of them. In the case of each one of these 10 districts the same evidences of fraud were disclosed. There is overwhelming proof on the part of the contestant that this condition of affairs existed as to each one of these contested districts.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should decide these election cases on the law and evidence submitted. I am not one of those who believe that a Democrat ought to be turned out because he is a Democrat or a Republican put in because he is a Republican. The Constitution of our Government placed upon this body the duty of judging the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members. We are not to decide arbitrarily, although we have the power to do so.

Our decision should be a judicial one in fact as well as in name. It should be based upon a judicial consideration of the evidence and a proper application of legal principles. Any other decision would be a display of brute force. Although we have the power, we should exercise it judicially and not arbitrarily. Judged by this standard and by every principle of law, of equity, and of justice, the contestant should be awarded the seat which he claims. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HULL. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like, with his consent, to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. As the vote is to be taken at half past 4 o'clock, if there be no objection, the Chair will hear the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not object.

Mr. HULL. I wish to submit a request, Mr. Speaker, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

I will say that I make that request because the Committee on Military Affairs has had an urgent suggestion from the General of the Army and from the War Department, reenforced to-day by a dispatch which I will read, so you may know the importance of at once disposing of the bill for the reorganization of the Army to-morrow in some way.

I will ask the Clerk to read the telegram I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 22, 1898.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL:

War Department regards prompt passage of Army reorganization bill a matter of supreme importance. This bill is so closely related to the volunteer bill that the passage of both measures appears to be an urgent necessity.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Many MEMBERS. Pass it now!

Mr. HULL. That might not be possible——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it be to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Several MEMBERS. Why not pass the bill now? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The House must be in order, so that the Chair can hear the response of the members. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of gentlemen on both sides, I will submit the request for unanimous consent that the bill be taken up immediately on the close of the present election case. [Cries of "That's right!"]

Mr. CONNOLLY. I object to that.

Mr. SULZER. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I object.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention for a moment: I doubt if the Senate would be in session, and no time could be gained by acceding to the request. I am willing to dispose of the matter at once——

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. The Senate has already adjourned.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). Or agree to a recess until 10 o'clock, if we are certain we can get consideration of the matter at that time. Now, if the Senate is going to remain in session to-night——

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. The Senate adjourned at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HULL. I will say to my friend in perfect frankness that the Senate will not be in session until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman's bill has not been printed, so that members can get hold of it, has it?

Mr. HULL. It has been printed, and is accessible to members.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the Senate will be in session to-morrow?

Mr. HULL. It will be in session at 12 o'clock.

Mr. RIDGELY. I hope the request for a meeting at 10 o'clock will be agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us have it understood that when the House adjourns until 10 o'clock to-morrow it shall reconvene for the special and sole purpose of considering this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will add that suggestion to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock, but that only this matter which has been presented to the House shall be considered.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to inform the House that the funeral of Senator Walthall will take place in the Senate Chamber at 11 o'clock to-morrow, and I unite in the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that we come here and get through with this thing in time to go as a body and attend the funeral of Senator Walthall at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that can be arranged for.

Mr. HULL. I understand that the funeral is to be at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. There may have been some change in the programme in the Senate, but at whatever time the funeral takes place, I hope it may be arranged that the House shall participate in a body.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks arrangements can be made with regard to that to-morrow.

Mr. BRUCKER. If unanimous consent is given to agree to this request, will that cut out the evening session this evening?

The SPEAKER. That will cut out the evening session.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what is the object of cutting out the evening session?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That was not a part of the request. The request was only that we adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. This request itself does not cut out the evening session.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I understood that the adjournment would take place at the conclusion of the evening session.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the adjournment takes place, it will take place until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, if the request is granted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. The request, I believe, was not put in such form as to prevent consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole. It would be considered under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. There has been no arrangement whatever with regard to that.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 4 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, at which time the House ordered a vote to be taken on the contested-election case, the Clerk will read the resolutions which are submitted to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That E. W. Carmack was not elected a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and is not entitled to the seat now held by him.

2. Resolved, That Josiah Patterson was elected a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and should be awarded the seat now held by contestee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the minority resolutions be read, and that the Chair state that the vote will first be taken on the minority resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the minority resolutions, which it is proposed to substitute for the majority resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That E. W. Carmack was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States, and is entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Josiah Patterson was not elected a Representative to the said Congress, and is not entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the substitute.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minority resolutions do not mention the district. I ask that the resolution be put in the usual form—that the words "Tenth district of Tennessee" be added. I am not sure that they are in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not so state.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that that be inserted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the proper words will be inserted.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I make the request that on the vote on this resolution no vote be recorded unless announced in the open House, so that the Clerk can hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already given that direction, and that course will be followed in this case and in all others.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 120, answered "present" 5, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—138.

Adamson,	Davey,	Knowles,	Ridgely,
Allen,	Davis,	Lamb,	Rixey,
Bailey,	De Armond,	Lanham,	Robb,
Baird,	De Graffenreid,	Latimer,	Robertson, La.
Baker, Ill.	De Vries,	Lentz,	Robinson, Ind.
Ball,	Dinsmore,	Lester,	Sauerhering
Barlow,	Dockery,	Lewis, Ga.	Sayers,
Barney,	Driggs,	Lewis, Wash	Settle,
Bartlett,	Elliott,	Little,	Shafroth,
Beach,	Ermentrout,	Livingston,	Shuford,
Bell,	Fitzgerald,	Lloyd,	Sims,
Benner, Pa.	Fitzpatrick,	Love,	Slayden,
Benton,	Fleming,	McClellan,	Smith, Ky.
Berry,	Fowler, N. C.	McCormick,	Sparkman,
Bland,	Fox,	McCulloch,	Stark,
Bodine,	Gaines,	McDowell,	Stephens, Tex.
Botkin,	Griffith,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Bradley,	Griggs,	McRae,	Strowd, N. C.
Brantley,	Gunn,	Maddox,	Sullivan,
Brenner, Ohio	Handy,	Maguire,	Sulzer,
Brewer,	Hartman,	Mahany,	Sutherland,
Broussard,	Hay,	Marshall,	Swanson,
Brucker,	Henry, Miss.	Maxwell,	Talbert,
Brundidge,	Henry, Tex.	Meekison,	Terry,
Burke,	Hilborn,	Meyer, La.	Todd,
Campbell,	Howard, Ga.	Miers, Ind.	Underwood,
Castle,	Hunter,	Moon,	Vandiver,
Clardy,	Jenkins,	Norton, Ohio	Vehslage,
Clark, Mo.	Jones, Va.	Norton, S. C.	Vincent,
Cochran, Mo.	Jones, Wash.	Ogden,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cooney,	Joy,	Otey,	Williams, Miss.
Cooper, Tex.	Kelley,	Peters,	Young, Va.
Cowherd,	King,	Pierce, Tenn.	Zenor.
Cox,	Kitchin,	Rhea,
Cummings,	Kleberg,	Richardson,

NAYS—120.

Aldrich,	Curtis, Kans.	Hepburn,	Pugh,
Alexander,	Dalzell,	Hill,	Ray,
Babcock,	Danford,	Howe,	Royse,
Baker, Md.	Davenport,	Hull,	Russell,
Barham,	Davidson, Wis.	Hurley,	Shelden,
Barrows,	Davison, Ky.	Johnson, Ind.	Smith, Ill.
Bartholdt,	Dayton,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belden,	Dingley,	Kerr,	Southard,
Belford,	Dolliver,	Ketcham,	Southwick,
Belknap,	Dovener,	Kirkpatrick,	Spalding,
Booze,	Evans,	Lacey,	Sperry,
Boutell, Ill.	Faris,	Landis,	Sprague,
Boutelle, Me.	Fenton,	Loud,	Steele,
Bromwell,	Fletcher,	Lybrand,	Stewart, Wis.
Brown,	Foss,	McCall,	Stone, C. W.
Brownlow,	Fowler, N. J.	McCleary,	Stone, W. A.
Brumm,	Gardner,	McDonald,	Strode, Nebr.
Bull,	Gibson,	Mercer,	Sturtevant,
Burleigh,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mesick,	Sulloway,
Burton,	Gillett, Mass.	Miller,	Tawney,
Cannon,	Graff,	Minor,	Tayler, Ohio
Chickering,	Grout,	Moody,	Thorp,
Clark, Iowa	Grow,	Northway,	Walker, Mass.
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hager,	Olmsted,	Walker, Va.
Codding,	Hamilton,	Otjen,	Wanger,
Connolly,	Hawley,	Overstreet,	Weymouth,
Cousins,	Heatwole,	Payne,	White, Ill.
Crump,	Hemenway,	Pearson,	White, N. C.
Crumpacker,	Henderson,	Perkins,	Yost,
Curtis, Iowa	Henry, Ind.	Pitney,	Young, Pa.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—5.

Bishop,	Mann,	Updegraff,	Warner.
Griffin,

NOT VOTING—92.

Acheson,	Eddy,	Lovering,	Shannon,
Adams,	Ellis,	Low,	Shattuc,
Arnold,	Fischer,	McAleer,	Sherman,
Bankhead,	Foote,	McEwan,	Showalter,
Barber,	Greene,	McIntire,	Simpson,
Barrett,	Grosvenor,	Mahon,	Skinner,
Bennett,	Harmer,	Marsh,	Smith, S. W.
Bingham,	Henry, Conn.	Martin,	Snover,
Brewster,	Hicks,	Mills,	Stallings,
Broderick,	Hinrichsen,	Mitchell,	Stevens, Minn.
Brosius,	Hitt,	Morris,	Stewart, N. J.
Butler,	Hooker,	Mudd,	Strait,
Capron,	Hopkins,	Newlands,	Tate,
Carmack,	Howard, Ala.	Odell,	Taylor, Ala.
Catchings,	Howell,	Osborne,	Tongue,
Clarke, N. H.	Jett,	Packer, Pa.	Van Voorhis,
Clayton,	Knox,	Parker, N. J.	Wadsworth,
Colson,	Kulp,	Pearce, Mo.	Ward,
Connell,	Lawrence,	Powers,	Weaver,
Cooper, Wis.	Linney,	Prince,	Wheeler, Ala.
Corliss,	Littauer,	Quigg,	Wilber,
Cranford,	Lorimer,	Reeves,	Williams, Pa.
Dorr,	Loudenslager,	Robbins,	Wilson.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:
Until further notice:
Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. TATE.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. WILSON.
Mr. HOOKER with Mr. CATCHINGS.
Mr. LOVERING with Mr. WHEELER of Alabama.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. CLAYTON.
Mr. MANN with Mr. JETT.
Mr. UPDEGRAFF with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
Mr. PRINCE with Mr. HINRICHSEN.
Mr. WARNER with Mr. BANKHEAD.
On this question:
Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. STRAIT.
Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. LAWRENCE.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. BUTLER.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. CRANFORD.
Mr. FISCHER with Mr. MARTIN.
Mr. MCEWAN with Mr. SIMPSON.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. STALLINGS.
Mr. BISHOP with Mr. GRIFFIN.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. OSBORNE.
Mr. LOW with Mr. MCALEER.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. GREENE, from Thursday, April 21, until Monday, April 25.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I hear by the announcement of the pairs that Mr. CATCHINGS and Mr. HOOKER are paired. I refrained from voting, with the understanding that I was paired with Mr. CATCHINGS. If he is paired there, I want to vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will repeat his statement.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the pairs shows that the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CATCHINGS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. HOOKER. I refrained from voting with the understanding that I was paired with the gentleman from Mississippi. If I am not paired with him, I desire to vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There will be no objection to that idea, Mr. Speaker; I know there will not be by this side.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, although the Chair is hardly permitted under the rule to entertain the request, and this must not be regarded as a precedent by gentlemen——

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman loses his vote by a misapprehension, I wish him to have an opportunity to vote.

Mr. REEVES. I was paired yesterday with the gentleman from Mississippi on the preliminary vote on this matter, on the request of a gentleman on that side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman had better content himself with the announcement.

Mr. REEVES. I would have voted "nay."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper in such cases to vote and then withdraw the vote.

Mr. REEVES. I would have voted "nay."

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD. I agreed to pair with him, and was informed by some gentleman that Mr. BANKHEAD had paired with another gentleman; but I see that my pair is announced as with Mr. BANKHEAD, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM, is absent sick. If here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. QUIGG, is absent on account of sickness, and I ask that he be indefinitely excused.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from New York, that his colleague be given, indefinitely, leave of absence, will be granted.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the adoption of the resolutions as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOODY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The minority resolutions have been substituted.

The SPEAKER. The minority resolutions have been substituted for those of the majority, and the question is, Shall the resolutions as amended pass?

Mr. MOODY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. If the amended resolutions are defeated, will that leave the seat vacant?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question after the vote is taken, if necessary, so far as it is in his power to decide it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry. Is not the substitute resolutions to the effect that Carmack was elected to the seat in Congress? I will ask if the adoption of that resolution does not close the subject?

The SPEAKER. The adoption of that resolution does close the subject.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is that he was elected.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that 5 o'clock has arrived.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is not well taken——

Mr. STEELE. That is the hour at which a recess is to be taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rule has been modified by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The Chair is enforcing the regular order.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, in the confusion a moment ago it was impossible for gentlemen in this part of the House to understand the observation of the Speaker as to the effect of the vote which has just been announced. I ask the Speaker to repeat the observation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he will not repeat the observation, because it was in answer to a parliamentary question, and he hardly thinks he will take upon himself at present to decide that without further consideration of the subject.

Mr. BROMWELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the roll call has been commenced.

Mr. FARIS. What is the effect of a yea vote on this question?

The SPEAKER. That each gentleman must decide for himself. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. What is the question?

Mr. FARIS. I wish to know what a yea vote means on the proposition.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution again, if there is no objection.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the two propositions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late. The Clerk will proceed and call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 118, answered "present" 2, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—136.

Adamson,	Cranford,	Kleberg,	Richardson,
Allen,	Cummings,	Knowles,	Ridgely,
Bailey,	Davey,	Lamb,	Rixey,
Baird,	Davis,	Lanham,	Robb,
Baker, Ill.	De Armond,	Latimer,	Robertson, La.
Ball,	De Graffenreid,	Lentz,	Robinson, Ind.
Barlow,	De Vries,	Lester,	Sauerhering,
Barney,	Dinsmore,	Lewis, Ga.	Sayers,
Bartlett,	Dockery,	Lewis, Wash.	Settle,
Beach,	Driggs,	Little,	Shafroth,
Bell,	Elliott,	Livingston,	Shuford,
Benner, Pa.	Ermentrout,	Lloyd,	Sims,
Benton,	Fitzgerald,	Love,	Slayden,
Berry,	Fitzpatrick,	McClellan,	Smith, Ky.
Bland,	Fleming,	McCormick,	Sparkman,
Bodine,	Fowler, N. C.	McCulloch,	Stark,
Botkin,	Fox,	McDowell,	Stephens, Tex.
Bradley,	Gaines,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Brantley,	Griffith,	McRae,	Strowd, N. C.
Brenner, Ohio	Griggs,	Maguire,	Sullivan,
Brewer,	Gunn,	Mahany,	Sulzer,
Broussard,	Handy,	Marshall,	Sutherland,
Brucker,	Hartman,	Maxwell,	Swanson,
Brundidge,	Hay,	Meekison,	Talbert,
Burke,	Henry, Miss.	Meyer, La.	Terry,
Campbell,	Henry, Tex.	Miers, Ind.	Todd,
Castle,	Howard, Ga.	Moon,	Underwood,
Clardy,	Hunter,	Norton, Ohio	Vandiver,
Clark, Mo.	Jenkins,	Norton, S. C.	Vehslage,
Cochran, Mo.	Jones, Va.	Ogden,	Vincent,
Cooney,	Jones, Wash.	Otey,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cooper, Tex.	Kelley,	Peters,	Williams, Miss.
Cowherd,	King,	Pierce, Tenn.	Young, Va.
Cox,	Kitchin,	Rhea,	Zenor.

NAYS—118.

Aldrich,	Burleigh,	Dingley,	Heatwole,
Alexander,	Burton,	Dolliver,	Hemenway,
Babcock,	Cannon,	Dovener,	Henderson,
Barham,	Chickering,	Evans,	Henry, Ind.
Barrows,	Clark, Iowa	Faris,	Hepburn,
Bartholdt,	Cochrane, N. Y.	Fenton,	Hicks,
Belden,	Codding,	Fletcher,	Hill,
Belford,	Connolly,	Foss,	Howe,
Belknap,	Cousins,	Fowler, N. J.	Johnson, Ind.
Bishop,	Crump,	Gardner,	Johnson, N. Dak.
Booze,	Curtis, Iowa	Gibson,	Kerr,
Boutell, Ill.	Curtis, Kans.	Gillett, Mass.	Ketcham,
Boutelle, Me.	Dalzell,	Graff,	Kirkpatrick,
Bromwell,	Danford,	Griffin,	Knox,
Brown,	Davenport,	Grow,	Lacey,
Brownlow,	Davidson, Wis.	Hager,	Landis,
Brumm,	Davison, Ky.	Hamilton,	Loud,
Bull,	Dayton,	Hawley,	Lybrand,

McCall,	Payne,	Snover,	Tawney,
McCleary,	Pearce, Mo.	Southard,	Tayler, Ohio
McDonald,	Pearson,	Southwick,	Thorp,
Mercer,	Perkins,	Spalding,	Walker, Mass.
Mesick,	Pitney,	Sperry,	Walker, Va.
Miller,	Pugh,	Sprague,	Wanger,
Minor,	Ray,	Steele,	Weymouth,
Moody,	Reeves,	Stewart, Wis.	White, Ill.
Northway,	Royse,	Stone, C. W.	White, N. C.
Olmsted,	Russell,	Stone, W. A.	Yost.
Otjen,	Shelden,	Strode, Nebr.
Overstreet,	Smith, Ill.	Sturtevant,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Cooper, Wis. Ellis.

NOT VOTING—98.

Acheson,	Gillet, N. Y.	McAleer,	Simpson,
Adams,	Greene,	McEwan,	Skinner,
Arnold,	Grosvenor,	McIntire,	Smith, S. W.
Baker, Md.	Grout,	Maddox,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bankhead,	Harmer,	Mahon,	Stallings,
Barber,	Henry, Conn.	Mann,	Stevens, Minn.
Barrett,	Hilborn,	Marsh,	Stewart, N. J.
Bennett,	Hinrichsen,	Martin,	Strait,
Bingham,	Hitt,	Mills,	Sulloway,
Brewster,	Hooker,	Mitchell,	Tate,
Broderick,	Hopkins,	Morris,	Taylor, Ala.
Brosius,	Howard, Ala.	Mudd,	Tongue,
Butler,	Howell,	Newlands,	Updegraff,
Capron,	Hull,	Odell,	Van Voorhis,
Catchings,	Hurley,	Osborne,	Wadsworth,
Clarke, N. H.	Jett,	Packer, Pa.	Ward,
Clayton,	Joy,	Parker, N. J.	Warner,
Colson,	Kulp,	Powers,	Weaver,
Connell,	Lawrence,	Prince,	Wheeler, Ala.
Corliss,	Linney,	Quigg,	Wilber,
Crumpacker,	Littauer,	Robbins,	Williams, Pa.
Dorr,	Lorimer,	Shannon,	Wilson,
Eddy,	Loudenslager,	Shattuc,	Young, Pa.
Fischer,	Lovering,	Sherman,
Foote,	Low,	Showalter,

So the resolution was adopted.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MUDD with Mr. MADDOX, on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9944. An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8875. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi;"

H. Res. 116. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof; and

H. R. 2768. An act for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EDWARD C. WALTHALL.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of deceased, which will take place in the Senate Chamber to-morrow, Saturday, at 12 o'clock m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to Holly Springs, Miss., in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Saturday, at the hour named, and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The message further announced that, in compliance with the foregoing resolution, the Vice-President had appointed as said committee Mr. MONEY, Mr. BERRY, Mr. BATE, Mr. PETTUS, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. GRAY, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. CANNON.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, Senator WALTHALL was one of the most distinguished and loved and lovable men that our State ever produced. As a mark of respect to him, I now move that the House attend his funeral from here to-morrow in a body, and that a committee of nine be appointed to attend his funeral in Mississippi; and as a further mark of respect, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. Before that question is put, I would like to inquire whether the Committee on Pensions desire an evening session?

Mr. ALLEN. Whether the committee desires an evening session or not, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the House attend the funeral in a body, and that a committee of nine be appointed to attend the funeral in Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the committee Mr. ALLEN, Mr. FOX, Mr. HENRY of Mississippi, Mr. LOVE, Mr. SULLIVAN, Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. SPALDING, and Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

The motion of Mr. ALLEN was then agreed to; and accordingly the House, in accordance with its previous order (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.), adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Joseph Holt against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for homes for disabled soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. EDDY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2755) to authorize the President of the United States to cause certain lands heretofore withdrawn from the market for reservoir purposes to be restored to the public domain, subject to entry under the homestead law with certain restrictions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1146); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9638) to increase the number of surgeons in the United States Army, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1148); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9956) granting the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve, in northern Arizona, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1149); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BOTKIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 990) to pension George E. Welles, late colonel Sixty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1139); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1472) granting an increase of pension to Bettie Hord Brown, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1140); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CASTLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4315) to increase the pension of George D. Phinney, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1141); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1702) granting an increase of pension to Nancy G. Allabach, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1142); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3612) to increase the pension of Thomas D. Porter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1143); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8037) granting a pension to Lizzie Waltz, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1144); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9755) for the relief of Matilda Waedel, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1145); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7844) to increase the pension of Mary Broggan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1147); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RIXEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 796) for the relief of the heirs of the late Mrs. Catherine P. Culver, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1150); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. YOST, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5680) for the relief of George W. Graham, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1151); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRUMM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1711) for the relief of the legal representative of George McDougall, deceased, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1152); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLIVAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2077) for the relief of Robert D. Benedict, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1153); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9968) granting a pension to Sarah T. Emery—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10010) granting pension to Anthony Bollinger—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SKINNER: A bill (H. R. 10022) imposing a war tax of $5 on every deal of purchase or sale made through or executed by any stock, produce, or other exchange, or any corporation, company, or person, of a speculative character—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish books of military instruction published by the War Department to the organized militia and volunteer forces of the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LOW: A bill (H. R. 10024) providing for a woman's American department in the Paris Exposition of 1900—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 10049) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to open their reservation for settlement—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BARNEY: A bill (H. R. 10050) to indemnify the State of Wisconsin for swamp and overflowed lands therein granted by Congress to said State, but disposed of by the Government, for cash and otherwise, and to quiet the title of settlers and other purchasers of lands within said State from the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 10051) to increase the number of post quartermaster-sergeants in the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 10058) to repeal an act forbidding banks which have withdrawn circulation to increase circulation within six months thereafter—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A joint resolution (H. Res. 241) providing for the printing and distribution of the consular correspondence respecting the condition of the reconcentrados in Cuba, the state of the war in that island, and the prospects of the projected autonomy, for distribution among foreign countries—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BELFORD: A bill (H. R. 10025) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Martin Delany—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10026) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Worley, deceased, late of Hamblen County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARMACK: A bill (H. R. 10027) for the relief of Mary C. Jackson, of Shelby County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10028) for the relief of the Baptist Church at Grand Junction, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVEY: A bill (H. R. 10029) for the relief of the estate of Phillip McGuire and Catherine McGuire, of New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREENE: A bill (H. R. 10030) granting a pension to Elizabeth Millett, widow of J. E. Millett, late lieutenant of Company E, Thirty-first Iowa Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 10031) granting a pension to John Brisban, of Columbus, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10032) granting a pension to Mahala Hyatt, of Rexville, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10033) granting a pension to George B. Millican—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10034) restoring Alexander D. Harper to the pension roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10035) for the relief of the estate of S. N. Clark, deceased, late of Hinds County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10036) for the relief of the estate of W. W. Dunton, deceased, late of Hinds County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10037) for the relief of the estate of William M. Bowles, deceased, late of Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANHAM: A bill (H. R. 10038) for the relief of W. B. Morrow—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 10039) for the relief of estate of Margaret Barge, deceased, late of Campbell County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 10040) for the relief of Andreas Schneider—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOVE: A bill (H. R. 10041) for the relief of Hampton Wall, of Amite County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MARSH: A bill (H. R. 10042) for the relief of Stephen A. St. John—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAXWELL: A bill (H. R. 10043) for the relief of Elijah McKendry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEEKISON: A bill (H. R. 10044) granting a pension to Joseph Wagstaf—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 10045) for the relief of W. O. Rodney, of Pointe Coupee Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 10046) for the relief of J. N. McIntyre, of Tippah County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10047) for the relief of estate of W. E. Tomlinson, deceased, late of Benton County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VANDIVER: A bill (H. R. 10048) for settlement of claim of Mrs. Lydia Chapman—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CODDING: A bill (H. R. 10052) granting a pension to Rev. Gilbert M. Chamberlin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10053) granting a pension to Fanny Fletcher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10054) to correct the military record of Hiram Sheldon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 10055) granting a pension to James Burnett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10056) increasing the pension of James Webb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10057) granting pensions to William Allen and Isaac Garman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 10059) for the relief of Zachine Dugat, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10060) for the relief of Susan S. Bailey, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10061) for the relief of Belisaire Cormier, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10062) for the relief of Mary M. Hopkins, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10063) for the relief of Mrs. Raymond Riu, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10064) for the relief of Edgar Breaux, of Lafayette Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10065) for the relief of the estate of Owen Conlen—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10066) for the relief of Auguste Alvarado, of Lafayette, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10067) for the relief of estate of Louisa Breaux, deceased, late of Lafayette, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Resolutions of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas at present in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of Gauntlet Lodge, No. 500, Knights of Pythias, of Philadelphia, Pa., in support of House bill No. 6468, granting land at Hot Springs, Ark., for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a sanitarium thereon—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BABCOCK. Papers to accompany House bill No. 9882, to increase the pension of Justus Freer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTLETT. Petition of the heirs of William R. Hardin, deceased, late of Monroe County, Ga., praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the Board of Trade of Macon, Ga., protesting against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELFORD: Resolutions of the Manufacturers' Association of New York, indorsing President McKinley for the position he has maintained in seeking to secure peace with honor—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., in favor of the passage of Senate bill No. 3354, relating to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dexter, Me., for the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Brownville, Me., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BRUCKER: Petition of Symons Bros. & Co., of Saginaw, Mich., protesting against an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BULL: Protest of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., against an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee now held in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protests of Thomas A. Willard and E. A. Phelan, representing a large proportion of the tea trade of the United States, against a tax on stock now on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire: Petition of citizens of Swiftwater, N. H., asking for the passage of bills to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Swiftwater, N. H., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CURTIS of Iowa: Petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Pleasant Prairie, Iowa, protesting against the passage of House bill No. 9481, to dispossess the Indians of the Island of Annette, southeastern Alaska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: Petition of citizens of Neosho Falls, Kans., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. EDDY: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., and the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., in support of House bill No. 8066, relating to appropriations to aid in the holding of a national exposition of American products and manufactures in Philadelphia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of Minneapolis Division, No. 117, Order of Railway Conductors, of Minneapolis, and the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the executive committee, American Forestry Association, against House bill No. 8428, in reference to Executive order of February 22, 1897—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petitions of the Government Commissioners on Tea Standards and of Commissioners of the Tea Trade in the United States at New York; also memorials of Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, and Kurtz & Myers, of Reading, Pa., protesting against an internal-revenue duty upon tea and coffee in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Company, protesting against additional tax on tobacco in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GIBSON: Two petitions of citizens of Jellico and Whitepine, Tenn., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GREENE: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Mellett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to George W. McCloughan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Overton, Nebr., urging the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ord, Nebr., or the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Overton, Nebr., to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Telegrams of Elmer E. Scott, of Madison; E. G. Nicklaus, of Madison; the John C. Groub Company, and Henry Price, and others, of Seymour, Ind., protesting against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee now in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, decree of the circuit court of Jefferson County, Ind., filed in support of bill granting a pension to George B. Millican—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial of officers and members of Joseph R. T. Gordon Post, No. 201, Grand Army of the Republic, of Indiana, in support of bill granting a pension to Mahala Hyatt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Jason B. Brown and 130 other citizens of Seymour, Ind., asking that the name of Alexander D. Harper be restored to the pension rolls—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cambridgeport, Vt., Abbie A. Wyman, presiding, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cambridgeport, Vt., asking for the passage of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cambridgeport, Vt., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Petition of Thomas Smith and other citizens of Farley, Iowa, in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HULL: Petitions of Des Moines Conference of the Evangelical Association of the State of Iowa, for the passage of bills to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Des Moines Conference of the Evangelical Association of Iowa, in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HURLEY: Petition of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., against the internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEWIS of Georgia: Two petitions of citizens of Americus, Ga., and the Chamber of Commerce of Macon, Ga., protesting against a revenue tax on coffee and tea now in the hands of dealers throughout the country—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McALEER: Protests of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., United States Government Commissioners on Tea Standards, and Commissioners of the Tea Trade of the United States, against increase of the internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., against additional tax on tobacco in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: Four petitions of citizens of New York City, favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McRAE: Petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of Hope, Ark., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. MARSH: Petition of 80 citizens of Warsaw, Ill., against the passage of Senate bill No. 2736, for the regulation of insurance companies—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PUGH: Papers to accompany House bill No. 9996, for the relief of John McGowan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Petition of the Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist churches of Oxford, N. Y., for the passage of bill to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist churches of Oxford, N. Y., to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in Goverment buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the Universalist Church of Oxford, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: Petition of North Plains Farmers' Club, of Ionia, Mich., in opposition to giving away homesteads—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SNOVER: Telegram of Sprudel Water Company, of Mount Clemens, Mich., protesting against an internal-revenue tax on mineral water, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of F. Saunders & Co., of Port Huron, Mich., against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: Petition of Excelsior Republican Club, of Albany, N. Y., for the punishment of the assassins of Postmaster Baker and members of his family, at Lake City, S. C.—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, three petitions of German Roman Catholic societies of Albany, N. Y., against the passage of the Lodge immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of James H. Wanning and 5 other citizens of Albany, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cohoes, N. Y., for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cohoes, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska: Petitions of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Lincoln, Nebr., favoring the passage of bills to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Lincoln, Nebr., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STURTEVANT: Remonstrance of citizens of Erie, Pa., against Senate bill No. 2736, regulating insurance—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Methodist Episcopal and Christian churches of Springboro, Pa., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TODD (by request): Resolution of the Board of Trade of Grand Rapids, Mich., favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 3027 and House bill No. 6705, for pure flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TONGUE: Petition of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Brownsville, Oreg., in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Brownsville, Oreg., for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the First Presbyterian Church of Brownsville, Oreg., for the passage of a bill forbidding the interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WANGER: Petitions of the Evangelical Association and Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Perkasie, Pa., in favor of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Evangelical Association, of Perkasie, Pa., for the passage of bills to forbid the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Evangelical Association, of Perkasie, Pa., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. YOUNG of Virginia: Petition of the heirs of William G. Webber, deceased, late of Norfolk County, Va., requesting reference of his claim to the Court of Claims under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of George W. Scott, of Norfolk County, Va., asking reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the heirs of Susan Booth, deceased, late of Nansemond County, Va., praying that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the heirs of Adolphus Goddin, deceased, late of James City County, Va., asking reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the heirs of Benjamin A. Nance, deceased, late of Charles City County, Va., asking reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the heirs of Orloff M. Dorman, deceased, late of Norfolk County, Va., praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 23, 1898.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR WALTHALL.

The casket containing the remains of the deceased Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

At one minute past 12 o'clock the members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Clerk and headed by the Speaker and Chaplain, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the left of the Vice-President, the Sergeant-at-Arms, Clerk, and Chaplain were assigned to seats at the right of the Vice-President's desk, and the members of the House occupied the seats on the floor provided for them.

They were soon followed by the dean and members of the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the President of the United States and his Cabinet ministers, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who were respectively escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

The committee of arrangements of the two Houses and the family and friends of the deceased Senator were also shown to the seats reserved for them.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who through Thine only begotten Son has overcome death and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life, as we come to pay the tribute of our honor and affection to the memory of our beloved friend and brother, we bless Thee that we mourn not as those without hope, being assured that the good man in passing hence lays aside the vesture of decay to be clothed with a garment worthy the nobility of his character, and to enter upon a life exempt from cares and toils and sorrows, in a world where is no more death, neither sorrow, nor shall there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away.

Bring home this consolation to all that gather here to-day, in whose recollection the image of our beloved and noble friend will endure for the rest of mortal life. And especially grant that Thy Heavenly tenderness and grace may come to the heart of the bereaved and smitten widow, between whom and her husband through many, many years a union of almost unexampled sweetness and beauty existed. Comfort her, O Lord Jesus, and grant that the sense of resurrection and eternal life may come with all its benignant power to her heart. And let those of the family who share her grief likewise share this comfort.

Let Thy grace be upon us all; and as we are moving to the bourne of that undiscovered country grant that our lives be worthy of the vocation whereunto we are called, that when we gather up our feet to depart it may be in peace and with the blessed hope of everlasting life. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Saviour. Amen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, by order of the Senate the usual business will be suspended this day to enable the Senate to participate in the funeral ceremonies deemed appropriate upon the death of EDWARD C. WALTHALL, late an honored member of this body from the State of Mississippi. The reading of the Journal will be dispensed with.

Rev. RANDOLPH HARRISON MCKIM, D. D., assisted by Rev. LOUIS G. WOOD, read the burial service of the Episcopal Church, including the hymn beginning:

Abide with me, fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens, Lord, with me abide.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The body of our late brother will now be committed to the charge of the officers of the Senate and the committee representing the two Houses of Congress, to be conveyed to his late home in Mississippi, there to be buried among his family and friends.

The casket was borne from the Senate Chamber by the pall bearers, selected from the Capitol police, and was accompanied by the committee of arrangements of the two Houses and the family and friends of the deceased Senator.

The invited guests having retired from the Senate Chamber,

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 25, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 23, 1898.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BELFORD. My colleague, Mr. ODELL, is noted in the RECORD as not voting yesterday. I wish to say he was absent by reason of the death of his son. Had he been present, he would have voted for the majority resolutions in the contested-election case.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my notice that at the conclusion of the business now under consideration or about to be called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] I shall call up the election case of Wise vs. Young.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely desire to observe that, in view of the fact that we have all come here to provide for the common defense of the country, these partisan matters might well be pretermitted while we are engaged in the business of the nation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan to give notice that after this matter has been disposed of, he will then call up the election case.

Mr. MESICK. Yes; at the conclusion of the bill which the gentleman from Iowa desires to call up.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I think I do not violate any propriety by saying that as the House will be expected to go to the Senate at 12 o'clock, and as at 2 o'clock, according to previous order, eulogies are to be delivered in the House upon a deceased Senator—and for that reason we have met here at 10 o'clock—we hope that the bill I am about to call up may go through speedily.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of the statement just made by the gentleman from Iowa—and I was aware of the circumstances that he has stated—I ask the gentleman from Michigan whether he will not withdraw the notice he has given about trying to call up the contested-election case? The gentleman can call it up on Monday just as well as to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it will facilitate the passage of this bill if the gentleman from Michigan will change his notice so as to name Monday.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The case can be called up on Monday after the reading of the Journal just as well as to-day.

Mr. MESICK. In view, then, of the fact that the situation is as it is, I will withdraw the notice I have given and give notice that I will call up this election case on Monday next.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. I now ask that the bill (H. R. 9878) for better organization of the line of the Army of the United States be taken up and considered in the House——

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust the gentleman is not going to ask that we waive the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will allow the bill to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Time is going to be taken up, at any rate, in sending the bill back and forth between the two Houses, and we certainly can get as correct an idea of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole and make better time. I will say to the gentleman that the call for troops is being withheld in expectation of favorable action of the House this morning on this bill, and I have assured the War Department that I believe the House will indorse the request of the General of the Army and the Secretary of War and all parties concerned for the prompt consideration of the bill. If the House chooses to reject the bill, of course the call for troops can be issued on the basis of the present law, which is ten companies and single battalion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to say for myself—and I am speaking only for myself—that my request for the consideration of this bill in the usual way does not contemplate one moment of delay beyond the time necessary to consider the measure properly.

Mr. HULL. I think we can get through with the bill sooner in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know why.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that there are some features of this bill to which I am very much opposed, and we would have a better chance to eliminate them in Committee of the Whole than in the House. Therefore, if the request of the gentleman from Iowa requires unanimous consent. I must insist on the bill being considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. I understand it will require unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. The demand that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole is not prompted by any desire to delay its consideration.

Mr. HULL. As a single objection would probably prevent the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill No. 9878.

Mr. HAY. I suggest to the gentleman that before going into Committee of the Whole we had better have some agreement as to the time we are going to stay there.

Mr. HULL. I was going to include that in my motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. HULL. I think it is absolutely necessary. Therefore, pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I move that at 11 o'clock a vote be taken on a motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, and that immediately upon the rising of the committee a vote be taken on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is utterly impossible to know now whether we shall get through the bill by that time. There is every anxiety to consider the bill and consider it speedily, but it ought also to be considered carefully.

Mr. HULL. Will gentlemen agree to limit general debate to thirty minutes?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am entirely willing to do that.

Mr. BAILEY. I am inclined to think that the five-minute debate would be sufficient.

Mr. HULL. I would like very much to proceed under the five-minute rule immediately, if possible, and if gentlemen on that side will agree to my request, I will modify it and ask that the general debate be closed at once and that we proceed in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has the bill been read?

Mr. HULL. It has not yet been read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It will be time enough when the bill is read to fix that. There will be no unnecessary delay in the consideration of the bill, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It can be done in Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent just as well as in the House.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read, the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States.

The bill was read at length.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out the words "one hundred," in line 24, page 2, and insert "eighty-four."

Strike out of line 25, page 2, the words "twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "six," and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That in the event of a call by the President for either volunteers or the militia of the country the President is authorized to accept the quotas of troops of the various States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, as organized under the laws of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia."

Insert, after the word "promotion," in line 23, on page 4, the words "or honorable discharge."

Strike out all after the word "men," in line 1, on page 5, and insert the following:

"And nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing a permanent increase of the commissioned or enlisted force of the Regular Army beyond that now provided by the law in force prior to the passage of this act, except as to the increase of twenty-five majors provided for in section 1 hereof."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in order to insure the action of the House to-day on the bill, and the consideration of it promptly under the five-minute rule, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole—or I make the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill, and pending that I ask that all general debate be closed in five minutes.

Mr. RIDGELY. You can not make that motion now.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; I can.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to proceed with his first proposition, that general debate run for thirty minutes. We ought to have a full explanation of the bill from the gentleman himself. I do not desire to say anything upon it, and am sure there will be no delay by gentlemen on this side.

Mr. HULL. Very well; I am satisfied to do anything to expedite the matter. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in Committee of the Whole in thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. HULL was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9678. The first thing will be the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All general debate has been limited by consent of the House to thirty minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to be called down after I have occupied five minutes.

This bill, as reported at the present time, is a very material change, as will be seen from the original bill as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, in its provisions regarding what shall be done with the officers and also the enlisted men at the close of hostilities. I shall leave to other members of the committee a more detailed discussion of the bill in its various features; and simply wish to say at this time that the General of the Army was before our committee and recommended that the infantry force of the United States should be modified in accordance with the plan suggested here, informing us that the force is not sufficient in the time of war with the present limited number of privates.

These companies have a full complement of officers and only fifty privates, each company with a full force of regimental company officers, and it will be but a few months before the companies will probably be reduced to twenty-five men each on a fighting basis. That number will not be sufficient to perform effective service, and in officers is enormously expensive.

The question of keeping up the Regular Army at present amounts to an expenditure of at least $23,000,000 a year in time of peace, and if the Congress of the United States refuses to authorize a sufficient fighting force for the various companies and regiments in time of war, then that amount is simply spent for the practical purpose of keeping up the Regular Army as an ornament. Do gentlemen opposed to this bill want this?

The General of the Army urged that we should make the various companies of infantry 100 privates each; but after a conference with the National Guard officers from the various States—so many of whom were here quite recently—we fixed the number of privates for each company at 84, which number, with noncommissioned officers, make 106 enlisted men, to conform with the number provided in a large majority of States in their organization of the National Guard, but make no change in the officers.

I want to say further that the War Department on yesterday telegraphed and telephoned to me that it was exceedingly important to have this bill passed at once, so that the call for troops could be issued, and which would enable the Executive in the call to prescribe the mode of organizing the volunteer forces. I answered that I believed the bill would pass the House without doubt to-day, and that I had very little doubt that it would pass the Congress of the United States promptly. Otherwise the regulations would prescribe for volunteers the present organization of the Regular Army.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HULL. Well, I have only desired to take up five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. We ought to have a full explanation of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I was going to say I will yield time to gentlemen on the committee who will debate that question, and describe the features of the bill more fully. I was only desirous of stating at this time the wishes of the War Department.

The General, as I have said, is exceedingly urgent in reference to the organization of the infantry. This organization is suggested with the idea of effecting a landing in Cuba, and it will take a short time—possibly several weeks—to bring the troops properly under control, and discipline and harden the volunteers into soldiers, as well as to drill and equip the troops and thus make an efficient army. The Guard may be familiar with tactics, but it will take time and work to harden and mold them into effective soldiers.

The Government of the United States has done something that no other nation on earth would do—go into war without any provision whatever for a land force. The volunteers, of course, will supplement the Army and become the fighting force of the nation in time, but it takes time, and the Government of the United States has never yet got ready for a war until war is upon us. Now, in this case we have provided absolutely by this bill that the only time when we can have any increase of the Regular Army, not of the official force only, but of the enlisted men, is while hostilities are actually existing; and I want to say further that the experts on our coast defenses were unanimous in the opinion that it would be absolutely impossible to put volunteer forces in command of your coast defenses and have them educated in three months so that they could man the guns and defend our coast from an attack of the enemy.

The increase in artillery is absolutely imperative, because of the changed conditions of your artillery. You have your great disappearing guns. Knowledge gained in our civil war is no benefit. The same conditions do not exist. It is a matter of education of months, of the most skilled officers, to understand the management, to understand the range finding, to understand the sighting, to understand how to hit the object; and with a vessel going 22 knots an hour, even two minutes' delay may defeat the very object of your coast defenses. By putting ignorant and untrained men—and by ignorant I do not mean ignorant men in the general sense, but ignorant of this specialty—into this work, you absolutely leave every point of attack in the United States without a defender. You might as well have no coast defense.

Mr. SAYERS. Is the gentleman prepared to inform the committee positively——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. HULL. I will withhold enough time to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SAYERS. Is the gentleman prepared to inform the committee positively that when war shall have ceased, the Army, including the commissioned officers as well as the noncommissioned officers and privates, shall resume its peace basis? I ask his attention to lines 3 and 4 on page 5, which read as follows:

That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the absorption through promotion or honorable discharge of supernumerary commissioned officers.

Mr. HULL. I think section 6, with the amendment drawn by Colonel GRIFFIN, Colonel MARSH, and Colonel COX, makes that absolutely clear. The question was fully gone over in committee and I think is clear. It is on page 5, and I want to say——

Mr. COX. I want to ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas to that language.

Mr. HULL. And I want to say if there is any doubt about that, the Congress of the United States in session can legislate at any time and provide means by which this provision of law shall at once be carried into effect.

When the two companies that are now unformed, provided for in the second section of the bill, two companies to each infantry regiment—for that is all it applies to, except the additional lieutenants of artillery—when they are disbanded there will be supernumerary officers, unless there are vacancies enough in the other companies of the line to absorb them through the transfer from those companies to the other companies of that regiment. If there is a surplus left after that, then it is assumed that the War Department will transfer the best officers, and the least deserving officers of the other supernumeraries will be the ones that will be granted an honorable discharge.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa why he does not provide that the enlisted men may be absorbed through promotion? It might happen that a company in the Regular Army would be so depleted in the war that there would be many vacancies, and that the men who enlisted——

Mr. HULL. I think I catch the point of my friend, and I want to say that in the case of enlisted men the word "transfer" covers that entire subject. The noncommissioned officers are not commissioned by the President, but by the company officers, or by the colonel, on the recommendation of the captain. Of course, in transferring enlisted men from one company to another, there could be a noncommissioned appointment, if the captain and the colonel desire. So that I think the word "transfer" covers absolutely the same thing as the other covers concerning the officers who are commissioned.

Mr. BAILEY. My whole anxiety was that the men and the officers should be placed precisely upon the same footing.

Mr. HULL. They are through this.

Mr. BAILEY. And so the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill says to the House that the only promotion which will absorb any of these additional officers will be in cases where officers now serving in the companies now organized, or officers then serving in the companies now organized——

Mr. HULL. That is better.

Mr. BAILEY. Shall resign or die, and these men shall simply be assigned to those places.

Mr. HULL. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY. But in no instance will there be an increase of officers under this bill except the twenty-five majors, that seem to be the necessary number under the three-battalion organization.

Mr. HULL. Precisely; that is all there is to it.

Mr. COX. One minute.

Mr. HULL. The real object of the language of that section is absolutely for the purpose of preventing increase of the officers or men in time of peace.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the language is sufficient. I think it does it; but I want it clearly understood in the House before the House agrees to that construction.

Mr. HULL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before the gentleman yields, I wish to ask him whether the effect of the bill is to make any increase in the Army at all in times of peace except the increase of the twenty-five majors?

Mr. HULL. The bill as now prepared makes absolutely no increase except the twenty-five majors.

Mr. McMILLIN. And no increase is possible except to that extent?

Mr. HULL. I think absolutely none.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOCKERY. The chairman of the committee can explain the bill. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not he does not think it would be wise to amend the bill in this respect?

That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the absorption of transfer or promotion.

Mr. HULL. No, because under the law, and this bill especially, officers are not promoted in their regimental organizations, but where there is a vacancy it is filled by the senior officer from any regiment in the Army in that arm of the service, so that promotion makes transfer under the law.

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. I think we are all agreed upon the necessity of reorganizing our Regular Army, but there seems to be this difficulty with your committee. You seem to be attempting to reorganize the Army upon the twelve-company basis of three battalions of four companies each without increasing the number of men that we have in the Regular Army and without reducing the number of officers. Now, the question I wish to ask is, Why not at once have that reorganization? Let us assume that the Army as it is now organized is simply a mass of men and officers. Now let us organize it with twelve companies filled up to the law as we pass it, and officer it, and have three battalions, without any difference in the number of regiments at all.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it does not make any more regiments, and the bill does provide for a difference in the war strength and the peace strength. When in war, we need more fighting men, but in time of peace we do not need the fighting men; and we keep up the Regular Army officers on the theory that in time of war we have a trained body of men ready for war. This bill will increase the number of fighting men in time of war and disband them in time of peace.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One question.

Mr. RIDGELY. Just a word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do you have twelve first lieutenants?

Mr. HULL. Under the regulations one first lieutenant is detailed as adjutant and one first lieutenant is detailed as quartermaster.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman yields, I would like to ask if these twenty-five majors are to be selected absolutely on account of seniority?

Mr. HULL. They are, and it will take twenty-five captains who served during the civil war and have been in the Army as captains and lieutenants ever since.

Mr. HOPKINS. These men ought to be selected on account of merit rather than on account of seniority.

Mr. HULL. You can not do that under the law, and it is not right. Every one of these men must have been in the Army a long time before he can get his majority, and he has to pass a strict examination of his qualifications, both mentally and morally.

Mr. HOPKINS. But it excludes the promotion of men in the Army who may have military genius of the first order, and I think it ought to provide for both classes.

Mr. HULL. Military genius is not developed in time of peace, as we have had during the last thirty years.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the bill that is now before the House could not pass the Congress of the United States except under extraordinary circumstances like the present; and I do not believe that the Congress of the United States, because we have gone to war, should become hysterical and wish to rush legislation through here that is not approved by the people and will not meet the approval of the people, simply because it is claimed that an exigency exists that requires some special action. Now, I did not object yesterday when unanimous consent was asked to call up this bill, because I believed that the bill was entitled to a hearing, but I do not think it ought to pass, and know that it does not meet the approval of the people of the United States in its present status, and we should be allowed reasonable time in which to discuss its provisions and amend the various paragraphs.

It comes in here under false pretenses. It is not a bill to reorganize the Army. It is a bill to increase the standing army of the United States from 26,000 men that it now has to 61,000 men.

Mr. MARSH. In time of war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In time of war, if the gentleman wants it that way. There is a sentiment among a few people of this country that want a large standing army in the United States in time of peace as well as in time of war, and the gentlemen on this floor who are advocating this bill brought it in here some weeks ago, without any provision that the Army should be reduced in time of peace. It is their intention and their desire to fix a permanent standing army on the people of this country.

Mr. MARSH. Does the gentleman charge that upon the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did the committee's first bill provide for any decrease after the war was over?

Mr. MARSH. It provided for mustering out every one of the soldiers, the enlisted men, down to 26,610.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As originally reported?

Mr. MARSH. As originally reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not so understand it. I say the sentiment behind this movement, my understanding of the bill when it came before this House, was that the committee did not originally provide for that decrease.

Mr. KING. The bill as originally drawn did not provide for the decrease——

Mr. MARSH. It did not provide for the decrease of officers, but it did for the enlisted men.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may be the bill as originally drawn that I saw. But whether it did so or not the sentiment of the gentlemen behind it is to increase and keep a standing army in this country in time of peace as well as in time of war, and although this bill provides the decrease shall come in time of peace and the Army be reduced to its present basis when the war is over, I say that they know that if we once increase it pressure will be brought to bear on Congress, in the hurry and excitement of business, to maintain the Army on the basis you are increasing it to now. Your constituents and my constituents do not want the standing army of the United States to fight this war. There is hardly a man on this floor who has not received letters from his constituents stating that they would be glad to volunteer, glad to fight for their country, if they can be officered by their home men.

They want to know their officers and be officered by men who have been raised and who have lived among them. That is the sentiment of the people of this country, and there is no reason why this bill should pass to-day in order that the President can issue the proclamation. The gentlemen who bring this bill before the House know that at this very hour the President of the United States can issue his proclamation calling for volunteers under the bill that we passed yesterday.

Mr. HULL. Will my friend remember that we have already statutes that prescribe what a regiment is?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did not your bill yesterday provide what a regiment shall be?

Mr. HULL. Not what a regimental organization should consist of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wherein does this bill make any difference?

Mr. HULL. Read the bill all through and you will see.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill provided that volunteers should be called out on the basis of the present organization of State troops——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I should like to have order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order, and gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] will control the balance of the time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He says that the Congress of the United States has become hysterical. It seems to me that the gentleman himself is hysterical. We can consider this bill, and it has been considered very fully and very freely in different forms for more than three weeks. Now, the gentleman says the people of the United States do not want this bill. I say that if the people of the United States know what this bill is, they do want it. What is it? This bill, Mr. Chairman, is a bill for the purpose of reorganizing the Army.

The increase made in this bill is made for the purpose of obtaining the three-battalion formation. The three-battalion formation is recognized by every military authority in the world to be the best formation that can possibly be made. If we are to go to war now, if we send our troops to the front now, the infantry would go to certain death; because under our present formation we can not compete with men who have the three-battalion formation, which is the civilized formation of the world. That is the reason for increasing the infantry. The cavalry is not increased at all, the artillery is increased because we are compelled to have the batteries upon our seacoast properly manned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not possible for a military committee to draft a bill that will reorganize the Army, without increasing the Army?

Mr. HAY. It is only possible by consolidating the regiments and thereby legislating out of office worthy officers who ought not to be legislated out of office and who are needed in the present crisis.

The gentleman talks about carrying on war with the volunteers. But it is necessary that there should be some nucleus around which to train these volunteers. Let the gentleman undertake himself to drill a company, and I venture to say it will be weeks before he can bring that company into such a state of efficiency as will fit them to go into battle.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Months, not weeks.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] whether it is not the primary purpose of this bill to furnish commands for officers and for graduates of West Point, who would not have commands if this bill were not passed?

Mr. HAY. No, sir; that is not the purpose of this bill at all; its purpose is to put the Regular Army upon such a footing that it will not be a mere ornament, as was said by the gentleman from Iowa, but will be a defense, a tower of strength to the United States in this war which is now being waged with Spain.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the gentleman another question: If the primary purpose of the bill is not what I have just indicated, is not that really the result?

Mr. HAY. No, sir; because every officer who may be commissioned and go into the war under this bill—every officer added to the Army by the provisions of the bill—will be discharged from the Army immediately upon the cessation of hostilities. There is no question about that. There is no proposition here to increase the standing army. A standing army is a permanent thing. This is a temporary measure; and if it passes, the Army, when this war ends, will not be increased to the extent of one man or one officer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MARSH. I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if we can for one moment bring our minds to bear on what we are trying to do, I think we shall get out of the trouble which seems to hang over this question with members who have not given it proper examination. What is the proposition here? You have your Army—the skeleton of an army. Its companies are mere skeletons; it is not in a fighting condition at all. Now, what does this bill propose? So far as any increase of the Army is concerned, it simply proposes to call for men to volunteer in the Regular Army if they choose to do so. But it does not disturb the State organizations in the least; it will have no effect on them whatever.

Now, it will be entirely a matter of choice with each individual whether he will go into the Regular Army. If he chooses, he can keep out of the Regular Army and go into the volunteer service. Yesterday we passed the bill for calling out volunteers. We got it in good shape. Now, if there are men who desire to go into the Regular Army, to become soldiers under the officers of the Regular Army, what objection is there to it? On what ground can there be an objection?

Mr. KING. Will my distinguished friend permit me a moment?

Mr. COX. Now, let me carry you right along one step further. Suppose we say we will increase the Regular Army. Why, gentlemen, do you not want the Army of the United States increased if you are going into war?

Mr. KING, Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, and others. No.

Mr. COX. You do not want the Regular Army increased in time of war?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, sir; not the Regular Army.

Mr. COX. What are you going to do in this matter?

Mr. KING. Depend on the volunteers and the militia.

Mr. COX. We already have passed the bill for volunteers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And we are satisfied.

Mr. COX. Then you ought to discharge your Regular Army, for it can not fight in the condition in which it now is.

A MEMBER. Do away with it altogether.

Mr. GAINES. If it can not fight under the present circumstances, we ought to discharge it.

Mr. COX (to Mr. GAINES). How much do you know about the Regular Army? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. As much as some people who think that they "know it all." [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Now, the point is this: I have said on this floor more than once that I am as much opposed to the increase of the Regular Army as any man. But when it comes to going to war (and we are going to war) I want an army that can fight. I want our Army to consist either of volunteers or regular troops according to where the men who enlist in this force may please to go. Now, what are you going to do? Are you going to march out this skeleton of a Regular Army in battle array with an average of about six or eight men to a company? That is the peace basis. We propose now to bring the Regular Army up to a war basis. And whenever the war shall cease every additional man and every additional officer will be mustered out of the service except the twenty-five majors.

Gentlemen, I leave the question with you. I think we had better be prepared with both volunteer and regular forces. I will not vote to increase the Regular Army in time of peace; I will not vote for one additional man in time of peace. And members of our committee worked for a week in order to reach proper restrictions in this regard, so that there might be no permanent increase.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Your purpose was only to make the Regular Army efficient in time of war?

Mr. COX. That is all. Now, if gentlemen do not want the Regular Army efficient in time of war, let this force be abolished. But I want it efficient. I want it to fight, if we are going to have any fighting.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Could not the Regular Army be made equally efficient by consolidating the troops and introducing the three-battalion system?

Mr. COX. Let us see how we would do that. The gentleman says "consolidate." Does that increase the force? Let the gentleman answer for himself. Does the consolidation increase in any respect your force?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No.

Mr. COX. Then, of course, the gentleman does not get the necessary number of men, and that is the essential point. That is what we are fighting for. You have got to have the men to do the fighting. Now, you say——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the gentleman misapprehends. They would go out as skeleton companies and be ineffective as instruments of war, he says, because they do not have the three-battalion system.

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But I say there is nothing to keep you from keeping up a proper force under the present system by filling up the companies and organizing them into the three-battalion system, by consolidation if you so desire.

Mr. COX. You are right in that. But let us talk together a little while and we will understand each other better. You can do that, as you suggest, but you will not have the force that you will have by filling up the skeleton companies. It will not be a force strong enough for active operation, if you need a large force.

Now, all of us know that nobody goes into the Regular Army except by a voluntary act. Let me give you a little history on that point—I refer to what transpired in our late war. There was a tremendous war; and when the offer was made to men to volunteer in the Regular Army, that Army never reached but 23,000 or 24,000 men. All the work was done by volunteers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The general debate having now been exhausted, the Clerk will report the first section of the bill for debate and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the peace organization of each regiment of infantry now in service shall embrace 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 2 majors, 10 captains, 12 first lieutenants, 10 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 chief musician, 2 principal musicians, 2 battalions of 4 companies each, and 2 skeleton or unmanned companies; the organized companies to be constituted as now authorized by law: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored troops: And provided further, That the vacancies in the grade of major created by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the infantry arm.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, the Army organization bill, which was before the House some two weeks ago, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and did not meet the approbation of the House, but which was recommitted to the committee, provided for infantry companies of 250 men. This bill provides for infantry companies of 106 men. That bill provided that the infantry regiments should be enlisted up to 3,000 enlisted men. This bill provides that they may be recruited up to 1,252 men. This bill provides that the cavalry shall have 100 men to a company.

And now I submit to gentlemen on both sides of this House if 106 enlisted men to an infantry company and 100 enlisted men to a cavalry company is not a small enough organization? Is it sensible to put into the field well-trained and educated officers—captains and first and second lieutenants—to command but forty or fifty men in a company?

My own judgment, I want to say now, not directly in connection with what I have been saying—but I want to say to this House, and I want to say it to the country, that the provisions in the former bill that was sent back to the committee providing for 250 enlisted men in a company and 3,000 men in the regiments of infantry did not have the approbation of the War Department nor the General of the Army nor the officers connected with the War Department; and if the impression made in the House was that the company organization of 250 men and the regimental organization of 3,000 men was the result of the recommendation of the army officers or of the War Department, I desire to say now to the House and to the country that that was a mistake.

Mr. RIDGELY. Why did the committee put it in, then?

Mr. MARSH. Some other person may answer that question other than myself.

I say this simply to the country, in justification of the War Department, and in justification of the regular officers of the Army. I have hunted in vain for a Regular Army officer anywhere who will say that a company of infantry should contain more than 150 men. It has been stated by as high authority as any in the War Department that the number of 106 men in an infantry company, to use the words of the officer before our committee, an officer sent there by the War Department on the request of the Military Committee, that this number is the ideal number, the unit—"an ideal number for the organization of an infantry company."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARSH. I would like, with the consent of the committee, to be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, the large increase that is here made in the artillery, in my judgment, from the very best information that I can obtain from the best informed men connected with the Army, is warranted on the assumption that 200 men to a company in the heavy artillery battery is the number that ought to be recruited. And I have not time to read it, but I will call the attention of those gentlemen who may differ with me on that subject to the testimony of Lieutenant Willcox, of the Seventh United States Artillery, delivered before the Committee on Military Affairs, and whose statement is embodied in the report of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, since the civil war the mode and manner of handling seacoast defenses have changed as greatly as has naval construction from the old wooden ship to the present steel battle ship. Now, there is one provision in this bill that I desire to call to the especial attention of this House. I do not want this House to pass this bill with the slightest misunderstanding as to what its effect is. We do provide in the last section for the muster out and honorable discharge of all enlisted men above 26,610. We do provide that the official line of the Army, when the war is over, shall be reduced to the number that is now allowed by law, excepting the twenty-five majors. But, gentlemen, the bill does not provide for the mode and the manner of ascertaining what officers shall be mustered out and honorably discharged, and it was thought by your committee that it was best to leave the question as to the mode and manner of ascertaining who should be mustered out, of the supernumerary officers, to the Congress when that times comes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman——

Mr. MARSH. And now, Mr. Chairman, I have made this statement in order that the House may understand the effect of this provision as I understand it. My understanding may be incorrect.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a question? I understand the gentleman from Illinois makes the very frank statement that the effect of the last section of this bill is to leave the officers in service, inasmuch as the bill does not provide the manner in which they shall be mustered out of service. Therefore, if I understood him aright, it requires additional legislation to muster them out.

Mr. KING. And you never can get that after you get them in.

Mr. MARSH. Perhaps you may be wrong in that. I did not mean to state that positively; but it will either require additional legislation to provide the manner of mustering them out, or it may be—and that is for the lawyers to determine—that under this authority the President of the United States can arbitrarily select Lieutenant Jones and Captain Wilkes and Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, and whomsoever he pleases, upon his own ipse dixit and judgment, and muster them out. I believe that the law is susceptible of that kind of a construction.

Mr. KING. Will the distinguished gentleman permit me?

Mr. MARSH. And, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, I have called the attention of this House to this provision, because I want no one to be able to say at any time in the future that he has been misled by this committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to say, in regard to the question of mustering out, that it would be a matter of regulation if Congress takes no steps; but the fact that the supernumerary officers would have to be mustered out is, in my judgment, absolute, and if there is no further legislation, a regulation of the War Department as to the selection of the men to be mustered out would be absolute.

Now, I want, in closing, in addition to that, to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a telegram received from the Adjutant-General of the Army, and then I want to make a very brief statement as to a telephonic message from the White House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 23, 1898.

Hon. J. A. T. HULL:

Have sent your telegram to President in order to get authoritative reply. All plans of this Department are being built on prompt passage of three-battalion bill. Have just seen Senator CULLOM, and he thinks it quite possible to have Senate assemble after funeral to-day to consider any Army bill that will pass the House. Let me know as things progress.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say in addition that the President called me up by telephone, through his private secretary, and in answer to the inquiry that I sent to the Department said that they were holding the call there, and that on the assurance that the bill would be passed it would be signed at once, and the Secretary of War then came to the telephone and authorized me to say to the House that the call would be signed immediately, and that the President expressed the hope that Congress would respond by the prompt passage of the bill, so as to save all complications.

I give the House the benefit of the information I have directly from the executive branch of the Government, and, in addition to this, I have a message in my hand sent to the Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE, of Indiana, from the Adjutant-General of the Army, which expresses the views of the Department, saying:

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 23, 1898.

To Col. GEORGE W. STEELE:

The immediate passage of three-battalion bill is matter of great importance, as I understand the President is holding back call for volunteers until action is had.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

The latter part of that is done away with by the statement of the Secretary of War that the call will be signed on the assumption that Congress will pass the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question right there? I ask if the volunteer bill that we passed the other day did not provide that these State troops should volunteer in their present organizations?

Mr. HULL. The bill passed the other day simply provided for the commissioning of the officers of those organizations. It had nothing to do with the company or regimental organization whatever, except that they should come in under the rules and regulations applicable to the Regular Army. This bill deals with company and regimental organizations in time of war.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not a very high compliment to those who have heretofore been in charge of our military department for them to tell the House of Representatives that in the very face of a war they are not organized to meet its requirements. It seems to me that in these thirty years of peace the military establishment of the Government ought to have been so far perfected that they could go to battle without delaying for the action of Congress. I pass that, however, without further comment; and coming to this bill, I desire to say that if I had possessed the power to have framed it I would have framed it upon a different line.

It seems to be universally admitted that we must reorganize our system and adopt the three-battalion system. Realizing that necessity, I would have met it by consolidating the companies which are already provided, and I would have reorganized the Army without adding a single man to it, even in this time, because I believe it better to fight this war with volunteers than by an addition to the Regular Army. But if we could not have obtained such action as that, then I should have agreed with our friends on the Military Committee, that it being necessary to reorganize, if we could not reorganize on our plan we would have reorganized upon another, provided this reorganization was limited to the exigencies of the war.

The committee have very wisely, as I believe, adopted a provision that makes the provisions of this bill operative when, and only when there has been a declaration of war. Still we were not content on this side of the House, so jealous are we, and, I think, so jealous ought we to be, of any increase of the standing army in time of peace or for the purposes of peace, that we were opposed to it in that form, because we did not think it provided a sufficient guaranty for the disbandment of the addition to the army after the war was over. This objection was so strong that the House recommitted this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That committee have reported it back with another and very important amendment. They have provided that all the men added to the Army for the war shall be dismissed when the war is over. If they had made it perfectly clear that these men were to be dismissed without further legislation of Congress, then, although on this side of the House we do not think it the wisest way to have dealt with the emergency, yet, inasmuch as it was the only way the House would deal with it, and inasmuch as we had safeguarded it to the extent that it was only operative in time of war, we would have supported that as the best, not that could be done, but as the best that would be done and as better than to leave it undone. I say now to the gentleman from Iowa that he can practically command the united support of the whole House for his bill if he will remove all doubt about the manner in which the officers are to be discharged.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will read the last proviso there and can suggest an amendment that will make it more absolutely certain, the committee will accept it, because we expected it to be absolute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe all ambiguity could be removed with reference to the officers if that language employed with reference to the privates were adopted:

Provided further, That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the absorption or transfer or honorable discharge of supernumerary commissioned officers and the honorable discharge or transfer of supernumerary enlisted men.

Now, it would require no legislation of Congress, because these officers are defined and the privates both are defined, and at the close of the war the company that had these officers would simply be mustered out of the service. There would be no question of promotion or absorption. The transfer would be allowable, I grant you. Suppose a vacancy created by death or by any other cause in a company now existing; I would have no objection to transfer either the men or the officers from the companies which this bill authorizes to be added to the Army over to those companies which now exist. All I desire, and all this side of the House desires, is that the additions to the Army shall be kept separate from the existing Army, so that when the war is over they can go out of the service as if they had never been in it.

Mr. COX. One moment in that connection, if the gentleman will yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The very same difficulty has been gone over time and time again in the committee. Now, then, that last clause put in there as an amendment, is not that strong enough and sufficient to cut any increase out?

Mr. BAILEY. The fact that it is a subject of controversy—the fact that the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee, here admits that it may require further legislation, I think emphasizes the necessity to make it so plain that it can not be misunderstood.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit me a suggestion. I understand what the gentleman wants is to get out of the service at the end of the war these two companies that are added, with their officers.

Mr. BAILEY. And the skeleton companies that are filled up.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman could guarantee that these officers or men were not going to be killed, then he could get these exact men out; but otherwise you can not by any amendment or legislation upon this bill get these very people out.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not agree with the gentleman from Virginia. I think the added companies are separate and distinct from the existing companies. Now, all I desire is that the added companies, officers and all, shall be kept so distinct that at the end of a war they can simply be taken out of the Army, as if they had never been in it.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me a suggestion? He will find this difficulty: That as the war progresses the officers commissioned in the two skeleton companies may be promoted to some other company under the present law.

Mr. BAILEY. That does not affect my contention; I recognize that. The officer going into that company at the end of the war would be in another company, and would have taken the place of somebody else; and, being in that company, he is not touched. We do not desire to follow a man from one of these companies into another company and take off his uniform, because he could not go into the other company until he succeeds some other man.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not think the only fair way would be to leave it to such regulations as the Secretary of War might establish, or to provide for a commission to agree upon what officers the service could best dispense with?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not. I believe the House now can so far perfect this bill that every man in these added companies and every officer at the end of the war can be cut out of the Army without any further legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I think there is now entire unanimity in support of the proposition to reorganize the Army on the three-battalion basis, and to make a sufficient increase during the war in the number of men to effect such reorganization. I am glad to have the views of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] in support of the proposition I made at the outstart of this debate, that the proposed reduction to a peace basis should be perfected by inserting the word "transfer." I am informed by another gentleman on the committee that in his judgment the word "transfer" should be incorporated.

Mr. MARSH. You do not intend to say that I made any such suggestion?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I was speaking of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. MARSH. He is not a member of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, for the moment I thought he was. At all events, he is a military gentleman. In the absence of an amendment which would relieve the difficulty, and following the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the House might agree to a proviso to this effect—something along this line; I am not particular as to the phraseology—that the President shall be required to make proper regulations to reduce the Army to a peace footing at the end of the war.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HAY. That would make it much weaker than it is now.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Virginia says it would make it weaker than it is now. I do not know whether it would or not. I know that the committee say, and I do not question their good faith, that they want to muster out not only the enlisted men, but the supernumerary officers; and they propose two methods of getting rid of the officers, one by absorption through promotion and the other by honorable discharge. It occurred to me that the word "transfer" would relieve the difficulty, and if they are not willing to accept that suggestion and the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], then it seems to me we should give power to the President or the Secretary of War to perfect regulations that will accomplish the purpose that we all agree is desirable to accomplish, and that is, to muster out the supernumerary enlisted men and the supernumerary officers. The amendment, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says, may make it weaker. It seems to me, although the language may be lame, it is in the right direction and would make it strong enough to cover the end desired.

Mr. BAILEY. My idea would be this: Strike out the words "absorption through promotion" and insert in lieu of that the word "transfer," and then add "under such regulations," etc.

Mr. HULL. The objection I have to the word "transfer" is that there may be vacancies in the artillery. It seems to me that the matter is covered by the words "promotion under the law of the United States."

Mr. BAILEY. My idea is this: If the company now existing and the company added had both reached the end of the war, and in the company now existing there was a vacancy, and there was a specially meritorious man in the company added, I would be willing to say that the Secretary of War might take the meritorious officer and transfer him to the existing company.

Mr. MARSH. That is the effect of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not familiar with military phraseology. You call it promotion where I would call it a transfer.

Mr. HULL. Let me say to the gentleman that if that language suits him better, I am perfectly willing to strike out the word "promotion," so that the clause will read: "absorption through transfer or honorable discharge under such regulations as the War Department may prescribe."

Mr. BAILEY. That is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that objection meets the contention of the gentleman from Texas and myself.

Mr. COX. That was the idea of the committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 1, strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" so as to read: "ten first lieutenants."

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, this first section relates entirely to the peace organization of the Army. The section starts out by prescribing who shall be officers in the peace organization. It is not affected by the last two sections of the bill at all, which relate purely to the war footing of the regiments. This first section prescribes that in time of peace a regiment shall have 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 2 majors, 10 captains, 12 first lieutenants, 10 second lieutenants. Now, there is no reason on earth why there should be 12 first lieutenants to a regiment when there are 10 captains and 10 second lieutenants. It is proposed to have in time of peace a regiment consisting of 8 full companies and 2 skeleton companies, with full sets of officers for all these companies. Where will you put the two additional first lieutenants? There is no place for them.

Some gentleman has said that these two extra first lieutenants for each regiment are provided so that one of them may be adjutant and one quartermaster. But if you do that, you will have 14 first lieutenants with each regiment in time of peace, because the law to-day provides that there shall be for each regiment an adjutant and a quartermaster and that these shall be extra lieutenants.

Now, we are providing for the regular force of lieutenants. The law with reference to the adjutant and the quartermaster will continue as it is. These two officers will still be extra lieutenants. You propose to provide here for 12 regular first lieutenants for each regiment, while the law on the statute books already provides that there shall be 2 additional lieutenants—the adjutant and the quartermaster, who shall be extra. I insist that in providing for the peace organization we should not increase the number of first lieutenants. If we do, we make 50 new officers for these regiments in time of peace, while everybody on each side of the House proclaims that we want no increase except the 25 majors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement, which will occupy not more than two minutes. Under the existing law with reference to the Regular Army, the adjutant and quartermaster must be detailed from the first lieutenants of the regiments.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, no; from either the first or second lieutenants.

Mr. HULL. No; they are detailed from the first lieutenants.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; the law is that they may be detailed from either the first lieutenants or the second lieutenants.

Mr. HULL. Let that matter pass as to the law. These officers are, as a matter of fact, detailed always from the first lieutenants, and have always had the rank of first lieutenants in our wars of the past. It is better so, as many officers are thus trained in staff duties.

This idea that we have under the laws of the United States a large surplus of officers is not true. The law allows 100 officers to be detailed as instructors in colleges. Do you want to cut them off? It allows 57 officers to be detailed at the Military Academy. To take them away would practically destroy the Military Academy. Do you want to cut them off? Then the law provides for details of officers as military attachés at the different diplomatic posts. Acting in this capacity, these officers give the Government most valuable information. It would not do to cut them off. Then there are details for Indian agencies.

The details under the law as it now stands amount to 325 officers. You must not only have these extra officers, but you must take them from companies organized which have their complement of privates to meet the details now provided for by the laws of the United States. So that this idea of there being a surplus of officers is not true. No member of Congress would consent to abolish these details.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONNOLLY, it was rejected.

Mr. HULL. I now ask unanimous consent that we take up section 7, in order that an amendment may be offered to meet the objection of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. LACEY. I object.

Mr. HULL. I do not mean that we shall not return to the sections passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration by Congress that war exists, the President, in his discretion, may establish a third battalion for each infantry regiment, consisting of four companies, to be supplied by manning the two skeleton companies and by organizing two additional companies. The vacancies of commissioned officers in the additional companies shall be filled by promotions by seniority in the infantry arm, and by appointments in accordance with existing law; and hereafter all vacancies occurring in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry above the grade of second lieutenant shall, subject to the examination now required by law, be filled by promotion according to seniority from the next lower grade in each arm.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 17, on page 2, after the word "arm," the following:

"Provided, That during the time of actual war promotions for gallantry in the field may be made, for any vacancies in any grade in the Army, without such examination and without regard to seniority."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, a word in explanation of the amendment.

This bill in its present form takes from the President of the United States the power of rewarding gallantry in the field by preventing him from promoting officers who won distinction in time of battle. It requires that no man shall be promoted except in the order of seniority, and that he must then pass something like a sort of civil-service examination.

I say now, to show the injustice of it, that General Custer never could have risen above the rank of orderly sergeant if he had been required to pass a strict civil-service examination.

Mr. SPALDING. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. General Custer graduated at West Point.

Mr. LACEY. What I mean is that he did not get his diploma until he went into the field——

Mr. SPALDING. He graduated at West Point.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). And he did not get his diploma until he earned distinction in the field by his own gallantry. He went from West Point, in other words, without his diploma.

Mr. SPALDING. You are entirely mistaken.

Mr. LACEY. Well, I am simply reciting history.

Mr. SPALDING. That is incorrect.

Mr. LACEY. He went from West Point without his diploma.

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). And won his major-general's stars in the field by demonstrating his capacity, bravery, and ability as an officer. And yet, I repeat, he could scarcely have passed a high civil-service examination. If he had been required, under what I understand to be the provisions of this section of the bill, to submit to an examination, he might not have passed.

Mr. SPALDING. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

A MEMBER. To whom does the gentleman from Iowa refer?

Mr. LACEY. I was speaking of General Custer, who won his commission and his spurs in the service in the field, and who might not have gone through a severe technical examination required of him for promotion under this bill.

Mr. SPALDING. That is not true at all as to General Custer.

Mr. LACEY. I repeat, history shows that he could not have passed a high technical examination.

Mr. MARSH. Will you yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. LACEY. No, sir; let me explain the amendment a moment.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope the gentleman will allow me a question, in view of the statement he has made.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to state that I was in the Army of the Potomac myself when General Custer served there on General McClellan's staff, in 1861, after his graduation from West Point.

Mr. LACEY. He went from West Point without a diploma and did not get it until after his service in the field. And yet there never was a more gallant or splendid officer. And I mean that as a compliment to General Custer. He showed the good material he was made of as soon as he got in action. I admire General Custer greatly. He was a typical soldier.

Mr. SPALDING. I repeat, my friend is entirely mistaken in reference to General Custer's career at West Point.

Mr. LACEY. Very well; let it go that way. I do not yield further. I am only talking history, which is accessible to everybody.

The point is this: In time of peace it is well enough to say that men should be examined by boards for promotion, and be promoted, also, only according to seniority. But if you take from the President the power of rewarding marked gallantry in the field of battle, by promoting men on the field, and require them to go up only by seniority you will have men being promoted from the bureau service in the Department who may not have seen any actual service, and have every promotion only by seniority, or in some other way than for gallant services, to the exclusion of those who won their honors on the field of battle.

General Sheridan would not have been able to pass the highest kind of a technical examination, according to history; many officers that are never heard of would have gone ahead of him in a board examination; and General Forrest could hardly read or write, and yet he was one of the most distinguished and gallant officers in the Confederate army.

Mr. SAYERS. That is not true.

Mr. LACEY. In reference to General Forrest?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; about not being able to read and write.

Mr. LACEY. I say he was hardly able to read and write.

Mr. SAYERS. That is not true, sir. That was a mistake.

Mr. LACEY. Then you will have to change history. That is the commonly accepted understanding as to this successful soldier. But in order to avoid controversy I am willing to concede, to accommodate these gentlemen, that General Sheridan was an engineer officer who graduated with the highest honors, that General Forrest graduated at Yale, and General Custer graduated at the head of his class at West Point. That does not alter the point here materially, but such is not my understanding of their good points. I say it is a mistake, and a serious mistake, to deprive the President of the power of rewarding gallantry on the plains of Cuba or in siege of the fortifications on that island, and to provide that before he can promote a man who has shown his gallantry, who has won the victory for his country, perhaps, in battle, he must be examined by some board of officers and pass an examination, or that he will have to be promoted and submit only to promotion in accordance with the rules of seniority in the Army. It ought not to be a question of mere years, Mr. Chairman, in time of war. Our best soldiers were not those who passed the highest technical examination. Grant was 21 in a class of 39. We should not in this war deprive ourselves of the highest of all tests of promotion—actual gallantry in the field. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the House that this question of promotion has been fought over in the Regular Army for a great many years, and the provisions of the bill comply substantially with the general law, except that the bill equalizes the law that fixed first lieutenants in their places when the seniority bill was passed. The provisions of the bill affect only the Regular Army, and this bill, as it stands to-day, meets the wishes of 99 out of 100 of the officers of the Regular Army. It is fair and just, and this House should let it alone.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; but not 99 out of 100 of the people of the country.

Mr. GAINES. No doubt it meets the approval of the officers, but how about the soldiers?

Mr. HULL. Officers and men both.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not of the old soldiers.

Mr. STEELE. Yes; of the old soldiers.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not of the people of the country.

Mr. HULL. This does not touch the volunteer soldiers. It is an equitable method of promotion, the result of experience and protracted discussion.

Mr. LACEY. Why should not a man be promoted for gallantry in the Regular Army?

Mr. STEELE. He is, when Congress authorizes it.

Mr. HULL. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is supposed that no man who is not gallant in action will be promoted. My colleague [Mr. LACEY] seems now to believe that there is something to consider in the Regular Army, when only a few days ago, if his statement amounted to anything, he said it was organized out of tramps and demoralized citizens of the Republic. That statement was an insult to as brave and true a body of men as are to be found.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that speech that he made here a few days ago, that the Regular Army is to-day composed of citizens of the United States, many from our own State of Iowa, and no man can enlist in it as a private or be commissioned as an officer who is not a citizen of the United States, or has not taken out his first papers. The officers of the Regular Army are the brightest young men of the several districts of the United States, and are entitled to our respect and confidence. And I want to say further that I believe the men whose whole lives are devoted to the service of their country, when they unite on a matter of this kind, which affects only themselves, are better judges of what is just and right than any class of men can possibly be whose time is devoted entirely to other matters. I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a moment, I wish to say that I thoroughly approve of the purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. Our troops are about to go into the field, and this bill proposes, when the troops go into the field, to fix a principle of promotion by seniority, and by that alone. When the troops of Napoleon went forth to war, it is an old saying that every French soldier carried in his knapsack the baton of a marshal of France. The possibility of promotion depended upon gallantry, upon aptitude, and upon conduct in the field. This bill makes promotion depend solely upon length of service in a particular grade. I thoroughly approve of the purpose of the gentleman from Iowa to give rapid promotion and high command to officers who show capacity for high command.

I ask the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] for a moment, to see if he will not apply that principle a little further. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think there should also be a pathway open from the enlisted man to the officer's straps in the Army?

Mr. LACEY. There is now. This law does not take that away. This law only takes away——

Mr. HANDY. If the gentleman will listen to me for a moment, I should like to have him accept the following addition to his amendment:

And it shall be in the power of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to promote enlisted men to the grade of second lieutenant, for gallant and meritorious service in the field.

Mr. STEELE. We can do that now.

Mr. LACEY. That is the law now.

Mr. HANDY. Would you object to accepting that amendment?

Mr. STEELE. It would be superfluous.

Mr. HANDY. I do not think it would be superfluous.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is already the law.

Mr. HANDY. What is the objection to it, if it is already the law?

Mr. LACEY. My amendment does not change the law. It is to prevent this bill from changing existing law in this respect.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I know of no provision in law to-day whereby an enlisted man can become a commissioned officer because of gallant and meritorious service in the field. There is a law by which he can come up for examination and win a commission by a competitive examination. Just as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] wants an officer who is brave, gallant, and meritorious in service to go up without strict regard to seniority, so I want the enlisted man who proves gallant, meritorious, and efficient to get his first commission on that ground of merit, instead of on the ground of a sort of military-service examination. I offer, Mr. Chairman, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] the following. Add to his amendment the following words——

The CHAIRMAN. As a substitute for the amendment?

Mr. HANDY. No; as an addition in the nature of an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers the following amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to offer as an amendment a part of the statute, existing law, and reenact it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:
"And it shall be in the power of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to promote enlisted men to the grade of second lieutenant for gallant and meritorious service in the field."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment to the amendment is in order. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, referring to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to take positive and direct issue with the remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Delaware. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa should prevail—and I do not say it with any intentional disrespect to the present Administration—the experience of the late war, on both sides, shows that there will be the greatest possible danger of favoritism being exercised in the promotion of officers, and the subaltern who has the strongest political "pull" in Washington either through Congressional influence or otherwise will be able to secure promotion that he does not deserve over more meritorious associates.

Mr. HANDY. This limits it to gallantry in the field.

Mr. SAYERS. Gallantry in the field! What does the word mean? It is a broad term, a very broad term. There may be one officer who has served gallantly in a dozen actions, and he may not get promotion, and yet another officer who happens to distinguish himself only in a single action, if he has political influence, will secure promotion over the head of the one that is altogether the more deserving. Under present law, as I understand it, the President can exercise his discretion in the promotion of all officers over the rank of colonel. He can take his brigadier and major generals from the ranks, if he should please.

Mr. MARSH. And also the staff.

Mr. SAYERS. And also the staff. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will not prevail, because it will open the way to the exercise of political influence, the most baneful influence that can be exerted in the administration of military affairs, and especially so in the time of war.

Mr. HANDY. What objection have you to an enlisted man, if he shows especial gallantry, receiving the shoulder straps of a second lieutenant?

Mr. CUMMINGS. He gets it now.

Mr. SAYERS. I am speaking entirely with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Let us vote the amendment down. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration of Congress that war exists, the enlisted strength of a company, troop, and battery, respectively, may, in the discretion of the President, be increased to comprise not exceeding:

For each company of infantry: 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 4 sergeants, 12 corporals, 2 musicians, 1 artificer, 1 wagoner, and 100 privates; total enlisted, 122.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred," in line 24, page 2, and insert "eighty-four."

Strike out of line 25, page 2, the words "twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "six," and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That in the event of a call by the President for either volunteers or the militia of the country, the President is authorized to accept the quotas of troops of the various States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, as organized under the laws of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 19, page 2, after the word "exists," the following: "or after Congress has or shall have authorized the President to use the entire land and naval force of the United States and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States."

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that at all, but I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I could not hear, as there was so much confusion; and relying upon the chairman of the committee to see about it, I did not listen to that. I will ask the Clerk to report that amendment again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment ought not to prevail.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think I am entitled to be heard upon it.

Mr. BAILEY. This bill is drawn on the theory—does the gentleman desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. OLMSTED. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is necessary in order to make this bill immediately operative.

Mr. STEELE. The President can make it operative if you give us a chance to pass it.

Mr. OLMSTED. If this bill is intended to become immediately operative, the amendment I have offered seems important. It now provides for the increase of the enlisted strength of the several companies, troops, and batteries only "upon a declaration of war by Congress or a declaration of Congress that war exists."

Now, the Cuban resolution is not a formal declaration of war. It does empower the President to "use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States," for certain purposes and upon certain contingencies. While almost certain to lead to war, that was not a formal declaration, for if Spain shall to-day, before the hand upon that clock reaches the hour of 12, accede to the demand contained in that resolution, there will be no war. We know now that she will not accede, and so there will be war. Nevertheless, the Cuban resolution was not a formal declaration of war by Congress, and Congress has made no formal declaration that war exists. My amendment is in the language of the Cuban resolution, and provides that Congress having conferred upon the President such powers as are in that resolution enumerated, this bill shall become immediately operative, without waiting for any further or more formal declaration of war. It is quite in line with the amendment to the Volunteer Army bill suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and offered by the the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], and if important there, is equally so here. It will remove the necessity of any forced construction and remove all doubt.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say this: That the bill is drawn upon the theory that Congress shall make a declaration of war, and if this language is adopted in section 3, it ought to have been adopted in section 2. I think the committee's bill is more carefully drawn, and we ought to vote this amendment down.

Mr. HULL. Vote it down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SETTLE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 7, page 3, add the following:

"Provided further, That it is not intended hereby to take away from the governors of the respective States their right to determine how the quota of the States may be furnished, whether from the organized militia or volunteers."

Mr. HULL. I want to say that this has nothing to do with that at all, and it would be utterly impossible for us to begin now——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order upon it?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration House bill 9878, for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The hour having arrived, the House in accordance with its order already made, will now in a body attend the funeral services of the late Senator WALTHALL.

Thereupon the House, preceded by the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms, proceeded in a body to the Senate.

At 12.15 the members of the House, headed by the Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms, returned to the Hall, and the House was called to order by the Speaker.

ELECTION CASE OF BROWN AGAINST SWANSON.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the members not having heretofore filed or joined in the general views of members in the contested-election case of Brown against Swanson may have another week in which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that members of the committee in the election case of Brown against Swanson may be allowed another week in which to file their views. Is there objection?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In view of the fact that the case was argued before the committee about three months ago, and the report was before the committee for consideration some three or four weeks, and, by practically unanimous consent of the committee, ten days were given to the dissenting members to file dissenting views, and believing that gentlemen are as well prepared to-day as they will be in a week from to-day, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to file the views of the majority, and I also desire to file supplemental views of three gentlemen who signed the majority report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman has that permission from the House.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 9878, and pending that, I would suggest that there are eulogies set for 2 o'clock. I think without doubt we shall finish the bill before 2, but to avoid any difficulty that may follow if we do not complete the bill in that time, I ask unanimous consent that the eulogies follow immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the eulogies be postponed until the close of the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of House bill 9878.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 9878 for the better reorganization of the line of the Army of the United States, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in the confusion which arose by reason of the House going to the Senate to attend the funeral services, I raised the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE]. I now withdraw that point of order, so that the amendment can be before the committee for debate on its merits.

Mr. SETTLE. I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 7, page 3, add the following:

"Provided further, That it is not intended hereby to take away from the governors of the respective States their right to determine how the quota of the States may be furnished, whether from the organized militia or volunteers.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy the committee over two minutes. I would not have offered the amendment if I had thought it was not in order, because I am far from an obstructionist, as the Chair knows. I submit that the proviso recommended by the committee is out of order for that matter. This bill affects the reorganization of the Regular Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is now no point of order before the committee.

Mr. SETTLE. I know there is not, Mr. Chairman. Yesterday or day before we passed what is known as the volunteer bill. Under the provisions of that bill—under a call for volunteers—it rests with the governors of the respective States to determine whether in making their call in their respective States they shall call on the organized militia or the volunteers. Now, the committee's proviso in this bill, which is not a volunteer bill, but which is intended to perfect the reorganization of the Regular Army, is subject to the point of order that it itself is not germane, but having been adopted it, is clear to me that my amendment, being to that proviso, is in order.

I understand the point of order proceeds on the theory that this amendment of mine relates to the volunteer corps and has no reference to the bill, but it is intended to amend the proviso, which does relate to the Volunteer Army. Now, my amendment was offered in order to reconcile the apparent differences in the bill we passed yesterday and the bill with this proviso in, because with that proviso unamended it leaves the whole discretion to the President of the United States calling for volunteers of any State whether he will call for National Guards or the enrolled militia, whereas the former bill leaves it to the governors.

So that without such an amendment, in my State, if our quota should be only 2,000, and the active militia should amount to that number, the President of the United States could call for all those 2,000 out of the active militia, excluding utterly the other volunteers who might desire to enlist. It is because this bill gives this authority to the President, while the bill passed yesterday gives it to the governor——

Mr. HULL. Let me say to the gentleman that the bill passed yesterday gave to the governors of their respective States so absolutely the right to determine how the quota should be fixed that I do not believe this amendment is necessary. I think the gentleman is right in his proposition that this proviso does inject into a Regular Army bill a provision with regard to volunteers, but it was done in order to let them go in on their organization, which the other bill did not provide for.

Mr. SETTLE. I think it did.

Mr. HULL. The two bills must be construed together. The other bill allows the governor to tender to the President an organization. This bill would authorize the President to accept that organization as tendered by the governor. But I do not believe it gives to the President any right to determine how the quota of a State shall be filled.

Mr. SETTLE. I understood the gentleman to say to me this morning that that was, in his judgment, the effect of the proviso.

Mr. HULL. No; the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. SETTLE. Then, what harm would my amendment do?

Mr. HULL. I think it is simply cumulative.

Mr. SETTLE. I think it removes any doubtful construction.

Mr. MARSH. I do not think it does any harm whatever.

Mr. SETTLE. Then, why not let it go on the bill?

Mr. HULL. It is simply piling up words.

Mr. SETTLE. I think I must insist on the amendment, though the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill does much to remove my objections.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, one great difficulty about the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is this: We now have laws and regulations governing the enlistment of men in the Regular Army which do not govern the enlistment of men in the State militia.

Mr. SETTLE. This applies to volunteers.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. This bill applies to the Regular Army.

Mr. SETTLE. I know that; but this amendment is intended to apply to volunteers.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. But this is a bill for the increase of the Regular Army in case of war. Now, the laws and regulation applicable to enlistments into the Regular Army apply to the enlistment of men under this section.

Mr. SETTLE. I make no question as to that.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Then how are you going to reconcile your system for the enlistment of men into the Regular Army with the absence of that system in regard to the militia in the respective States? If the amendment be adopted, our statutes will have to be re-formed entirely in this respect.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SETTLE. I should like to have two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time of the gentleman from Kentucky will be extended three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] should understand that my amendment and the original proviso have no regard to the manner of enlistment or the rules regulating enlistments.

The amendment is intended only to make clear what is now doubtful as to the power of the governors of the respective States. The purpose is to give the governor authority to determine whether he will call on the active militia or the enrolled militia, or in what proportion he will call upon both. He may want to divide the number called for between the two organizations. In the State of Kentucky, where we probably will be entitled to only about 2,000 volunteers, we have perhaps that number now organized in the active militia. I want the authority left with the governor to say whether he will take all of the quota of 2,000 out of the organized militia, or will allot a certain proportion of the troops called for to the volunteers.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] says that this amendment can do no harm. It may, I think, do good in settling this question of doubtful construction.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Suppose that 30 per cent of those men in the State of Kentucky are ineligible to enlistment under the laws regarding enlistments in the Regular Army?

Mr. SETTLE. The governor must, of course, furnish recruits that come up to the requirements.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. But the governor can not violate the laws of the Government.

Mr. SETTLE. We do not propose that he shall do so. He must, of course, comply with the laws regulating the qualifications of those who desire to enlist. All that the amendment has regard to is the class out of which recruits may be obtained.

Mr. MARSH. The law in regard to calling out volunteers provides for a physical examination of the men who may be tendered by the governors.

Mr. SETTLE. That does not militate against my amendment.

Mr. HAY. As I understand, the purpose of this amendment is to permit the National Guard, which is already organized, to be called out first. Under the amendment the President can immediately, if the governors of the States so desire, call out the National Guard, already organized into regiments and ready to go into service. This does not affect at all the volunteer forces. It does not affect at all the right of any man to volunteer or the right of the President to override the governor in the appointment of officers or the enlistment of men. But it is intended, as I understand, only for the purpose I have stated, so that the troops now organized in the States may be called out at once and sent to the front, because they are organized and ready to go. That is the meaning, as I understand, of the amendment.

Mr. SETTLE. You will find that embodied in the bill passed on yesterday. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SETTLE; and it was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the entire section should be read, to which this amendment is offered. The Chair did not observe that the entire section was not read before the amendments heretofore offered were submitted.

The remainder of the section was read, as follows:

For each troop of cavalry: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 8 corporals, 2 farriers and blacksmiths, 2 trumpeters, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, 78 privates; total enlisted, 100.

For each battery of heavy artillery: One first sergeant, 22 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 artificers, 1 wagoner, 162 privates; total enlisted, 200.

For each battery of field artillery: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 veterinary sergeant, 6 sergeants, 15 corporals, 2 farriers, 2 artificers, 1 saddler, 2 musicians, 1 wagoner, 141 privates; total enlisted, 173.

For each company of engineers: One first sergeant, 10 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 64 first-class privates, 63 second-class privates; total enlisted, 150.

The quartermaster and veterinary sergeants provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of their respective arms.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment I send to the desk, to which I think there will be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 3, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "and Indian Territory."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The other day, in the volunteer bill, a provision was inserted permitting the Indian Territory to organize their militia, and the same provision of law ought to be enacted in this bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to let the amendment go in. There is no objection to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Very well; I will not occupy further time of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read sections 4, 5, and 6 of the bill.

Section 7 was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. That in time of war every officer serving with troops operating against an enemy who shall exercise, under assignment in orders issued by competent authority, a command above that pertaining to his grade, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of the grade appropriate to the command so exercised: Provided, That a rate of pay exceeding that of a brigadier-general shall not be paid in any case by reason of such assignment: Provided further, That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the absorption through promotion of supernumerary commissioned officers and the honorable discharge or transfer of supernumerary enlisted men; and nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing a permanent increase of the enlisted force of the Regular Army beyond that now provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after the word "promotion," insert the words "or honorable discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, the following words: "and nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing a permanent increase of the enlisted force of the Regular Army beyond that now provided by law" and insert the following: "and nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing a permanent increase of the commissioned or enlisted force of the Regular Army beyond that now provided by the law in force prior to the passage of this act, except as to the increase of twenty-five majors provided for in section 1 hereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that if there are to be amendments to this part of the section, to the amendment, they should be made now.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to detain the committee under the present circumstances, with any remarks on the bill, because I am anxious to have it pushed to a speedy enactment. But I have some views on the general subject, and I would like to present them for consideration. I would therefore ask unanimous consent of the committee to print in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The question being taken on the amendments of the committee, they were agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, strike out the words "absorption through promotion," and insert in lieu thereof the words "transfer to the same arm of the service;" and after the word "discharge," in line 4, insert the words "under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish."

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Clerk to report the section as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the transfer to the same arm of the service, or honorable discharge, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish, of supernumerary commissioned officers, etc.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me a moment, I think it would be preferable to use the words transfer "in the same arm" and not "to the same arm" of the service.

Mr. BAILEY. I accept that modification. Instead of transfer "to" put it transfer "in" the same arm; using the preposition "in" instead of the preposition "to."

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I would ask the gentleman if that contemplates an inhibition against the transferring of officers from the infantry, for instance, into the artillery branch of the service?

Mr. BAILEY. It does, undoubtedly.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I do not think that a wise provision.

Mr. MARSH. Further, will the gentleman allow me to ask him if this precludes the transfer of a lieutenant of artillery to the staff, if there is a vacancy on the staff?

Mr. BAILEY. I intend—and I believe that would be the sense of the House—to prevent the transfer from one branch of the service to another. The object is to permit the transfer from one company to another, the officer still remaining in the same branch of the service. I think, for instance, an officer serving with the infantry ought not to be transferred to the cavalry; but if there is a transfer to be made at all, it should be to the same branch of the service in which the officer formerly served. That is the effect of the amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the only question is this: Some gentlemen have supposed that the language "under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish" gave an authority too large. The plain answer to that is that we all, on this side of the House, desire that men added to the Army during the war shall be mustered out of it at the conclusion of the war; and I would not vote for the bill if I thought those additions could not be mustered out without coming to Congress for authority to do so. The command to muster them out is written in the bill itself.

That they must be mustered out under certain regulations is perfectly obvious, whether those regulations be established by the Secretary of War or by the House of Representatives. If we withhold the authority from the Secretary of War, he may say it is impossible to muster the men out until Congress passes a law to do so. It is utterly impossible for him to seriously abuse the authority, and unless it be given it might be possible for us to find an army of 60,000 men on our hands until legislation could be obtained from Congress. We know how difficult that is, and it seems to me we ought not to leave it for future legislation.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is an unwise provision in this law, for one special reason. There can be no doubt but that the great need of this country in the future will be for the development, if development takes place at all, not of the infantry branch of the service, or of the cavalry branch of the service, but of the artillery branch of the service. When the present projections are completed there will be from 85 to 90 batteries of artillery for the defense of our 5,000 miles of coast line. It will take 15 men to every mounted gun to take care of and operate that gun, and if any absorption is to take place, in my judgment it ought to take place from the infantry and the cavalry, instead of the artillery branch of the service, in order that there may be the development of knowledge in that branch of the service necessary to the defense of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the gentleman permit me, then——

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. One moment—in order that when any future exigency shall arise we shall not have to go through with this primary-school education of officers to adapt them to the scientific knowledge of the artillery service. And with all deference to my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I believe that it would be most unwise to limit this process of absorption to the particular branch of the service in which the man might be engaged at the time the absorption began.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri that if we had reached the end of the war, I would very cheerfully support a proposition to take one or two, or as many companies as it might be necessary to take, from the infantry branch of the service and transfer them to the artillery.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then, in that line, why would not your amendment carry out its purpose, and the one at which you are aiming, if, at the end of your amendment, you should provide, not in exact words, but to this effect:

Except in case of transfer from the infantry to the artillery arm of the service.

Mr. HULL. I would not undertake to do that in that way.

Mr. BAILEY. I am frank to say that perhaps there is no man on this floor who knows less about the military service of this Government than I do. I believe I have never opened the statute books of the country to examine the laws or the regulations relating to this department of the Government. But my earnest purpose is to provide what is necessary for this emergency, and leave the other provision to be made in time of peace.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that what I am about to say will have no weight whatever with this House. At such times as this the voice of reason is not apt to be heard amid the din of war. But I wish to put myself on record as opposed to the increase of the standing army under any circumstances.

When the "powers that be" desire to get unjust legislation through Congress, they always seek to do it under false pretenses. The bill under consideration is such a measure. It is a bill to increase the Regular Army to 61,000 men under the pretense of a necessary change in tactics.

I am heartily in favor of a change in tactics of the United States

Army. The present formation, as has well been said by the gentleman in charge of this bill, is an obsolete one. It is no more adapted to the present methods of warfare than was the Roman phalanx. To rush men into battle in double rank, close order, against the weapons of to-day, would be folly indeed.

But, Mr. Chairman, this change of tactics, giving our Army the extended-order, open-rank system, under which all modern armies except ours are organized, does not require an act of Congress. It is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the War Department. This was practically admitted by the gentleman from Iowa in his opening address upon the first consideration of this bill. In reply to an inquiry of his colleague, Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. HULL said:

> When the law went into effect limiting the Regular Army to so many men the War Department issued regulations, "skeletonizing," as they called it, 10 regiments of infantry and 2 regiments of cavalry.

Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that the question of tactics to be adopted for the use of the Army is not a necessary subject for Congressional legislation. It is a matter entirely within the control of the War Department, as determined by the proper army board appointed for that purpose. Many changes of tactics have been made within the last thirty years because of the changes in arms and ammunition. This is the first time that I have ever heard that such a change must be made by an act of Congress.

But, Mr. Chairman, the extended order of formation, so far from being an excuse for increasing the number of men in the company or regiment, is exactly the opposite. It is a reason for making companies, battalions, and regiments smaller. Under the proposed law a company would consist of 106 men, which, if extended in open order, according to the new tactics, would be one-eighth of a mile in length, to be commanded by four officers, while a regiment composed of twelve such companies would extend nearly 2 miles.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. In a deploy drill?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. It will be plainly seen that it would be an impossibility for four company officers to command a line one-eighth of a mile long, and still more impossible for the four line officers of a regiment to command a line 2 miles long.

At the present time the number of men in a company is sixty-six, commanded by a captain and two lieutenants. Such a company extended in open order would occupy a space 600 feet in length, and a regiment of ten such companies would occupy a space 1 mile in length. Such a formation would need the undivided attention of all the regimental and company officers provided for in this bill. I therefore favor that portion of the bill increasing the number of company and regimental officers.

Now a word in regard to the relative efficiency of regulars as compared with volunteers. I had the honor to serve three years and nineteen days as a soldier in the Army of the Potomac. My experience there, and I think I voice the sentiment of all men who served in that army, is that the regulars in that war were not a howling success. The fact is, they were a hiss and a byword in the mouth of every soldier. If we wanted to say that a regiment was absolutely worthless, we said they "were of no more account than the regulars." It is evident that this was the opinion of General Grant himself, as will be seen from the following extract taken from his Personal Memoirs, volume 1, page 283:

> In the Army of the Potomac there was what was known as the "regular brigade," in which, from the commanding officer down to the youngest second lieutenant, every one was educated to his profession. So, too, with many of the batteries; all the officers, generally four in number to each, were men educated for their profession. Some of these went into battle at the beginning under division commanders who were entirely without military training. This state of affairs gave me an idea, which I expressed while at Cairo, that the Government ought to disband the Regular Army, with the exception of the staff corps, and notify the disbanded officers that they would receive no compensation while the war lasted except as volunteers. The register should be kept up, but the names of all officers who were not in the volunteer service at the close should be stricken from it.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard much about "emergency." But how shall this emergency be met? By waiting the slow process of enlisting 35,000 men in the Regular Army, arming, equipping, and drilling them for actual service, or by calling on that great army of 200,000 of the National Guard already organized, officered, armed, and equipped, and composed of the very best material in the nation? Enlistment in the Regular Army is a very slow process. There is a well-formed prejudice against a standing army, and men are not drawn to that organization by motives of patriotism or love of country. They look with suspicion upon a standing army, and justly so. Upon the question of emergency, then, this bill is a failure.

Mr. Chairman, what I have heretofore said is not intended as a reflection upon the Regular Army of to-day. I have nothing to say of its present make-up or its efficiency; but I do know that men who enlist in the Regular Army are not apt to be the best material upon which a nation may depend in times of danger. On the other hand, men who volunteer to defend their country in times of war do so from entirely different motives from those which actuate the men who enlist in the Regular Army. They tender their services in defense of their country with the full knowledge of the danger which confronts them, and they do it from purely patriotic motives and love of country.

Mr. Chairman, every victory won within the history of this nation has been won by volunteers. There is no need of a standing army. We are a nation of soldiers, ready to spring to arms at the first scent of danger to our flag. Our safety is in the keeping of the common people, who have ever shown themselves ready to give up their lives cheerfully for their flag and their country. On the other hand, the epitaph which might justly be written over the graves of all the great nations which have perished from the earth is this: "Died of a standing army."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, the only question to which I desire to address a few observations is the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE], who desires that an amendment should be submitted in addition to that which the gentleman from Texas has submitted, to the effect that transfers of officers from the infantry arm of the service may be made to the artillery. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this question of promoting from one arm of the service to another is one which has occasioned more difficulty and more trouble than any other one question.

Legislation latterly has been upon the line of a more just provision, and now to go back to the same old basis, which gave us such unsatisfactory results, would be a step backward rather than an advance. The artillery arm of the service is one in which the fewest promotions have occurred. The opportunities have been less. The number of the force in the artillery arm has been small, while in the cavalry and infantry promotions have gone ahead at a much more speedy rate. I am heartily in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, but I do not think it ought to be loaded with the obnoxious proposition suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, and I hope favorable action will not be had thereon.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph close in ten minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not try to push it through in that way.

Mr. HULL. I want to get it out of the way of the eulogies, as I agreed to.

Mr. KING. I think the gentleman ought not to do that. Some of us have amendments which we think are pertinent.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HULL; and the Chairman declared that the ayes had it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division, Mr. Chairman!

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I called for a division on the vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 4.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to raise any question, but I wish the country to see that the gentleman from Iowa is forcing this bill through without a reasonable opportunity for debate with only seventy-five men in the House.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this measure, and I do not like to be placed in the attitude of supporting any measure that provided for a permanent increase of the standing army. Gentlemen are doing injustice to us on this side of the Chamber who intend to support this bill, as I do, by holding out that idea to the country. The only element of danger in this measure has been eliminated, in my humble judgment, by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas, although I think that amendment will result in some injustice to the graduated officers of West Point.

It occurs to me where a man devotes his life to military affairs, if the fortunes of war should throw him into one of these new companies, that of necessity ought not to retire him from the Army. In some cases it will result that way under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas; still, I think the amendment ought to be adopted. This committee has considered the bill carefully for a month. The minority is represented by some of the best Democrats on this floor, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], who has had ten years' experience in Congress.

In addition, there is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and other Democrats, aided by the labors of the gentleman from Iowa and other members of the Military Committee, who state there is no provision for a permanent increase in the Army. I know, Mr. Chairman, it is a popular thing to oppose an increase in the standing army. It is against the genius and spirit of our people and of the Republic. I am unalterably opposed to it myself; but I protest, in the name of decency, against the conduct of those who would seek to place their colleagues in the attitude of favoring a permanent increase of the standing army of the country, when, as a matter of fact, this bill contains no such provision.

Now, we have a nucleus in the Regular Army which we propose to increase in time of war. No intelligent and patriotic Representative would surely take the position that it would be best for this country to abolish trained soldiers. We have trained officers, and we should have trained men. I have had some little experience in playing soldier, but I would not attempt to give my judgment to the vast array of accomplished military heroes who have addressed the House this morning. It is to be presumed, however, that the committee having charge of this measure and the benefit of the advice of the War Department knows better what the country needs in times of war than those of us who have not heard their statements and have given absolutely no attention to the subject under discussion.

I am willing to put some confidence in the declaration of the gentleman having charge of this measure. It ought to go through, in my judgment, because we find, as has been stated, that all the civilized nations of the world now use the three-battalion system, whatever that may be. It is high time that we realize both in time of peace and war we should have the best system on the face of the globe. We do not know what the future will bring forth. I grant we have people enough in this country in the shape of the militia for our wars, but you can not take a green company of men and make perfect soldiers of them in twenty-four hours.

Now, I do not propose to narrate my military experience, but I have commanded a company to a limited extent in my day, and I say it is perfectly absurd to take a company of raw militia, although as brave as Julius Cæsar, and put them into the Army and expect good service out of them immediately.

Mr. KING. Was your experience in the Mexican war or in the civil war?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Neither one; I was a tin soldier—a kind of a cornstalk captain—but I have had as much experience, I think, as the distinguished gentleman from Utah.

Mr. KING. More, I guess.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not intend to offer any advice to the House on military affairs. We have heard from my friend from Utah. He has a pocketful of amendments now to offer to this bill.

Mr. KING. Only one.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I protest that we shall let the committee in charge manage this bill, and show the confidence we have in our committee. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word, and will then yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING]. This bill increases the standing army from a peace footing of 28,610 men to 61,010 during the war period. The seventh section of the bill with the amendment now pending offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] would seem to make clear the purpose of the bill to muster out at the close of the war both the enlisted men and the officers and restore the Army to a peace footing. That is the obvious intent of the section as it is proposed to be amended.

The authorized increase of the standing army by the bill is 34,400 men in time of war. Of course, to the extent of that increase, the bill stands in the way of the citizen soldiery.

I desire, in conclusion, to submit one prediction. It costs nothing, and perhaps, therefore, is valueless, but I venture the prediction that not to exceed 2,000 men will enlist under the provisions of this bill. The regular officers, however, are cared for liberally; but the overwhelming proportion of the men who are to enlist to fight this war with Spain will be mustered under the terms of the bill approved by the President yesterday, authorizing a call upon the volunteer soldiery of the country. This bill, it is true, as I have stated, authorizes an increase during the war of 34,400 men, but the men who are to enroll to fight our battles will do so, in my opinion, in the ranks of the National Guard. It seems to me that the provisions of the bill authorizing a call for volunteers are ample to furnish all the troops required. With this statement, Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to this measure providing that this act shall expire by limitation at the end of two years from and after the date of its passage. This legislation is purely experimental. If it is valuable at all, if it has any meritorious feature, it will be demonstrated during the next two years. If it has vicious features, they will be clearly manifested, and the wisdom of our action if this amendment be adopted will be vindicated. The repeal of the law will follow and no further legislative act required. If it proves to be advantageous and successful, it can easily be reenacted at the end of that time.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if it is necessary to increase the standing army in time of war, and it is arbitrarily increased at this time, why select the number 64,000? It may be claimed that because we are fighting an inferior foe that number will be sufficient. Suppose we shall have war with some foe like England or Germany. It might be essential, if the arguments of my friends be correct, that we should increase it to 100 000 men, instead of 64,000 men, as this bill provides. Why not limit the duration of this bill and provide the time when it shall expire? My friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] says no. It seems to me, from the fact that he objects, that one of the purposes of the act is, as suggested by one gentleman who has spoken, to provide berths and places and stations for the men who are graduates of West Point and to secure their promotion and to give them higher positions.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you include the Democratic members of the committee in that accusation?

Mr. KING. I did not make the charge against anybody in particular. I did not use the word "committee." I charge upon my own responsibility that that is one of the results of this bill. I do not think this result was contemplated by at least some members of the committee; but I have no doubt from the explanations that have been made that one of the results of this bill will be to enable men in the Army, officers who have no position, to have a position that will be more advantageous than that they now have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask that it be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 4, so as to read:

"The Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the transfer in the same Army service, or honorable discharge, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish, of supernumerary commissioned officers," etc.

Mr. HULL. Nobody objects to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; by way of suggestion. I will not press it if the gentleman from Iowa is not willing to accept it.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was read, as follows:

Strike out "at," in line 2, page 5, and insert "within sixty days after;" so that as amended the clause will read:

"Provided further, That within sixty days after the end of any war," etc.

Mr. HULL. I have no particular objection to that amendment——

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the chairman of the committee does not object to the amendment.

Mr. HULL. I will say, however, I think it is not a good amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was rejected; there being—ayes 36, noes 71.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. 8. This act shall expire by limitation at the expiration of two years from and after the date of its passage."

Mr. HULL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before this bill is reported to the House, there is one matter to which I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed; and this can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. So I understand; but I think there will be no objection to my making this suggestion. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the word "soldiers," at the end of line 14, page 4. Is that word intended to include officers?

Mr. HULL. Officers never get extra-duty pay; but under the general military laws soldiers do.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the point on which I wanted information.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

No separate vote being demanded, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended be printed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

EXPLANATIONS OF VOTES, ETC.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to make an explanation as to the RECORD. In the report of the vote taken April 18 on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the Cuban resolutions it is simply stated that I was paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VEHSLAGE. In connection with that statement I wish to say that I was absent on account of serious illness, and that, if present, I would have voted in favor of agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, the report of yesterday's proceedings in the RECORD represents me as having voted on the roll call in the election case (which is correct) and also as being paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. MADDOX. I did not hear the announcement of the pair, and I was not, in fact, paired. I am informed that the announcement was due to a clerical error.

The SPEAKER. The necessary correction has already been made.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LORIMER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CONNELL, for eight days, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR EARLE.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the adoption of the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of JOSEPH H. EARLE, late a Senator from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a public servant, the House of Representatives, at the conclusion of these memorial services, adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, JOSEPH HAYNESWORTH EARLE, the youngest of nine children, was born at Greenville, S. C., on April 30, 1847. His family was one of the most distinguished in the State, having furnished, through many generations, men conspicuous for their public service. Most prominent among them were Elias Earle, great-grandfather of Senator EARLE, who was a member of Congress from South Carolina from 1805 to 1807, from 1811 to 1815, and again from 1817 to 1821, and was the first Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the United States; Samuel Earle, a cousin, who was a member of Congress from 1795 to 1797; Gen. John Baylis Earle, his great-granduncle, who served in Congress from 1803 to 1805, and Judge Baylis John Earle, a cousin, who was circuit judge of South Carolina for nine years.

Young EARLE, having lost his mother when he was 2 years old and his father three years later, was taken to the neighborhood of Sumter and reared by his guardian. Fortunately for him, no doubt, while treated with great kindness, he was not indulged. His education was gained at the academy at Sumter, to which place he walked 5 miles every morning and back in the afternoon.

In 1864, as was the case with pretty much all lads of the South at that day, when only 17 years old, he enlisted in the Confederate army and served till the close of the war. The same diligence and faithfulness that had made him first in his class at school now distinguished him in the stern ordeal of a soldier's life, and when the war came to an end, although yet under 18 years of age, he had risen to the grade of sergeant. It may be worthy of record that his health, which had been very poor, was greatly improved by his service in the army, and this was a very common experience, notwithstanding the extraordinary privations which the Confederate soldiers had to endure. Whether his army life correspondingly improved the character of our dead friend I am not in a position to state, but I do know that in no instance that came under my observation did that service fail to be most beneficial in that respect. In many instances it simply revolutionized the man. It was a providential ordeal to prepare the Confederate survivor for the stern duties and trials that were soon to confront him. What those trials were will never be known except by those who were called upon to endure them.

The Southern people have never been given to unmanly complainings, and their wonderful success in bringing order out of chaos and prosperity out of ruin has made even the participants in the struggle forget many of its difficulties. Consider for a moment the outlook with which young EARLE was confronted in April of 1865. On the threshold of life, his education cut short, his fortune gone, his influential kinsmen powerless to help him, the social system of his State destroyed, everything in ruins and disorder.

And yet this was precisely the condition that confronted every Southern lad of that day. Fortunately our dead colleague set his face in the right direction; he determined to complete his education if he could. But for this we would not, perhaps, be to-day paying our tributes to him as United States Senator from South Carolina.

In some way he managed to enter Furman University, and by teaching school maintained himself there for two years, at the end of which time he was compelled by want of means to give up the struggle. As illustrating the condition of the times, it may be mentioned that this studious and promising young man, a member of one of the prominent families of the State, could not pay the half of a dollar for a text-book. By hard study, however, he made two years serve pretty well the purpose of a full term, and acquired an admirable education, standing, as ever, at the head of his class.

In 1868 he was elected principal of an academy in Greenville County, and, by devoting his spare hours to studying law, became qualified for entrance to the bar, to which he was admitted in April, 1870, by Hon. James L. Orr, formerly Speaker of this House, then a circuit judge of South Carolina.

He commenced the practice of law at Anderson, where he had married, in 1869, his cousin, Ann Wilton Earle.

In 1875 he removed to Sumter, where his boyhood had been spent, and where he began a career that soon brought him into prominence in the State. He took a prominent part in the exciting scenes of 1876, when there was a fierce contest for mastery between two rival governments in South Carolina, which was settled without bloodshed only by the wisdom and statesmanship of Governor Hampton.

In 1878 and again in 1880 he was elected to the State house of representatives from Sumter County, and in 1882 he was elected her senator, and served for four years with distinction and honor. In 1880 he was a delegate to the national Democratic convention at Cincinnati, and again in 1884 to the convention at Chicago, and was a member of and spokesman for the committee appointed to notify the candidates of their nomination.

In 1886 Senator EARLE was nominated for the office of attorney-general of South Carolina, after a sharp contest, and was chosen at the ensuing election. He was reelected to the same office in 1888, and served the State throughout the two terms with great distinction and success, having an unusually large number of difficult cases to conduct. His high sense of official responsibility was well illustrated by his determination not to burden the State by the employment of special counsel in these cases, although their importance and the practice of some of his predecessors might well have made their employment excusable.

In 1888 quite a determined effort had been made to put Senator EARLE forward as a candidate for the nomination for governor, but he felt bound to decline it, and very honorably did decline it, in consequence of a promise made to the incumbent that he would not oppose him for reelection.

In 1890 Senator EARLE did become a candidate for the nomination for governor, and went through a campaign that has probably never been surpassed for excitement and aggressiveness. The rival candidates addressed meetings in every part of the State amid the intensest excitement, difficult to be understood by people of other States to whom active contests for public office are common occurrences.

There were not many men then living in South Carolina who had witnessed any serious division of the white people of the State as to the selection of officers. Throughout this struggle Senator EARLE had opportunities for displaying the finest qualities of man—bravery, dignity, presence of mind, fine intellectual powers, and great self-control. As he was overwhelmingly defeated in the contest, while I will not on this occasion enter into any partisan discussion, I deem it my duty to say in his justification that it was not because of his advocacy of any erroneous public policy nor of any, even the slightest, smirch on his character, public or private.

As I remember it, he was particularly called upon to defend the State administration, of which he was a member, and he did this most successfully. Later on he was urged to head an independent ticket against the Democratic candidates, but this he very promptly and properly declined to do.

In 1894 Senator EARLE, having in the meantime moved to Greenville, was elected by the legislature one of the circuit judges of South Carolina, always a position of great honor. Having been for years a laborious lawyer, then for two terms a very successful and hard-working attorney-general, and having fine intellectual abilities and the qualities best suited for the bench, Senator EARLE at once took a leading place among the judges of the State. He presided with great dignity and calmness, was most courteous in his demeanor to everyone, was patient in hearing argument and most careful to make himself familiar with and thoroughly understand every detail of the case, and, more than all, he had a most accurate knowledge of decided cases, and a thorough comprehension of the principles of the law.

I take it that conscientious discharge of every duty was the most conspicuous and valuable trait in Senator EARLE's character, and this it no doubt was that at once established among the people his reputation as an admirable judge and secured for him at their hands his last and highest honor. After being only two years on the bench, Senator EARLE became a candidate at the primary election for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, which necessitated a second time his canvassing every county in the State and involved him in another sharp contest, in which he was successful, though not until a second election had been held to decide the result.

This nomination, it must be understood, was made not through the medium of a convention, but by the direct vote of the people, and, as the nomination was equivalent to an election, Senator EARLE was substantially elected to the Senate by a direct vote of the people—probably the first instance of the kind in the history of the country, and the amplest vindication of the wisdom of giving to the people themselves the selection of their highest officers.

Hardly had Senator EARLE taken his seat, in March, 1897, before he became seriously ill, making it necessary for him to return to his home at Greenville, where for a month he made a vain struggle for life. The end came on the afternoon of the 20th of May, 1897. To use the words of another, "The night before he had each member of the family come in and kiss him 'good-bye;' and he remained in full possession of his senses until the very moment of death. Asking that the window be opened so that he might see the green trees and sunshine, smell the flowers, and hear the music of the birds, and taking his wife's hand in his own, he looked up and smiled, just as a beam of sunshine lit up his countenance; then closed his eyes, folded his hands on his breast as though in prayer, and in an instant was no more."

So he passed away upon the very threshold of the great position to which his State had elected him, just as he had reached the height of his ambition. It seems almost tragic that it should have been thus—that after years of toil and struggling with so much fierce antagonism in his upward career, he should have been cut off just as he had worthily won the place in which, secure from strife, he could render his people his very best service.

Senator EARLE had in early life joined the Baptist Church, and continued to the end a consistent member of it. His family life was of the happiest; he was devoted to his home; he loved and cherished all within it, and he was loved by them with deep and strong affection. His death was a grievous loss to the State; to his widow and children it was an unmeasured calamity.

Had Senator EARLE been spared to serve his people in the Senate no one can doubt that he would have added greatly to his reputation and to the honor of his State. His life had been a busy one. He had never been idle. He had worthily won and worthily worn all the honors that had come to him. He had faithfully discharged all the varied duties of the offices he had held, and he entered the Senate fully equipped for most distinguished service. He had never before failed to gain new honors with each new trust. His people had high expectations of him, and he knew it and would never have disappointed them. May our State long be spared such another disaster as was his untimely taking off.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, JOSEPH H. EARLE, lawyer, legislator, just judge, United States Senator, and always gentleman, died at his home in Greenville, S. C., Thursday, May 20, 1897.

He fought his way from orphaned boyhood to manhood.

He began life in fortunate poverty.

He became a teacher in order to earn the means to complete his own education, and in imparting knowledge to others fixed in his own mind the important fundamental basis of his own knowledge.

Not being born to affluence, he was not surfeited into idleness and irresolution.

Driven by necessity, he was strengthened by the effort he was compelled to make.

Satiety has its drawbacks. The tissue weakened by fatty degeneration is good for a struggle of no kind.

The discipline which makes stalwarts is not casual, dilettante effort.

The iron on the anvil and the human life are shaped to usefulness and forms of beauty by fire and steady hammering.

The rude lines in which Dickens interprets the sound of the hammer on the anvil have a wider significance:

"Beat it out, beat it out, with a blow and a shout, beat it out."

JOSEPH H. EARLE fought the fight out bravely.

He preferred the race, the contest, the quick-drawn breath, the swift blow and counter, the quick play of eye and hand and brain, yea, even defeat, in a battle well fought.

He was one of those who would rather "sing the song of the vanquished" in heroic, sinewy, brainy effort than dawdle in comfortable repletion.

He used his talents.

He responded at the call of opportunity.

He toiled to eminence, and when at last he stood where ambition had lured him, death summoned him.

I was one of those who followed to its final resting place the body of him who had been but a few days before a United States Senator from the proud State of South Carolina.

On our way from the nation's capital to Greenville we passed through regions marked by battlefields where once had glowed the camp fires of two great wars, where names of stations stirred memories of history not yet ancient but now lapped and overlapped by the swift sweep of events.

Through regions where colonial heroes, roused to the full stature of liberty, fought for a cause whose then dimly foreseen future we live our little day in.

Through regions where Washington and his compeers, "nobles by right of an earlier inheritance, and priests by the imposition of a mightier Hand," had lived and thought and fought—had felt the fierce joy of victory and the sharp sting of defeat, and then, like him whose body lay in state at Greenville, insensible to reverence or respect, had gone their way to "dusty death."

A little farther southward Whitney thought out the thing that crowned cotton king—the invention that ranks among the causes of the greatest war of modern times, and which human littleness and cupidity almost stole from him.

Of all these—thinkers, statesmen, and warriors—who aspired to revise the chart of science and of nations little is left but broken vestiges of daring footsteps.

Fifty years from now how many people in the United States are there who will remember, strong as he was, high as he had climbed, the Senator whose body was being borne to its burial; who will remember the gentlemen who followed his body to the grave?

Verily, "Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"

I remember well the day of the funeral, the old church, the earnest sermon, the solemn music, and, finally, that last beautiful scene beside the open grave, when all those who stood near joined in singing that hymn of hope and consolation, "Nearer my God to Thee." And again the sunset sky was brightened by the bow of promise. Again death was robbed of victory.

Peace and Faith were there because again, as thousands of times before, the awful sorrow of parting between husband and wife and father and children had been assuaged by Paul's words, "This mortal must put on immortality."

That night in the old churchyard at Greenville one mound was there which had not been before.

"Time, burrowing like a mole below the ground, marked his track by throwing up another heap of earth."

But above that grave in the solemn stillness the words of Paul had again lifted up the hearts of those who listened, and late into the night, mingled with the rush and roar of our returning train, the words kept recurring:

"For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised:
And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain."

What of our pitiful hope—our puny achievement?

What even though we reach above the level of everyday heroism, which begins with work and ends with enough to eat?

What even though we attain position, if oblivion awaits us?

To the wife and children who mourn his loss what consolation is there that he wove the purple of his own power—what consolation in the withered leaves of his civic wreath?

"As the breath of the oxen in winter:" as the quick star that runs along the sky; as the little shadow that loseth itself at sunset; such is the order of our being; the order that passeth away.

"If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me."

What though we fight the beasts of passion, dishonesty, and cupidity, and all the tigers that lurk in the jungle of the human brain, "what advantageth it us, if the dead rise not?"

"But thanks be to God," Paul's argument and its glorious transforming conclusion give new value to life;

Make discipline valuable;
Make suffering logical;
Lay stress on what we are, not on what we do;
Give consolation to the wronged,
And make great the humble in spirit.

All that we may make or win of wealth or glory here is of no moment in the republic of the grave or the kingdom of heaven, but the vital question is, "What is the state of the soul at the last?"

If Christ be not raised, then is our faith, our work, our struggle vain.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, in the noonday of his usefulness and fame an honored public servant was stricken down. In the midst of the busy cares of official life his fellow-servants pause for a moment to pay a tribute to his worth.

Eulogy, Mr. Speaker, is kind speech, but it is seldom just. It says too much or it says too little. Of a character like that of Senator EARLE too much can not be said. He was truly an honest, just, and manly man.

He was with us here but a brief time, but during that time I became quite intimately acquainted with him. We boarded at the same hotel. From the time I first saw him I felt drawn to him by that subtle and mysterious mental force which often compels us to like or dislike persons without knowing why. He was a true type of a Southern gentleman in all which that time-honored phrase implies. He was noble in nature, as well as name, and might well be classed as belonging to that glorious order which—

Since the days of old,
Has kept the lamp of Chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold.

He had won and was worthy of the respect and honor of a gallant and noble people. He was descended from a family which was always prominent in South Carolina. His ancestry was distinguished not only in this country, but in England, and many of them rendered gallant service in the war of the Revolution, battling for freedom side by side with Washington and "Light Horse Harry Lee." He was born April 30, 1847. In 1864, at the age of 17, he enlisted in the ranks of the Confederate army and discharged in the fullest measure the duties of a soldier. The close of the war left him in poverty, and he had to rely upon his own exertions for support and education. He chose the law as his profession, and was admitted to the bar in 1870.

In 1878 he was elected to the house of representatives of South Carolina. In 1882 he was elected to the State senate. In 1886 he was elected attorney-general of South Carolina, and in each position served with marked ability and distinction. In 1896 he was elected to the United States Senate. He was sworn in on the 4th of March, 1897; but, his health failing, he left Washington about May 1, and died May 20. His service in the United States Senate was perhaps the shortest of anyone ever elected to that illustrious body. His feet had hardly crossed the threshold of the realization of his highest hopes and ambition when he was stricken down. Truly it has been said, Mr. Speaker, "What shadows we are! What shadows we pursue!"

As shadows cast by cloud and sun
Flit in the summer's grass,
So in Thy sight, Almighty One,
Earth's generations pass;
And as the years, an endless host,
Come pressing swiftly on,
The brightest names that earth can boast,
Just glisten and are gone.

There is but one thing certain in life, Mr. Speaker, and that is death. All else is wrapped in cloud and obscurity. At the entrance to life and at its exit "there sits the veiled form of Mystery," instinct with desire and hope, but silent as marble, and with revelation frozen on her lips. So long, however, as there is a cradle or a grave on earth, Faith and Religion will endure; and it is a basic principle of Christian faith that "the living strive, but the dead alone are glorious."

In life he was a true soldier; and when the final summons came, he was not afraid, but heroically, as ever did knight of the Cross, he saluted with a stainless sword the spotless majesty of the risen Christ and bowed his head to death.

By appointment of the Speaker, I went to Greenville, S. C., as one of the committee of the House to attend the funeral of Senator EARLE. I could readily perceive that he had not only received the honors, but had won the devoted affection of his constituency. From what had lately been his happy home, we bore his remains to the Baptist Church, where he had always worshiped.

The sermon of his pastor was short and simple in its wording, but grand in its conception. It suggested far more than it said.

We stand—

Said he—

in the overshadowing mystery of death, a mystery which no human philosophy has been able to relieve of its gloom. * * * A noble and beautiful life has been cut short in the hour of its supreme usefulness. We thank God there rests upon it no stain of dishonor. In it truth has not been sacrificed, and courage has not faltered. * * * He trusted the Lord Jesus Christ, and was considerate of his fellow-man. He gave his distinguished abilities in faithful service to his country. He had a high and worthy ambition and rose by patient, persevering effort from the common walks of life to the highest honor in the gift of his State, and died in the fullness of his powers.

It was a noble tribute, Mr. Speaker, to a noble man. Nothing could have been more appropriate than the beautiful hymn that was sung on that occasion:

Ere we reach the shining river
Lay we every burden down;
Grace our spirits shall deliver,
And provide a robe and crown.

Listening to that short but eloquent sermon and beautiful hymn, and contemplating the character and career of such a man as Senator EARLE, I felt that death to him was but the entrance to a higher life; that this huge earth, with its over-arching sky and mighty dome, lit with the sun by day and by night "fretted with the fires of golden stars," is but a vast Westminster that gives shrine and tomb to all the noble dead, who, having served the will and purpose of the King of Kings, have laid down life's honors to receive from His hands the guerdons of eternity; and when in the hush and reverent silence of the vast multitude, gathered there to do honor to his memory, we had consigned his body to the tomb and turned away, my heart again and again prompted my lips to repeat the sentiment:

Speak no more of his renown;
Lay your earthly fancies down.
In the vast cathedral leave him;
God accept him, Christ receive him!

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, "In the midst of life we are in death." Often in the fitful pauses of busy life we are called upon to solemnly reflect upon the departure of relatives, friends, and associates; and now, in accordance with a time-honored custom of Congress, we pause in our proceedings to-day and turn aside from the regular routine of business for a few moments to pay our last respects to one of our departed friends and coworkers at the other end of the Capitol—the late junior Senator from South Carolina, JOSEPH HAYNESWORTH EARLE.

In his death our State has lost a faithful and able representative and the United States Senate a very useful and valuable member. Had he been spared a sufficient length of time, I am sure his career in the Senate would have been one of credit to himself and honor to his State. But, as has been suggested by one of his colleagues, his Senatorial career is perhaps the shortest one in the annals of that body. Only about eight weeks was he a member thereof, having been sworn in the 4th day of March, 1897, and died the 20th day of May following.

But brief as was his service in that body, he had time enough to endear himself to its individual members and to reveal to them the possibilities of the man. While there he made only one speech, and that a very brief one, taking not more than five minutes' time. But those who had the privilege of hearing it, I am told, were most favorably impressed thereby. While he observed all the courtesies of that august and dignified body, he at the same time showed that he had opinions of his own and knew how to express them and was not afraid to do so.

Death, under almost any circumstances, is sad, but peculiarly so was the death of Senator EARLE. He was a man of excellent parts, great capabilities, and lofty ambition. But just as he had entered the field of what appeared to be his greatest usefulness, just as he had reached the goal of his ambition, he was cut down—cut down like the flower of the field that to-day blooms and gives out its fragrance to all about it, and to-morrow is gone. And he leaves behind a devoted wife and nine children to mourn his loss. Surely they ought to have, and do have, our most profound sympathy, for God has called away from them and us a brave soldier, an able jurist, and a true representative of the people. I never had the pleasure of visiting him in his home, where he was surrounded by a most interesting family, but those who have say he was a true and faithful father and a kind and loving husband.

Like many others of our most useful men, he was left an orphan boy at the tender age of 5 years, and he fell into the hands of a Christian aunt, by whom he was brought up. The property left him by his father, who was a wealthy lawyer, having been squandered, we are told, by a reckless guardian, he came to know something of the hardships of life. He was brought up on the farm and had to do farm work, only receiving a common-school education. When the war first came on, he was too young to go in, but in April, 1864, he enlisted in "Charles Battery" and served to the end. After the war he began teaching school, and by this means raised money enough to attend college, and he entered Furman University, Greenville, S. C., where he received his higher education.

He again taught school and at the same time read law and was admitted to the bar in 1870, and afterwards engaged in the practice of his newly chosen profession, which he continued to do till the time of his death, whenever his official duties did not conflict. In his law practice he met with decided success, and the only speech he made in the Senate during his short term of service there revealed the fact that he had become an able constitutional lawyer.

Although Senator EARLE was in the United States Senate only about eight weeks, he was no novice in legislative work. He had had six years of legislative experience long before he came to Washington. I had the honor to serve with him during four of these six years in the house of representatives and State senate of our State—from 1882 to 1886. He had already been in the lower house from 1878 to 1880. During these four years of colegislative work I always found him courteous and fair, open and frank, but able and determined in the advocacy of any measure that he championed. It was there that he laid the foundation for his later and merited promotion to the office of attorney-general of his State. He was elected to this office in 1886, just at the close of his service as State senator, and he discharged its duties with rare ability, and there made a record for himself that any lawyer might well be proud of.

In 1890 our State underwent a political revolution that submerged General EARLE in defeat in his notable campaign for the governorship against our present senior Senator. In this campaign he was unfortunate and happened to be on the wrong side, but he certainly made a wonderful and manly fight, considering all the circumstances. While he saw and knew himself doomed to defeat, he never wavered or faltered, but fought squarely on to the finish. A most gallant fight it was. It revealed the fact that he was made of the right sort of stuff to serve his people in any position with which they might see fit to honor him.

After this defeat he did not "sulk in his tent" or split off from his party, but, like the true man he was, he put his shoulder to the wheel, and, falling in with the wishes of a majority of his people, did all in his power to carry our Democratic standard to success as against an independent movement that was unfortunately inaugurated in our State at that time. He bore his defeat like a man, and here he again laid another foundation for promotion, which placed him in the circuit judgeship of the Eighth judicial circuit, in which capacity he was yet serving with distinction and ability when his people saw fit, through their chosen representatives, now to elevate him to the highest office within their gift—that of United States Senator.

But, alas, hardly had he entered upon the discharge of its responsible duties when God, by a strange providence of His, but in infinite wisdom, called him from the stage of human action and took him to Himself, and we are left to lament his departure. But why should we mourn? For our friend and brother is infinitely better off, and our loss, after all, is only heaven's gain, for we have the assurance that he was a Christian man and not afraid to die. This should be very consoling indeed to his colleagues, to his friends, and especially to his loved ones, from whom he has taken his final departure.

His Christian example was one worthy of imitation, for we feel sure that in all his undertakings he had an eye single to the honor and glory of his Master, and that amid all his trials and changing and perplexing circumstances, and in spite of his lofty ambition to make a name for himself, and to write his name high on the roll of fame, he never forgot his God, and his duty to Him. But rightly realizing that the real and true object of life, after all, is to prepare for death, he lived the life of a devoted Christian, and simply fell asleep only to awake in a better land.

Just here, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I can do no better in my attempt to express my sentiments relative to our departed friend than to read an extract from the language of the officiating clergyman at his funeral, which is as follows:

> We stand under the overshadowing mystery of death, a mystery which no human philosophy has been able to relieve of its gloom. In this instance its darkness has been intensified by the peculiar circumstances in which the stroke has fallen. A noble and brilliant life has been cut short in the hour of its supreme usefulness. We thank God that there rests upon it no stain of dishonor.
>
> In it truth has not been sacrificed and courage has not faltered. Death has put a period to a career in the private and public vicissitudes of which there has been consistently maintained a bearing which suggests in the fullness of the original meaning that fine old designation, gentleman. He feared God and feared no man; he loved righteousness and scorned every mean thing; he trusted the Lord Jesus Christ and was considerate of his fellowman; he gave his distinguished abilities in faithful service to his country. He had a high and worthy ambition, and rose by patient, persevering effort from the common walks of life to the highest honor in the gift of his State, and died in the fullness of his powers.
>
> But out of respect to his known wishes I can not extend these remarks. His record is before God and before man. It is for God to judge; it is for us to cherish precious memories and be stirred by his example to high endeavor, and in the sorrow which we can not but feel, to listen not to the vain speech of man, but to the words of Him who speaks out of the unknown and eternal with infinite knowledge and love, and whose voice alone can bring comfort and peace to broken hearts.

Thus, as a soldier is stricken down sometimes in the final hour of triumph, so fell General EARLE with his newly won honors but barely grasped and his wreaths and laurels gained only that they might wither and die on his grave. In thinking of him, I am reminded of Curran's felicitous words touching the royal blood of Lord Edward Fitzgerald: "More noble than the nobility which first ennobled it, which, like a rich stream, rises till it hides its fountain."

No darts of detraction were ever hurled at his character, which resembled a polished mirror in which the world could see the whiteness of his soul. Greater was he in approaching death than he was in life, being able to say with Paul, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

And when we carefully consider his life and his remarkable career, along with many others of a similar type—how he rose from obscurity to prominence, and that in spite of obstacles and many adverse circumstances—we are forced to acknowledge the truthfulness of the little verse that says:

> Lives of great men all remind us
> We can make our lives sublime,
> And departing, leave behind us
> Footprints on the sands of time.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, for the third time during the course of my Congressional service, it devolves upon me to speak of South Carolina's dead. First Evins, then Stackhouse, and now EARLE have all been taken away in the midst of useful public life at this Capitol and called from time to eternity. No grief can come to South Carolina and its people that I do not share, no loss that I do not deplore. That State is my ancestral home, and holds the ashes of my kindred. Five generations of my people are represented within its cemeteries.

The death of Senator EARLE was a severe stroke to South Carolina. Were we to judge from a human standpoint, it came most inopportunely, and ended a career which promised much to his State and country. Much was expected of him, and we have no reason to doubt that had he lived, his future course and conduct, as his past had done, would have fully justified the aspirations of his friends and received the approval of his people. Coming to the Senate when he did, and under the circumstances that marked the political victory which brought him there, his entry upon his new engagements was of more than ordinary significance. His introduction to Federal politics was at that period of his life when his intellectual power was most vigorous, when his discretion was mature and reliable, when youthful impetuosity had been supplanted by graver contemplation, and when he was prepared, as the result of experience and observation, to act with ripe judgment and sound deliberation.

He had passed the period when any solicitation to notoriety, or temporary triumph, or more selfish exploitation could dominate his action. He had reached the point where soberness of thought, soundness of propositions, accuracy of conclusions, and stability of purpose were most consulted and observed; where the best capabilities of his head and the highest qualities of his heart asserted their appropriate functions.

He was a man of sterling character, one who could be trusted in all important concerns, who was worthy of private confidence and entitled to public esteem. Personal ambition and desire for prominence were with him subordinated to the greater question of duty, and the cause and consequence were of more moment to him than individual exaltation.

His death was to many of us wholly unexpected, and came at a time when, from poor finite judgment, the greatest work and usefulness of his life lay out before him. Little did we imagine when we met him here that his taking off was so soon to come. The dispensation which removed him is to us inscrutable.

Of his acts as a Federal legislator but little can be said. His time and service were too brief to afford suitable opportunity for the full development of his aptitude and capacity for such work. No man, however strong and comprehensive his intellect may be, can, within the period to which he was limited in the Senate of the United States, demonstrate the full measure of his power, or conspicuously impress his personality on that great body. From what has been said of him by his associates there, it is gratifying to observe that he readily invited their highest esteem and consideration, and made easy approach to their respect and confidence. His antecedents and mental equipments are a complete guaranty to what he would have discovered in adaptability to and efficiency in the high station to which he had been called.

Perhaps no estimate of a man's real worth is so certain and reliable as that which is placed upon him by those among whom he has lived the longest, by his immediate neighbors and those with whom he has intimately mingled for years in daily intercourse. A man is always best known and understood at home, and if there he be above reproach and invulnerable to adverse criticism, if those who have had opportunity to observe and introspect his uniform course and character, his goings out and comings in, can testify to his merit, he has an unfailing certification which is entitled to full faith and credit wherever he may go and by all with whom he may come in contact. Tested by this rule, Senator EARLE was worthy to receive the utmost consideration. His people loved and trusted him.

I shall never forget the impressive scene of his funeral—the gathering of his neighbors to pay him final tribute. They came representing every walk and condition, white people and black, old and young, to do him the last sad honors. From every lip fell words of tenderness and regard, every tongue affirmed his praise, and every heart evinced its sorrow. No higher testimonial of a truly good man was ever offered than that bestowed upon him by his pastor, whose words have been reproduced by gentlemen who have preceded me. I listened to these words with extraordinary interest, and felt that they epitomized the true nobility of human character, leaving nothing more, nothing better to be declared.

To live the life of the good and to die the death of the righteous should be the highest aspiration of all mankind. The "toil for triumphs of an hour," to "wade in wealth or soar in fame," to struggle for and receive the plaudits of the world, the utmost temporal achievements are vain and satisfy not when the time comes for the final transit of the soul. When called to "walk through the valley of the shadow of death" only "the rod and staff" of the Master can bring comfort.

Was he prepared to die? This is a question which, whether uttered or unexpressed, is of supreme importance, and always presses itself upon our attention when those we know and love are taken from us. We have heard it asked from our childhood. If surviving friends and relatives can feel assured in an affirmative answer, much of solace is afforded, and resignation to the Divine will is made more easy. It is comforting, indeed, to believe that our departed friend was ready for the summons. That he was finally faithful, entitled to the Christian's reward, and now awaits in the better, brighter land a joyful reunion with the loved ones who are to follow, is a sweet and abiding consolation.

Mr. Speaker, the frequency with which death has visited the membership of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and of which the sad scene we have just witnessed in the Senate Chamber and the ceremonies there observed upon the recent death of Senator WALTHALL are a forceful reminder, should convey to us all a solemn admonition. It is an old saying that "all men think all men mortal but themselves;" but we must know that ere long we shall all go hence, and that the dread mortality common to all humanity shall in each of us discover a victim in its own way and at its own time. To those of us especially who have passed the half-century mark by the calendar, and who realize that the middle milestone in the journey of life is behind us, the thought of death is serious and the necessity for preparation is apparent. It will not, it can not, be long until we shall all reach the end. May it then be said of us, as we believe it can now be affirmed of him whose virtues we here commemorate, "He was ready and prepared to meet his God."

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, the late Senator EARLE, whose memory we recall, and to whom we pay tribute to-day, was born in Greenville, S. C., on April 30, 1847. At the age of 2 years his mother died. At 5 years his father died. He was taken by his aunt, Mrs. Heriot, to her farm in Sumter, and cared for as her own child. He was trained by the hardships of farm life to that untiring energy and close economy which so aided him in achieving the success to which he attained in the hard struggle that ended only when death came. His early education was acquired under trying disadvantages, having to walk to school 3½ miles. When 14 years of age he had a serious accident. While riding a spirited horse on one occasion, the animal fell, breaking his leg in three places, causing him to be an invalid for more than a year. After his recovery he joined the Confederate army in July, 1864, and made a gallant soldier.

Ardent, courageous, patriotic, and loyal to his State, he grasped the sword in her defense. Through hardship and untold privations he followed the immortal leaders of the Southern army, amid the vicissitudes of fortune, to their final defeat.

After the war there was nothing in the outlook of the country nor in its social and political condition to animate or give buoyancy to his youthful spirits or to guide him to an elevated plane of manhood and usefulness. His aunt's house lay in the track of the Union Army, and desolation all around, and a thorough social upheaval, united with a galling oppression from without, tended to make the prospect cheerless and hopeless. But that manly courage which he inherited and hardihood acquired by his experience as a soldier qualified him for the conquest of adverse conditions and for his final triumph over all discouragements. Among his most striking characteristics was self-reliance, and it stood in good stead at this trying period.

His education was meager, such only as he had acquired in the common schools. Realizing the importance of education, he entered Furman University, and there pursued his studies until forced to leave college because his meager means were exhausted. Not having sufficient money to complete his education, he taught school for two years, thereby making money with which to pay, in part, obligations contracted at the university. During this time he studied law. In 1869 he married his cousin, a daughter of Col. John Baylis Earle, of Anderson County, and moved to Anderson, and there began the practice of his profession. After one year's residence in Anderson he moved to Sumter, S. C., and there, among the friends and scenes of his childhood, continued his career as a lawyer and public man. He took a prominent part in the memorable political campaign of 1876, when the State was redeemed from carpetbag rule.

He was elected in 1878 to the lower house of the legislature, in 1882 to the State senate, and in 1886 he was elected attorney-general. In 1888 he was offered the nomination of governor, but declined on account of pledges to his friends. In the memorable campaign of 1890 a thorough canvass of the State was made for the office of governor by Captain Tillman and General EARLE, when political feeling ran high and thousands of admiring friends greeted the noted South Carolinians at each county seat in the State. When public sentiment was largely against Senator EARLE, the manner in which he met his opponent and the manly courage and heroic faith in the cause he championed won for him the respect and admiration of all who witnessed the contest. Though defeated for the office of governor of South Carolina, his manly bearing in defeat so endeared him to the people of the State that at the first opportunity—in 1894—he was elected circuit judge by a legislature composed largely of his old opponents. In 1896 he was chosen to fill the highest office in the gift of his State—that of United States Senator. He took his seat March 4, 1897, and died May 20 of the same year.

The people of South Carolina expected much of Senator EARLE in his new field. Nobly endowed, with a character untarnished, devoted to his State and to his people, we had a right to expect much of him. Those who differed from him still entertained for him the most marked respect. His powers in debate were of the highest order. He was always cool and clear-headed and often aggressive. His courage was unsurpassed, as his supporters and opponents will alike bear witness. His honesty was unquestioned and his conduct was always above reproach. His experience as a lawyer and judge made him conservative and fair-minded. He never descended to low personalities when engaged in controversies nor assailed character when in partisan warfare. Vituperation was foreign to his nature.

His public record covers a period when courage, high ability, and absolute integrity were required to meet grave and important exigencies. It is a proud satisfaction to know that his connection with the history of South Carolina and the part he bore in all these trying emergencies were wholly honorable to himself and conspicuously serviceable to his State and country. His was a changeless sincerity. He was never in disguise. He was the soul of honor, and had a contempt for anything mean or sordid. So highly endowed was he by nature and with so many estimable traits, he was particularly fitted to discharge the duties of the exalted positions to which he was called by an admiring people. He enjoyed the companionship of friends and made it pleasant and enjoyable for them to be with him. High-toned, manly, and dignified in manner and conduct, he treated everyone, both high and low, in the way becoming a gentleman, and he expected like treatment in return. He was a genuine type of the best element of the South.

He was called apparently before his work was finished. He did not die of old age, nor of lingering decay. Death came to him in the fullness of his powers. Step by step he had climbed the ladder of fame and filled each station with great ability. He had just reached the goal of his ambition when elected to the United States Senate. However, the full measure of his capabilities had not been reached, and his career was prematurely brought to a close by an untimely death. He was an active worker up to the very close of his life. When the end came, there was no stain upon his name and his fame was undimmed. His name will survive long in the history of his State and the country.

As has been well said, "the history of man and human progress is a story of sacrifice, devotion, and self-denial. As we look down the ages and let pass before the view the toils and the struggles, the failures and the successes, the lights and the shades of human character and efforts, and, above all, when we look into our own souls and try to square ambition with achievement, desire with consummation, hope with possibility—aye, all the contradictions and paradoxes of conduct and aspiration—we rise from the contemplation with the conviction that through all these there is a higher destiny."

Mr. Speaker, that this noble man spent nearly fifty years in the battle of life, and a large part of that time in the public service of his State, and passed through the most heated political contest known to South Carolina, or to any other State, and with a large majority of his people against him, and yet not one charge of any kind was ever made affecting his honor, integrity, or ability, marked him as one of the noblest works of God—"an honest man." No South Carolinian ever felt that the honor or dignity of his State would ever be lowered while intrusted to JOSEPH EARLE.

He was of the solid, even-tempered, well-balanced order of men, to whom only can the safety and perpetuity of great interests and the grave responsibilities of guiding a great country be confidently intrusted. For the emulation of youth a nobler example than our deceased friend has left us can scarcely be presented.

In his death the State has lost the service of one of her truest sons; the nation a statesman of the greatest promise.

Fortunate are we if this pause in the busy duties of public service shall aid us in making ready, as was Senator EARLE, for the call that came to him, and which will surely come to each of us. Would to God we had more such characters in public life—men who love the truth and spurn pretense; men who love God and whose lives mark their devotion to His precepts.

Mr. BARROWS. Mr. Speaker, on such an occasion as this we are all on the same side of the House, and our unity is the unity of sympathy and friendship. It is not for me to-day to frame any formal epitaph. It is for those who have known and loved Senator EARLE to chisel the polished eulogy which shall be the true monument to his life and service. I only wish, as one who stood by his grave, to drop a little clod of tribute. My acquaintance with him was as transitory, as flitting, as might be the passage of a bird over his grave.

I saw him but twice; once in an hour which must have been to him, as it was to me, one of the most solemn hours of his life, the hour in which he took the oath of office in the Senate. When I saw him again, it was not really to see him. He lay there in the home which was his sanctuary of affection, and the light had gone from his eye. He was not there. And so it would not be for me to speak very much of a man whom I knew so little, and I do not like the mere perfunctory tum-tum of the hired mourner.

But there are two ways of knowing men. We may know them personally and directly. We may come to bask, as it were, in the full light and sunshine of their personality, and we may know them also as their lives have been conducted through the lives of others, and that is the way in which we must know many men. It is a joy, of course, to have the first hand and immediate acquaintance with those who come within the range of our own lives, but in many lives we can only feel their power as they are conducted through the lives of others. That is the way in which our lives are brought into range with the great lives of history.

The names of the great men of America—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe—are just as real to us as the names of any who live about us, and their lives are incorporated in the solidity and perpetuity of our institutions. They are also conveyed to us from year to year, as they will be to others from century to century, by the influence of their character. So it is as we see men from time to time. We see not only the men themselves, but we see those who have influenced their lives. We see the life of the teacher who has helped mold the man. We see the life, perhaps, of the preacher to whose sermons he has listened. We see the life of the mother that has been taken up and incorporated into the life of the man and is exhibited in his tenderness, his conscientiousness, and other traits which make him worthy and honorable. Thus, when we touch men at any point, we find other lives revealing themselves through them.

So I have felt, Mr. Speaker, although I did not know Senator EARLE, although I could only give, as it were, a mere kodak impression, a mere flash-light impression of his face and all its refinement of character, and must leave to others the portraiture with all its truthfulness of delineation and color, yet I felt that I got a very definite impression from his character by going to his home, by entering into the State where he was known and loved, and where he had made such a mark. One could hardly pass into that town, one could not leave the train, without feeling at once that he was in an atmosphere which had been made warmer by the life of this man, and made clearer, too, by his own perceptions of truth.

Then there was the testimony of others, and how generous that testimony was. Some of it was intended for my ear, and some of it was not. Much of it came unbidden. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] has spoken of eulogy as the kindly, pleasant word, but in political life there is a good deal of cacology; there are a great many words that are not kindly words, and the contest is severe and bitter. So it is all the more significant that one could in his own State get the testimony of men who stood over against him. Generous foemen they were, and as generous in giving their tribute to his honesty, to his manliness, to his conscientiousness, which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] has referred to as being perhaps the most distinguishing trait in his character.

It was delightful to get this testimony. Then there was the silent, almost wordless, tremulous testimony of those who stood near and dear to him in his own home, that testimony that comes not in formal utterances, but which you feel in the very atmosphere of the place. It was a joy to me to feel that he had left behind him those stalwart young men who could stand up and encourage and strengthen, by their sympathy and manliness, the dear mother who needed their help and strength in that hour. That was a tribute to his character as a father.

Other gentlemen have referred to the tribute of his pastor, to his fidelity as a Christian in the relations in which he was brought, and we have just had a delineation of many of the striking features of his character in public life, showing how honest, how elevated, and how generous he was.

Mr. Speaker, while we have been called upon to-day, especially by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON], to think of the consolations which we are obliged to invoke from the life beyond, and while I know how those consolations need to be invoked in the sad hour when we think how transitory life is and that many lives must get their main reward from beyond, yet it is an immense satisfaction to me to think that the influence of a life like that of Senator EARLE is not lost now and here, but that it goes on propagating itself, making itself felt in civil life, in the community where it was lived out, and is carried down as a blessed and precious memory. I do not ask the question, then, whether such a man was prepared to die. The single thing I ask was, Was he prepared to live? And when I have that testimony, that seems the whole, all that is necessary.

I think the members from this House who went down there, as they have thought of the scene in the home and in the churchyard, where there was a requiem of birds, with the fragrance of the flowers under the new-leaved trees—I think they thought there was some compensation in death. Death brings its separation, but does it not also bring its unity? My friend from South Carolina said he would be glad to have some one go down from Massachusetts, because the feeling between South Carolina and Massachusetts was a strong one, an old one, and a tender one, which had survived all the severity and hardships of war.

And it was a glad thing, though a sad thing, that I could go down and have the honor of representing the State of Massachusetts, and could feel, too, as did my friend, that in this separation and the stings of death there was an opportunity for a new unity between these two old States, which are symbolized not only in the stars in the firmament of our flag, but also in its stripes. Mr. Speaker, there is no State in the Union, I think, where such virtues as made up the character of Senator EARLE are more appreciated, more honored, than in the State a part of which I have the honor to represent. Massachusetts does honor and will honor conscientiousness, generosity, and nobility in civic life. We are told by the apostle that—

> None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

So it is to me gratifying to think that this man did not live for himself; that the life was diffused; that its fruitage has gone into the community and can not be lost. We know it is taken up into the life of the State and becomes a part of its heritage. A good man does not live to himself, and he does not die to himself. We ask the question sometimes in our sober moments whether life is worth living; and there are some lives which make the problem difficult. But such a life as that of Senator EARLE is in itself sufficient answer. When we see that he struggled and triumphed over difficulties, that he rose step by step in the estimation of the community, and won one victory after another, and at last honorably reached one of the highest places of public life and then passed away in the full estimation of mankind, that certainly we know is a life worth living. I find in him, Mr. Speaker, but another interpretation, another worthy illustration, of the nobility of Southern chivalry.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, we do most honor ourselves when we bestow upon the honored dead the just meed of praise. For the purposes of earthly existence that praise, however high and however worthily bestowed, is powerless to benefit the departed spirit. The word of praise and appreciation sparingly uttered or wholly withheld when it would have been priceless for inspiration to noble achievement falls now upon deaf ears. The pulses that might have thereby been thrilled with nobler aspiration are now dull and unresponsive. And yet it is not a fruitless function that we perform to-day.

The tribute bestowed upon the worthy dead, like the quality of mercy, blesses the giver as well as the beneficiary. Our own hearts and minds are chastened and subdued by these solemn pauses in the absorbing pursuits of active life.

In this aspect alone they are well worth the time expended. But there is another, let us hope.

Powerless as they are upon the dead for inspiration or achievement, but potent in their reflex upon ourselves, they may be even more potent for comfort, for consolation to the family and friends. They may even prove fruitful of high ideals in the minds of younger men—ideals of thought, ideals of activity, ideals of Christian living.

Mr. Speaker, it was not my fortune to know Senator EARLE intimately. Our lives had few points of tangency; unusually few for men in active public service in the same State. The circles of our official functions touched but seldom; those of our social and personal almost never.

We differed widely upon political questions of absorbing interest. Each was an active partisan of his particular school of thought, but always under the ægis of the great Democratic organization. From this aspect it might be proper and natural for me to confine myself to some silent testimonial of sorrow for the untimely death of our fallen brother. Some silent tribute of respect for his memory, some mute tender of sympathy to the loved ones left behind, might fill the measure of reasonable expectation—leaving to those who knew him well the sad though grateful task of portraying his virtues.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another and a different aspect. While Senator EARLE did not belong to me in the sense of personal friendship, yet, in a wider sense, as a distinguished Carolinian, one who has contributed a worthy page to the history of our State, he is the property of all Carolinians, and I am here to-day to testify to the country that he has a sure abiding place in the esteem and affection of all factions and all parties in his own State. In a still broader sense, as a patriotic American, as a noble exponent of Christian citizenship, he has become the property of us all. His upright life in public station and in private walk has become a part of the rich heritage of our common country.

The measure of the richness of that heritage it is the high privilege of his colleagues in House and Senate to unfold to the country at large. In the presence of this public sorrow, this public calamity, we stand with heads bowed; yet our hearts are aglow with generous pride over the triumphs of our fallen comrade. In this presence we forget all differences; we bury forever all personal rivalries and animosities, and turn away from the contemplation of all save the ennobling lessons of a noble life.

I have said that I had little opportunity for personal test and study at close range of the character of Senator EARLE. That is true in a literal sense; and yet I have touched his tangents, so to speak, at many points. One thing has impressed me particularly—the uniformity of the impression he made upon those who came into personal contact with him. That impression most frequently found expression in a uniformity of utterance.

"He is a high-minded man" or a "high man" seemed to be the form of expression spontaneously suggested in the minds of most people; and the genuineness of the quality which it expressed was attested in the most practical and searching way, in this, that in the midst of heated political campaigns, when party and factional feeling ran high, no man, however bitterly opposed, ever charged or, I think, for a moment seriously thought of dishonesty or dishonor in the same connection with this man.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the rare quality of the man was concretely evidenced in the fact that though Senator EARLE in 1890 led the most vigorous and aggressive assaults upon what was manifestly a ground swell of public opinion, yet within four years he was elevated to the bench on the crest of that same popular wave before which he had formerly gone down.

That he should in 1896 have been chosen by popular vote in the primaries of his party as his party's candidate for United States Senator but completes the circle of a remarkable political career. But his political career, remarkable as it was, I shall not dwell upon. It has been minutely portrayed by others. I prefer to spend the few moments that I shall occupy the floor in holding up those characteristic qualities which constituted the personality of the man.

Several traits contributed to the apparent transformation of public sentiment referred to. Of the minor traits perhaps none paved the way more fully to this remarkable renaissance of popularity than the uniform sincerity and courtesy of the man. He wielded the keen edge of sarcasm and ridicule with the deft hand of a Saladin; but in the fiercest contest of partisan heat he rarely lost his suavity of manner, and never within my knowledge did he fail in dignified courtesy. Above the turmoil of excitement that surged around him, his spirit was serene and kindly.

> As some tall cliff which rears its awful form,
> Swells from the vale and midway braves the storm,
> Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
> Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Yet he was not lacking in spirit. None quicker than he to respond to studied offense. The only occasion upon which I heard him speak during the heated campaign of 1890 presented just such an instance. In the midst of his speech some one in the audience made a remark which he, Senator EARLE (then attorney-general of the State and a candidate for governor), construed as reflecting upon his integrity. Prompt as the report after the flash, and sharp as the crack of a pistol, came the response. Yet none was readier than he to make amend when the offense was withdrawn.

Another thing has impressed me, Mr. Speaker, as I have touched the lives of those who have been in touch with the life of Senator EARLE; that is the firm hold he held upon the confidence and love of the Christian denomination to which he subscribed his faith. More than once have I been surprised to find the name of JOSEPH H. EARLE honored in the home circle of a humble member of the Baptist Church. Honored as a soldier? Yes. Honored as an eminent lawyer? Yes. Honored as a jurist and just judge? Yes, all this; and then I thought there was a tenderer element in the incense of honor to his name as a Christian statesman and exponent of Baptist culture, integrity, and fidelity.

Such recognition, abiding in the breasts of his co-religionists living in the byways quite as frequently as when living on the thoroughfares of thought and activity, constitutes, in my judgment, the highest possible attestation to the quality of the man.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no worthier epitaph written of any man than that which is written in the hearts of the humble—a thousandfold more than that reflected in the plaudits of the proud.

If I were to attempt to sum up in one term the quality which lay at the foundation of the character of Senator EARLE, I could find no fitter term than the single word faithful—faithful to social obligations, to political obligations, to public obligations, to private obligations, to family obligations, and, back of all, faithful to his obligations to his God. In this last consisted the secret of his power, as it has constituted the secret of all true power, of highest power, in all the ages.

The fathers, in framing our language, recognized this elementary fact. In all the experience of the past, fullness of faith in God has ever been the condition of highest fidelity to human trust and responsibility. The man who has had most faith in God has exhibited highest fidelity in all relations to his fellow-man. And so it has come about that the effect has its name from the efficient cause. The faithful man primarily is the man full of faith in God.

Mr. Speaker, this is the noblest lesson, the most valuable message that comes back from the mute lips of our dead colleague to those of us who survive him.

I have every reason to believe that the full faith in God which inspired and sustained fidelity to all duty and trust inspired and sustained him in his last earthly moments. It could not be otherwise. The faith that had illumined the pathway of duty in public station and in private walk must also have illumined his pathway through the dark valley into the bright plains of celestial immortality. The same creative hand that implanted that faith in his breast, and filled his breast with immortal aspiration, still reigns, and He is just. The existence of the faith, the abiding presence of the hope, is the highest guarantee of the fulfillment of that hope.

> Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
> Whom we that have not seen Thy face
> By faith and faith alone embrace,
> Believing when we can not prove;
> Thine are these orbs of light and shade;
> Thou madest life in man and brute;
> Thou madest death; and lo, Thy foot
> Is on the skull which Thou hast made.
> Thou will not leave us in the dust;
> Thou madest man, he knows not why;
> He thinks he was not made to die;
> And Thou hast made him; Thou art just.

Mr. Speaker, this is the message borne back to us from his silent tomb. Let us profit by the message and the lesson.

And now what shall I say, what word of comfort utter, to the widow in her weeds and the orphan in his woe?

I can do nothing better than point them to that lesson and that prayer.

Mr. Speaker, in one of the most beautiful prose poems ever conceived, Longfellow portrays the bitterness, the sorrow, the gloom, the hopeless desolation of one whose life companion had been snatched away from his side. His wanderings finally led him (by chance, shall we say?) to a rude little chapel in a foreign land, whose open door invited the weary wanderer to its darkened coolness.

He went in. Silence and solitude abode with the coolness there. Nothing was there to move the spirit to devotion. The rude pictures and funeral tablets did not appeal to the artistic sense. Yet the appointed hour and the man had met. The days and weeks and months of weary suffering had wrought their appointed purpose. Through the blinding tears that welled up from a heart burdened with bitter recollections, sore and bleeding, he read on a marble tablet this inscription:

> Look not mournfully into the past. It comes not back again. Wisely improve the present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a manly heart.

He accepted it as a message from the silent occupant of the tomb. He arose from the ashes of his grief with a new purpose and a new hope, determined to meet the future with a brave heart.

Through their blinding tears may the widow and the orphaned children, as they assemble around the faithful father's tomb, read the same lesson and realize the rich heritage which is theirs—the heritage of an unsullied history, the heritage of an immortal hope. Theirs be the hope, the consolation; theirs and ours the lesson and the prayer. May they and we gather inspiration from his life for a better life—

> Life that dares send
> A challenge to its end,
> And when it comes, say, Welcome, friend!

Mr. NORTON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent portrayal of the virtues and character of the late Senator JOSEPH H. EARLE by the many distinguished members of Congress who have preceded me, I can not hope to add much that is new in his life, but nevertheless a sense of duty to the people of South Carolina and to the memory of a distinguished son of my native State impels me to bring my tribute of respect to lay upon the grave of the lamented dead. In doing this I can speak from the knowledge that comes from a more or less intimate official as well as personal acquaintance.

It was my pleasure to serve with him in the general assembly of South Carolina, he in the upper and I in the lower house. I followed close upon his term as attorney-general in the office of comptroller-general. These two offices being closely allied, fine opportunity was given me to judge of his work and habit as a public officer from this point of contact. My duties as a State officer required my presence in every county of the State at least once a year; and thus during his entire term of circuit judge I was afforded opportunity to know the man and understand something of the appreciation in which his people held him. I had also the pleasure of canvassing the State with Judge EARLE in 1896 as a candidate for reelection in the same State primary which nominated him for United States Senator.

So from a personal knowledge of his official record as a legislator, State officer, and judge, extending over more than ten years of contemporaneous service, and of his reputation as a citizen and Christian gentleman, I may be allowed briefly to speak of Senator EARLE—a manly man, a patriotic citizen, and a faithful public servant.

His youthful days, while filled with struggles to reach that position in life for which his talents eminently qualified him, was not ill suited to develop fitting faculties for the work he was called upon to perform for his State. Left an orphan at the age of 5 by the death of his parents, and penniless by the loss of his inherited fortune, he was brought from his home in Greenville to that of his aunt, Mrs. Mary Haynesworth Heriot, at Sumter. Here he spent his boyhood and obtained the rudiments of his education. He worked his way through college by teaching school, and supported himself in the same way while preparing to enter the profession of law. The surmounted difficulties of his youth formed for Senator EARLE a stairway to that higher plane of life on which he played so well his part. His struggles wrought out in him that cultivated mind and strengthened character, that development of latent power that might have lain dormant, which gave to the service of the State a well-rounded man.

From farm boy to Senator he touched every phase of the life of his people. He understood them and sympathized with them, and they never lost confidence in their friend.

Youthful struggles for merited position in life early merged into a patriot's fight for the merited position of his State in the sisterhood of States.

He was too young to enter the army at the beginning of the civil war, but did so later and was with General Johnston when he surrendered in 1865. He returned to his home to struggle with his people and his State to obliterate the sad traces of a fratricidal strife unequaled in the history of the world. The gloom and desolation that settled like a pall over the South darkened the most impressionable years of his young manhood. The feelings of a people were voiced in the words quoted by Alexander H. Stephens during those dark days:

> The star of hope shone brightly in the West,
> The hope of liberty—the last, the best;
> That, too, hath set upon our darkened shore,
> And hope and freedom light our homes no more.

Those were stout hearts and steady hands that struggled and fought for higher and better things in those days, and few stouter or steadier than Captain EARLE's, of Sumter. Daring spirits were roused in his State by a power that tried to overawe; strong minds carried hope to our people even amid that terrible chaos more horrible than war. Among these was found our future Senator. As a young lawyer Captain EARLE lent the aid of a clear head and active hand to the redemption of his State from an industrial and political chaos. He took an active part in the famous semimilitary struggle that overthrew at its zenith the debauchery of power and plundering of funds that characterized the carpetbag government—in the memorable dispersion of the vultures that plucked at the vitals of the "prostrate State."

As a representative from Sumter County from 1878 to 1880 and senator from the same county until 1886, he aided a new administration of affairs to restore justice and order and preserve good government to his native State. His efficient service in these positions was recognized by his promotion to the office of attorney-general of the State in 1886. He was an unsuccessful candidate for governor in 1890. In 1894 he was elected by the general assembly judge of the eighth circuit. In 1897 he won the nomination before the Democratic primaries for United States Senator.

It may not be unfitting for me to bear the testimony of a rather intimate knowledge to the splendid record of Attorney-General EARLE. My official duties led me to examine and compare with some care the opinions and constructions of the tax laws of the State given by different attorneys-general, not only for the guidance of the administration of the tax department, but also for the purpose of correctly adjusting tax regulations to the provisions of a new constitution. The opinions of General EARLE I always found to be equal in full grasp and clear, strong statement to any from the long line of illustrious gentlemen who had previously filled that office in South Carolina.

Into the position of judge he carried the same characteristic ability and painstaking labor. He maintained spotless the ermine with which the representatives of his people had clothed him. As lawyer and judge his record stands the test of the closest scrutiny. He will not suffer from comparison with the brilliant minds of a State which has given a lustrous galaxy of famous men to the service of her people and their country.

In his political life Senator EARLE was uniformly and deservedly successful. He performed with credit to himself the duties of every position in which he was placed by the suffrages of his people. He met defeat once—in the revolutionary campaign for governor in 1890. Yet he came out of the fight unsullied, retaining the confidence of his people and the respect of his political opponents. Naturally a conservative in thought and action, he opposed, with all his strong powers of mind, his straightforward but polished address, the radical tendencies of one faction of his party. But he never let his conservatism lapse into reactiveness. Amid all the prejudices and bitterness of the clash between extreme radicals and reactionists he did not lose his head. He gave the strength of his influence to those who continued, undisturbed by clamor, to labor for peace and progress in the State.

By experience as well as native ability Senator EARLE was well fitted to represent his State in the Congress of the United States. He understood thoroughly the needs of his people and was willing and anxious to work for them. During his short service in the Senate he made but one speech—a concise, pointed argument upon a resolution introduced by himself providing for the reorganization of the Senate committees, so that he might have his assignments. The resolution was passed over, and before it came up again he was taken sick. He did not again appear on the floor of the Senate. His last public act as a representative of his State was to demand as a right a place in the organization of the Senate where he could effectively work for his people. "It is my duty to call the attention of this body to the fact that the State of South Carolina has two Senators and that only one of them has been assigned to committees" were among the last words of Senator EARLE.

It may be vain to speculate on what might have been. But we can not but feel that had not his career as United States Senator been so soon cut off with little more than a month's service, Senator EARLE's high abilities and broad mind, encouraged by higher honors and stimulated by exercise in a new and broader field of duty, might have won for him and his native State a prouder position in the history of his country. The orphan boy who dauntlessly struggled against adverse circumstances toward the realization of the splendid dreams of the morning of his youth, at the noonday of his life reached the goal of his ambition. But the fruits of his success were denied him. In the providence of God he was called away from the scenes of his earthly triumphs. But, true to the tenets of his Christian faith, he had no complaint; he made no murmur. He had built in accord with the principles that "too low build they who build beneath the stars;" and with unfaltering trust in the justice as well as the mercy of his Creator, when the summons came, "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams," Senator EARLE gently passed away and his spirit returned to the God who gave it.

A worthy epitaph to the Christian life and conscientious labors of Senator EARLE may be found in the saying:

> Integrity of life is fame's best friend,
> Which only after death can crown the end—

for such is the crown that those who know him best place upon his life. That wholeness of mind and fullness of character which is the best friend of fame, those lofty aspirations and exalted ideals which spring from the impulse of a pure ambition, these are the laurels of life's battle he can not be denied, the flowering of life's growth he leaves in the memories of his people.

> He made life—and He takes it—but instead
> Gives more: Praise the Restorer, Al-Mu'hid!

He who died at Azan sends
This to comfort faithful friends:

Faithful friends! it lies, I know,
Pale and white and cold as snow;
And ye say, "Abdullah's dead!"
Weeping at my feet and head.
I can see your falling tears,
I can hear your cries and prayers,
Yet I smile and whisper this:
"I am not the thing you kiss;
Cease your tears and let it lie:
It was mine, it is not I."

Sweet friends! what the women lave
For its last bed in the grave
Is a tent which I am quitting,
Is a garment no more fitting,
Is a cage from which at last
Like a hawk my soul has passed.
Love the inmate, not the room;
The wearer, not the garb; the plume
Of the falcon, not the bars
Which kept him from the splendid stars.

* * * *

Now the long, long darkness ends.
Yet ye wail, my foolish friends,
While the man whom ye call "dead"
In unbroken bliss instead
Lives, and loves you: lost, 'tis true
By any light that shines for you;
But in light ye can not see
Of unfulfilled felicity,
And enlarged Paradise;
Lives the life that never dies.

—Edwin Arnold.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, this forenoon in the Senate Chamber we participated in the funeral services of the late Senator WALTHALL, of Mississippi. This afternoon in this Chamber the ordinary duties of the House have been suspended in order that we may pay tribute to the memory of JOSEPH H. EARLE, late Senator from South Carolina. Thus is impressed upon us anew the thought that "in the midst of life we are in death." We are reminded that against the grim reaper neither wealth nor station is any defense.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Replying to a request that he explain death, Confucius said: "How can I explain death, when I do not understand life?" In the presence of death we pause to consider the purpose of life. Perhaps the most comforting and encouraging view is that which regards this life as a preparation for the life to come. Thus life becomes opportunity; its purpose is the building of character. This view reconciles us to differences in wealth, in talents, and in station; it explains temptation; it dignifies endeavor.

As the plant with its roots in earth takes the crude materials thereof and transforms them into forms of beauty and fragrance, so man with his feet on earth must take the commonplace earthly events and use them as a means of growth in grace.

From the reek of the pond the lily
Has risen, in raiment white,
A spirit of air and water,
A form of incarnate light.
Yet, except for the rooted stem
That steadies her diadem,
Except for the earth she is nourished by
Could the soul of the lily have climbed to the sky?

Mr. Speaker, it was not my good fortune to be personally acquainted with Senator EARLE. My only knowledge of him is that which I have derived through others. And yet, though I never looked into his face except on that sad day nearly a year ago when it was last seen by mortal eyes, the noble cast of his countenance betokened such elevation of character that I have accepted as without exaggeration the warm words of praise which I have heard of him. The thought that flashed through my mind as for a moment I gazed upon his features was this: "He was distinctively a gentleman."

Perhaps no other expression in our language embodies more that is admirable in human life than that fine old title "gentleman." It implies the due and proper blending of gentleness with manliness, tenderness with fearlessness, grace with strength. It suggests gentleness without weakness, strength without rudeness. I can readily believe that Senator EARLE was a man of kindly dignity, with manners gracious yet commanding, and that his life was indeed "without fear and without reproach." Neighbors and family alike testify to his kindliness. His boyhood's struggle, his record as a soldier, and gallant political contests all testify to his manliness.

To offer consolation to the stricken ones is the generous office of old and valued friends, but I would be false to the dictates of my heart did I not at least offer them for comfort the words of the good Quaker poet:

How strange it seems, with so much gone
Of life and love, to still live on!

* * * *

Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust
(Since He who knows our need is just)
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.

Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own!

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members have leave to print remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks leave for members to print remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Greek legend of a chieftain of a besieging force who, after arduous and valiant endeavor having scaled the walls of the beleaguered city, stood upon the crest of the parapet, with victory in his grasp and with none to stay his footstep or arrest his taking the citadel of his ambition, when suddenly a thunderbolt descended and struck him lifeless to the earth.

Such a scene pictures the taking-off of Senator EARLE. His was an earnest, aspiring, ambitious life. His nature was of a serious and austere cast. There was no levity in it. He was the personification of an unbending dignity. His character spoke in his bearing and manner. He was upright, calm, deliberate, even poised. The seeming coldness of manner that characterized him was but the expression of a cool, judicial judgment that dominated and controlled his conduct and, perhaps unconsciously, his bearing toward those with whom he was thrown in casual contact. He was far removed from effusiveness, almost into the realm of reserve, but he was not unapproachable. The ever-present instinct of the gentleman and a generous, sensitive, kindly nature kept him in close touch with his fellows and contributed to giving him the strong hold which during his whole career he had upon their admiration, esteem, and friendship. In no community in which he ever resided did he fail to make his impress by the strength of his mind and character or to fasten to him with hooks of steel friends who were drawn to him by the sterling worth, kindness, and gentleness of his nature.

His aspirations and ambitions were great. He had measured his own resources, he knew his capabilities, and he strove to make the most of them. There was nothing sordid or unworthy in them. His life was an open book. He lived and died amongst his people, who knew his outgoing and incoming. His highest place was amongst those by whom he was best known. There was no sham or tinsel about him. He was intensely real and genuine. His ambition was to achieve greatness in the service of his people. His life's record proclaims how well he succeeded. It should not have been otherwise. He was a typical son of his State, and it is an enduring source of regret that he was not permitted to live to exemplify in the high station which he so briefly occupied the character of his people and the principles for which three generations of them have stubbornly contended. He was a legitimate outgrowth of all that was best and truest in the history of his State. By lineage and association there breathed in him honor, high purpose, and devotion to the faith of his fathers. All that was great in their past lived in him. No South Carolinian ever blushed for him; none failed to recognize in him his fit representative.

The beloved soil of his State, upon which were fought one-third of the battles of the Revolution, held all that was mortal of two hundred years of his ancestry and kinsmen. In their day and generation they had thrilled with the pride and striven for the high destiny of their State. They had shared in making her history; in achieving her just title to the star that is hers upon the flag of the Union; in defending her in the last supreme struggle which settled by the one method of final arbitrament the hitherto irreconcilable differences of sentiment and constitutional construction existing between the sections, and in peace robing her in such prosperity as has been possible for her under existing laws.

Oliver Wendell Holmes but reechoes Mirabeau when he says that the education of a man must begin many years before he is born. His character, too, is the growth of the generations to which he owes his existence. The life of Senator EARLE was one continued exhibition of high morality, purity of soul, and Christian charity; such a life as is a source of strength and elevation to any community. Suspicion never dared approach him. He seems to have intuitively modeled his life after the superb rectitude, spotless purity, and humble Christian faith of Robert E. Lee, than whom there was none more knightly, pure, and noble amongst all the sons of men.

In his daily walk and conversation he illustrated the purity of his mind and the honesty of his heart, prime essentials both to the exercise of public trust and to proper political preferment.

Washington said:

> Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert those great pillars of human happiness, those firmest props of the duties of men and citizens.

He was too brave a man to deal in falsehood and deception. No one ever questioned his absolute fearlessness or doubted his word or honesty. What more should be said of any man? He was truly a Chevalier Bayard, "sans peur et sans reproche." He was not a Bourbon. He lived in the present, guided by his inherited instincts and principles, and possessed of abilities which eminently qualified him to adorn every position which he occupied. It is tempting, in speaking of a friend who is gone, to use strong words to portray him as he was. In this instance it is difficult to do his memory justice without seeming to indulge in that pardonable weakness, for he was in truth a most striking character, an uncommon man.

He was not a genius, unless genius be as denominated by Thomas Carlyle, "an infinite capacity for taking pains." His abilities were not scintillating. They were of the strong, clear, logical, and solid order. The elements were so mixed in him as to present a peculiarly well-rounded, vigorous, and complete mind. The words of George McDuffie, delivered in Charleston with reference to Robert Y. Hayne, apply with striking appropriateness to Senator EARLE:

> It is not so much by any one faculty standing out in prominent relief as by the admirable adjustment of all his moral and intellectual qualities that he was distinguished from other men.

His temperament was calm and even, but little susceptible to excitement, and in consequence emergencies found his judgment cool and at its best. He was not afraid of work, and realized in his early youth that his future and his fortunes were to be carved out by his own energy and industry. There was nothing of the skyrocket about him. His light was steady and enduring. He began his labor at the foundation. His advance was sure and measured. He worked his way to the highest pinnacle of place, power, and usefulness to which any son of his State can for this and perhaps another generation aspire.

The first years of his mature youth found him in the wake of a desolating and impoverishing war, for he was born in 1847. But he was not too young to take up arms for his State, though suffering from an accident which maimed him for life. In 1865, along with the other soldiers of the South, he resumed the peaceful walks of life and took his place in the ranks of the people in their great work of rehabilitating their fortunes and restoring their State to her historic greatness. With but little else than his own character and ability he began the career which made the man whose name and memory we to-day here honor and revere.

Others have spoken to you of his life work, traced his history, and presented his biography, from which statement of facts there shines a record of spotless integrity, refined courtesy, devotion to truth, unflinching courage, commanding abilities, fidelity to duty, untiring industry, lofty ambition, gentleness, kindness, Christian faith and charity, and great achievements. I shall not indulge in repetition. To those who knew him the story needed not to be told. To the country in whose service he died it will be a source of pride that so pure a character and so clear and strong a mind was by the vote of her people elevated to so high a station.

He had faith in the people and they had faith in him. From his earliest associations he mingled with them and was one of them. His heart beat in sympathy with them, and they knew and felt it. What concerned them concerned him. He was in accord with their best interests. All of his political record disclosed his earnest, honest purpose to secure equal rights for all under the law and the Government. It was this sense of his fidelity to their interests and of genuine sympathy and at-oneness with themselves that more than anything else gave him his hold upon the confidence of the people, that took him from the State senate and made him attorney-general, in which position he established for himself the high reputation as a lawyer which subsequently placed him upon the bench, where he exemplified the model judge without a superior in his State.

While far removed, because of a rather severe, dignified reserve, from demonstrativeness, and with but little of the social qualities and elements that constitute personal magnetism, the people knew from his daily walk and conversation, from the work and record of his life, that he was their friend and that his character and abilities were for them a tower of strength. With such foundation, his popularity with them was sure and fixed and would have been enduring; not a meteor in the political firmament, but a fixed star in the councils of the nation.

He was not sensational. He cultivated none of the arts to attract attention to himself. He never occupied extreme positions or attitudinized. He did not seek notoriety. His light was not a fitful glamour. There was nothing of the drum major about him. He was sincere, genuine, substantial. In the Senate the world would not have heard of him by self-trumpeting. He would not have suddenly flared before the public eye. But in a few years the country would have realized his presence.

The weight of his character and abilities would have made itself felt. He would have builded himself into the confidence and esteem of the people. His hand would have been seen in the legislation of the country. His voice would have been heard wherever needed; always true, strong, resolute, clear, and logical. His colleagues would have found in him a man whom they could trust, a valuable friend, a redoubtable antagonist, always courteous and considerate. The character portrayed by the record of his life would have there received its best and highest illustration. The whole Union would have appreciated it and congratulated itself upon its possession, and would have felt grateful to his State for giving it such a Senator.

He came here from his people to begin work for them. He was permitted only to begin. Within a few short weeks the "silver cord was loosed," the "golden bowl was broken." He returned to his people to peacefully and bravely lay down his life, which had been devoted to their interests, and to meet the summons which had no terrors for him.

Sadly they bore him through the city of Greenville, "beautiful for situation," like the city of Zion, attended by thousands of friends of his youth and of his mature years, assembled from far and near, to attest their love and esteem, to his resting place under the familiar trees that seem to bend tenderly over him, with the blue mountains lifting high their heads around him, fit emblems of his pure and noble character. There he sleeps.

He has left behind him the example of a life most worthily lived, a name and memory that will ever be cherished by his people; and as sweet incense to the objects of his fondest devotion, in whose presence his life found its only perfect happiness, the priceless heritage, "he lived as he was born, a gentleman."

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the direction of the House, as a further mark of regard for the deceased Senator, the House is now declared adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney-General, relating to the payment of the account of George E. Bird, for compensation as special district-attorney, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriation, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8066) to authorize and encourage the holding of a National Exposition of American Products and Manufactures, especially suitable for export, at the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, in the year 1899, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1154); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9994) for the reclamation of arid lands, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1161); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted the views of the majority in the contested-election case of Claude A. Swanson vs. John R. Brown (Report No. 1070, part 2); which said views and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, submitted the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Claude A. Swanson vs. John R. Brown (Report No. 1070, part 3); which said views and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Gen. Halbert E. Paine, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1155); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CASTLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3660) granting a pension to Thomas Edsall, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1156); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4169) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1157); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 727) granting a pension to Olive H. South, of Jackson, Ohio, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1158); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9187) to pension Missouri B. Ross, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1159); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane E. Zink, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1160); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LEWIS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 10068) to levy and collect an inheritance tax upon all estates exceeding $10,000, for the expense of the war of Spain against the United States, and to create an emergency—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 10069) to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DINGLEY: A bill (H. R. 10083) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROMWELL: A joint resolution (H. Res. 242) providing for printing maps of Cuba—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BELDEN: A bill (H. R. 10070) for the relief of the heirs of Asa O. Gallup—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10071) for the relief of Jose Manuel Valdez—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 10072) for the relief of Sallie A. Woolfolk, of Bolivar County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10073) for the relief of the estate of S. A. Snodgrass, deceased, late of Bolivar County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRUMP: A bill (H. R. 10074) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John B. Elliott—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10075) to grant a pension to Louisa Maria Cole—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10076) to grant an increase of pension to Jane Ann Ward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 10077) to increase the pension of Levi Moser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LORIMER: A bill (H. R. 10078) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Daniel O'Donnell, late private of Fifth United States Artillery, commanded by General Terrell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLS: A bill (H. R. 10079) to pension Alvin C. Mason, late captain of Company E, Sixteenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 10080) granting a pension to Frances E. Utley Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 10081) for the relief of Jacob Falwell, of Nelson County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10082) for the relief of Capt. Martin Hammer—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HANDY: A joint resolution (H. Res. 243) for the relief of ex-Cadet Engineer W. B. Carswell—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNEY: Petition of Iron Molders' Union No. 286, of Sheboygan, Wis., in favor of postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELKNAP: Petitions of the Best Brewing Company, Citizens' Brewing Company, and Gottfried Brewing Company, all of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Charles Barker, wholesale tobacconist, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against additional tax on tobacco in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of William R. Manierre, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pittsfield, Me., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pittsfield, Me., for the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COCHRANE of New York: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Claversack, N. Y., for the passage of bills to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Claverack, N. Y., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CONNELL: Petition of 222 citizens of Scranton, Pa., in favor of legislation which will more effectually restrict immigration and prevent the admission of illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes to the United States—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DANFORD: Petitions of the session of the Kirkwood Presbyterian Church of Bridgeport, Ohio, asking for the passage of bills to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia, to protect State anti-cigarette laws, and to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the session of the Kirkwood Presbyterian Church of Bridgeport, Ohio, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin: Petition of J. E. Kennedy and 28 other citizens of Oshkosh, Wis., against the levying of a tax on tea and coffee now in hands of dealers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Oshkosh, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Rev. E. J. Meyer and other citizens of Fond du Lac County, Wis., in favor of the passage of a bill to permit the erection of a Catholic chapel at West Point—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, St. John's Universalist Church, and Young People's Christian Union of said Universalist Church, the Baptist Young People's Union of the First and Second Baptist churches, the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Second Baptist Church, Epworth League of the German Methodist Episcopal Church, and members of said church, all of Oshkosh, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Young People's Christian Union of Neenah,

Wis., in favor of the passage of bills to investigate the labor problem, to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings, and other bills pending in Congress—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Georgia, advocating the establishment of the Castle Pinckney Soldiers' Home and Sanitarium, in Charleston Harbor—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota: Petition of the Presbyterian Church and Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Baldwin, N. Dak., asking for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Presbyterian Church and Society of Baldwin, N. Dak., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Presbyterian Church and Society of Baldwin, N. Dak., asking for the passage of bills to prohibit the transmission of gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: Resolutions of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to a tax on stocks of coffees and teas at present in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the council of the General Society of Colonial Wars, in favor of Government ownership of Fort Ticonderoga—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bedford, Ind., asking for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MILLS: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenny, widow of Samuel W. Kenny—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Capt. Alvin C. Mason—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of brewers of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the imposition of any additional tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of William R. Manierre, John A. Tolman Company, Reid, Murdock & Co., Thomson & Taylor Spice Company, and J. H. Conard & Co., all of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee now in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Petition of W. Carrick and 8 other citizens of Rockaway, Ohio, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. OLMSTED: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and citizens of Harrisburg, Pa., for the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and citizens of Harrisburg, Pa., urging the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. OTEY: Petitions of F. C. Thornton and 12 others, and M. M. Marton and 8 others, all citizens of Charlotte County, Va., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce and the Young Men's Business Association of Richmond, Va., asking the War Department to select Richmond as the point for mobilization of troops from such States as the Government may deem desirable—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SAUERHERING: Petition of the Union Congregational Church and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Windsor, Wis., for the passage of bills for the enactment of a Sabbath law for the national capital, and prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building and grounds—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petitions of Order of Railway Conductors, Division No. 289, Wellsville, Ohio; C. B. McNairy, M. D., and 22 others, Rockwell, N. C.; A. O. Starbuck and 15 others, Kernersville, N. C.; Z. T. Watkins and 19 others, Ooltewah, Tenn.; J. M. King and 7 others, Baldwin, Ga.; T. J. Mims and 19 others, Rogerville Junction, Ga., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal churches, of Milford, Mich., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Baptist, Presbyterian, and Methodist Episcopal churches, of Milford, Mich., in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: Petition of Julius Saul and business men of Albany, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TONGUE: Petitions of the Christian Church Sunday school, Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, and Union Sunday school of Scio, Oreg., for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF: Petition of the Letts Spencer-Smith Company, wholesale grocers, of Mason City, Iowa, protesting against an internal-revenue tax on tobacco, tea, and coffee in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOST: Petitions of citizens of Lovingston, Myndus, Fabers, and Montreal, Va., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: Petition of Fred. Oliver, of Charlotte, N. C., in favor of imposing a duty of $5 per ton on iron or copper sulphur pyrites—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 25, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of Saturday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. CARTER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

WAR BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

I transmit to the Congress, for its consideration and appropriate action, copies of correspondence recently had with the representative of Spain in the United States, with the United States minister at Madrid, and through the latter with the Government of Spain, showing the action taken under the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, "for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect."

Upon communicating to the Spanish minister in Washington the demand which it became the duty of the Executive to address to the Government of Spain in obedience to said resolution, the minister asked for his passports and withdrew. The United States minister at Madrid was in turn notified by the Spanish minister for foreign affairs that the withdrawal of the Spanish representative from the United States had terminated diplomatic relations between the two countries, and that all official communications between their respective representatives ceased therewith.

I commend to your especial attention the note addressed to the United States minister at Madrid by the Spanish minister for foreign affairs on the 21st instant, whereby the foregoing notification was conveyed. It will be perceived therefrom that the Government of Spain, having cognizance of the joint resolution of the United States Congress, and in view of the things which the President is thereby required and authorized to do, responds by treating the reasonable demands of this Government as measures of hostility, following with that instant and complete severance of relations by its action, which by the usage of nations accompanies an existent state of war between sovereign powers.

The position of Spain being thus made known and the demands of the United States being denied with a complete rupture of intercourse by the act of Spain, I have been constrained, in exercise of the power and authority conferred upon me by the joint resolution aforesaid, to proclaim under date of April 22, 1898, a blockade of certain ports of the north coast of Cuba, lying between Cardenas and Bahia Honda and of the port of Cienfuegos on the south coast of Cuba; and further, in exercise of my constitutional powers and using the authority conferred upon me by the act of Congress approved April 22, 1898, to issue my proclamation dated April 23, 1898, calling forth volunteers in order to carry into effect the said resolution of April 20, 1898. Copies of these proclamations are hereto appended.

In view of the measures so taken, and with a view to the adoption of such other measures as may be necessary to enable me to carry out the expressed will of the Congress of the United States in the premises, I now recommend to your honorable body the adoption of a joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain, and I urge speedy action thereon to the end that the definition of the international status of the United States as a belligerent power may be made known, and the assertion of all its rights and the maintenance of all its duties in the conduct of a public war may be assured.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 25, 1898.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be the order.

Mr. COCKRELL. And printed.

Mr. DAVIS. And printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message and accompanying papers will be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also transmitted to the Senate its resolutions on the death of Hon. Joseph H. Earle, late a Senator from the State of South Carolina.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 2768) for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 8875) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi"; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 116) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Paymaster-General of the Army, calling attention to the necessity for immediate action in the matter of deficiency appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army, 1898, amounting to $1,816,579.96; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the New Hampshire Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Dover, N. H., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the New Hampshire Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Dover, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Dover; of sundry citizens of Swiftwater; of the Epworth League of Newmarket, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Water Village, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the New Hampshire Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Dover, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Water Village, and of sundry citizens, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. QUAY. I present a memorial adopted by Kensington Lodge, No. 27, International Association of Machinists, of Philadelphia, Pa., and a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Wilkesbarre, Pa., remonstrating against the Government awarding the building of gun carriages or other work to the Brown Hoisting and Conveying Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, because of that company's hostility to organized labor and the illtreatment of its employees. I move that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of the mayor, councils, and sundry other citizens of Erie, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation prohibiting the collection of State licenses from fire insurance companies doing business in the several States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the imposition of an internal-revenue tax on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Nottingham, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Armstrong County, Mansfield, Lincoln, and Carversville; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Union Church, and the Baptist Church of Mansfield; of the Presbyterian Church of Faggs Manor and the Presbyterian Church of Glade Run; and of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church of Faggs Manor, all in the State of Pennsylvania; and of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, the First Baptist Church, the Congregational Church, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, all of Homer, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Armstrong County, West Grove, Mansfield, Lincoln, Nottingham, and Carversville; of the congregations of the Presbyterian Church of Glade Run; the Trinity Lutheran Church, of Selinsgrove; the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Martins Creek; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Richmond; the Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. Matthew in Mount Carmel; the Reformed Church and the Lion Primitive Methodist Church, of Mount Carmel; the African Methodist Episcopal Church of Franklin, and the Presbyterian Church of Faggs Manor; the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Epworth League, and the Independent Order of Good Templars, all of West Grove; the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Union Church, the Baptist Church, and the Epworth League, of Mansfield; the Ministerial Association of Mount Carmel; the Reformed Sunday school of Selinsgrove; the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, of Selinsgrove, and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Reformed Church of Selinsgrove, all in the State of Pennsylvania, and of the congregations of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, the First Baptist Church, and the Congregational Church and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, all of Homer, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Armstrong County, West Grove, Mansfield, Lincoln, Nottingham, and Carversville; of the congregations of the Presbyterian Church of Faggs Manor; the Baptist Church of Picture Rocks; the First Presbyterian Church of Kittanning; the Trinity Lutheran Church, of Selinsgrove; the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Mount Carmel; the Reformed Church and the Lion Primitive Methodist Church, of Mount Carmel; the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Union Church, the Baptist Church, and the Epworth League, of Mansfield; the Presbyterian Church, the Epworth League, and Independent Order of Good Templars, all of West Grove; the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, of Selinsgrove, and the Ministerial Association of Mount Carmel, all in the State of Pennsylvania, and of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, the First Baptist Church, and the Congregational Church, all of Homer, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of Camp No. 1, Republican Camp of Veterans and their Sons of Indiana, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying that section 1754 of the Revised Statutes be amended to the effect that the provisions of that statute giving preference to soldiers who were discharged by reason of disabilities incurred in the service shall be extended to all honorably discharged Union soldiers of the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the members of the fire department of Rochester, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish a division in the Treasury Department to regulate insurance companies; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CHILTON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Glen Rose, of the congregation of the First Christian Church of Palestine, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Palestine, all in the State of Texas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Christian Church of Palestine, Tex., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Palestine, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bedford, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bedford, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bedford, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TURNER presented a petition of the congregation of the First Christian Church of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the Independent Order of Good Templars, No. 108, of Ortung; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Tacoma, and of the congregation of the First Christian Church of Tacoma, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of La Center Grange, No. 48, Patrons of Husbandry, of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country free rural mail delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of La Center Grange, No. 48, Patrons of Husbandry, of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the country protection against the use of adulterated food products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of La Center Grange, No. 48, Patrons of Husbandry, of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country the advantages of postal savings banks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented the petition of W. H. Merritt and 10 other citizens of Morrisville, N. C., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Executive Council of the Minnesota Historical Society, praying for the purchase by the Government of the United States of Fort Ticonderoga, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Union of Duluth, Minn., and a petition of Local Union No. 7, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called postal savings bank bill; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., and a petition of Division No. 117, Order of Railway Conductors, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of members of the fire department of New Ulm, Rochester, Richmond, Fairmont, and Owatonna, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish a division in the Treasury Department to regulate insurance companies; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 26 citizens of Goodhue, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of 26 citizens of Goodhue, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEAR presented a memorial of sundry cigar manufacturers of Des Moines, Iowa, remonstrating against the increase of the tax on tobacco and cigars already in stock; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Evangelical Association of Des Moines, Iowa, and a petition of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, of Lamoni, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Epworth League, the Iowa State Christian Association, and the congregation of the Friends' Church, all of Albion, in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Evangelical Association of Des Moines; of the Church of Latter Day Saints of Lamoni, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Christian Endeavor Society, the congregation of the Friends' Church, the Iowa State Christian Association, the Epworth League, and the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Albion, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Evangelical Association of Des Moines, Iowa, and a petition of the congregation of the Church of Latter Day Saints, of Lamoni, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmision of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pittsfield, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pittsfield, Me., and a petition of Evergreen Lodge, Order of Good Templars, of Ripley, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Dexter and Pittsfield and of Evergreen Lodge, Order of Good Templars, of Ripley, all in the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MASON presented a memorial of sundry members of the fire department of Ottawa, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish a division in the Treasury Department to regulate insurance companies; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Chicago and Coulterville, in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Urbana; of the congregations of the First Baptist Church, the Christian Church, and the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Urbana; of members of the Harrison School of Chicago, and of the Marie Chapel Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THURSTON presented the petition of Uriah Bruner, of West Point, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing a certain class of merchant vessels to be made auxiliary to the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pleasant Dale, the Episcopal Church of St. Paul, and the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Lincoln, and of Foote Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ord, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Episcopal Church of St. Paul, the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Lincoln, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pleasant Dale, and of Foote Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ord, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Episcopal Church of St. Paul, the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of Lincoln, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pleasant Dale, and of Foote Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ord, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2355) restoring to the pension roll the name of Annie A. Gibson; and

A bill (H. R. 2154) granting an increase of pension to A. V. Bloodgood.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3953) granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3963) to permit certain parties to intervene in the equity cause of the United States against Morris and others, pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3506) for the relief of Mary E. Kline, helpless child of John Kline, late captain Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. RAWLINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4317) to provide for the opening of lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, and kindred substances in the State of Utah, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4391) to amend section 4445 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4452) authorizing the Campbell-Lynch Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Webbers Falls, Ind. T., reported it without amendment.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3799) to correct the military record of John Shelton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 141) regarding the holding of a Pan-American exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century, reported it without amendment.

MAPS AND CHARTS OF ALASKA.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WETMORE on the 21st instant, reported favorably thereon, and moved its reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,000 copies of the Descriptive Catalogue of Maps and Charts of Alaska and Adjacent Regions now in the Library of Congress; 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Library of Congress.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4453) to authorize the President to employ the services of the retired officers and men of the Regular Army of the United States in certain contingencies; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 4454) to correct the military record of James M. Hale, of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GEAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4455) to protect State laws which forbid the sale of cigarettes or of all forms of tobacco to minors by bringing imported tobacco in original packages under control of State laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4456) to designate Gladstone, Mich., a subport of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4457) to provide for the establishment of building lines on certain streets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4458) for the relief of James Ballard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4459) granting an increase of pension to Laura M. Allen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 4460) to correct the record of Stephen W. Coakley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 4461) for the retirement of Maj. W. W. Lowe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 4462) to provide for a municipal building and court-house in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4463) for the relief of Wildey Lodge, No. 27, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Harpers Ferry, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4464) for the relief of John W. Vandine, of Hall's Mills, Wetzel County, W. Va.;

A bill (S. 4465) granting an increase of pension to James L. T. Sharp;

A bill (S. 4466) granting a pension to Joseph Fitzpatrick, of Glenville, Gilmer County, W. Va.; and

A bill (S. 4467) granting a pension to W. W. Hutchison, late of Company K, First West Virginia Infantry.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask to be read at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. R. 158) declaring the existence of a state of war between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a state of war now exists, and has since the 15th day of February, 1898, existed, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Mr. PENROSE (for Mr. GRAY) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 159) for the relief of ex-Cadet Engineer W. B. Carswell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment providing for carrying into effect the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of chapter 543, volume 26, of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to the prosecution of certain Indian claims, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment relative to the admission to the mails as second-class matter of bulletins of vital statistics issued by the State Department, intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment relative to the payment of the claim of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company for transportation of United States mails, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO REVENUE BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit two amendments intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 10083) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

The first amendment which I offer proposes to strike out sections 28 and 29, which are the sections providing for the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds, and to insert a provision in lieu thereof.

The next amendment I submit, intended to be proposed to the same bill, is to add income-tax features to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WORK OF THE PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of Document 242 be printed for the use of the Committee on Pensions. It is a matter relating to the Pension Bureau.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing 1,000 copies of the document as requested?

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the document?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is simply a statement I had printed the other day concerning the work in the Pension Bureau. I ask that 1,000 copies be printed for the use of the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be made.

HOMESTEADS AND RIGHT OF WAY IN ALASKA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that House bill No. 5975, extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes, be reprinted, with the Senate amendments numbered.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be the order.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I ask that the Army bill be referred without printing, because the House of Representatives had the bill printed just as it passed there, and as we have the bill in a printed form, there is no occasion for reprinting it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. So much of the order as ordered a reprint will be canceled.

Mr. HAWLEY subsequently said: I find it necessary, under the rules, to ask a special order for the printing of 300 additional copies of House bill 9878, for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States. Let 300 extra copies of the bill as it passed the House be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut that 300 additional copies of the bill to which he refers be printed? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9878) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the naval appropriation bill was substantially finished on Thursday evening, but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] offered an amendment touching armor plate and the establishment of a Government armor plant, which was printed and came over. That amendment is now in order before the Senate. Before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds, I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly yield to me to offer a little amendment that I wanted to offer before? It is simply to provide for a clerk at Port Royal. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, at the end of line 12, insert:

Naval station, Port Royal, S. C.: For one clerk to naval constructor, at $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. A corresponding amendment should be made in the total in line 19.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, before "dollars," strike out "twenty-two thousand and seven" and insert "twenty-three thousand four hundred and seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after the word "same," in line 5, strike out all down to and including the word "aforesaid," in line 8, and insert:

And no contract for armor plate for said 3 battle ships shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel as aforesaid; and no contract for armor plate other than for the said 3 battle ships shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel as aforesaid. And in case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limit of $300 as to price above fixed, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to proceed at once to purchase or establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor, and proceed to manufacture the same. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory, and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery, as a whole plant or separately, for the land or buildings or the whole or any part of said machinery; and he shall make a contract or contracts for such land, buildings, and machinery with the lowest responsible bidders. The Secretary shall also appoint an armor-factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred. For the establishment of said armor factory the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, and in addition the sum of $1,000,000 is appropriated to be used in making at said factory the armor for the vessels herein and heretofore authorized.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senate is familiar with the armor-plate question. Twice since I have been a member of this body the question has been discussed fully. It has been fully demonstrated that the price charged by the trust was exorbitant and that the armor furnished was defective. The facts have been put before the Senate and the country. By a large majority each time the Senate has refused to pay more than $300 a ton for the armor necessary for the battle ships now being built, making in all 8,000 tons of armor. But no provision has been made to secure the armor at that price. On both occasions when this matter was before the Senate, those of us who opposed paying more than $300 per ton pointed out the necessity of Congress providing some means to secure better armor for that price. We pointed out that if Congress failed to provide for the building of an armor-plate factory in case the armor trust would not furnish first-class armor for $300, then it was certain that we would not get the armor. The trust would simply wait till we were forced to have armor, and then make us pay their price. On each occasion a proposition was before the Senate to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed to build an armor-plate factory, it having been demonstrated that better armor than the trust has been furnishing could be made in a Government factory as low as $226 per ton.

It was shown conclusively that a great deal of the armor manufactured by the armor-plate concerns is faulty and defective, and that on our battle ships which to-day are blockading the harbor of Havana there is defective armor which is liable to be pierced by an ordinary projectile thrown from the antiquated guns of Morro Castle.

At the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Navy was instructed to investigate this whole question and report to Congress. The investigation was made and we have the report. At a previous Congress the Secretary of the Navy had been instructed to investigate the cost of armor. That was while Mr. Herbert was Secretary of the Navy. He made a full investigation and we have his report. We have twice refused to pay more than $300 a ton, but twice we have failed to provide a way to get the armor at that price. What is the result? We find ourselves to-day where we must have the armor, and we find ourselves at the mercy of the armor trust, both as to quality and price.

Mr. President, we are now in the midst of war. The three battle ships that will soon be completed—the three that will need armor to be of service—must have armor, if the war continues, many months before an armor factory can be built. This danger was pointed out in the last Congress and the Congress before, but on various excuses some—enough to make a majority—who said they were opposed to paying more than $300 per ton for armor persuaded themselves into delaying for further and further investigation. We have spent two or three years in investigating, and our investigations have brought us right up to what we knew two years ago. To-day we must pay the price that the armor-plate trust charges for the three battle ships and run the chance of getting more defective armor, or we must decide to do without them.

I regret that our delay, our shortsightedness, has put the Government where, to-day, it is at the mercy of this trust. Recognizing that fact and recognizing that it is better in such an emergency to submit to an extortionate price, to pay $175 more a ton for armor than it would cost the Government to make it, I have offered an amendment which permits that price to be paid for the armor for these three battle ships, but prohibits contracts in the future at that price. I would never agree to such a proposition were we not in the midst of war.

But, Mr. President, why should we agree to pay that price in the future? Why should we now delay longer to make provisions to protect the Government in the future? Why should we now neglect to provide that in the future our battle ships may be provided with good armor at a fair price? Therefore, in the same amendment I have proposed that the Government shall proceed to erect an armor-plate factory provided a contract can not be made at $300 a ton for the future after the three battle ships are finished. This very bill provides for three more battle ships, but it will take three years to build them.

This war will be over before we can build any more ships, but the war has shown how illy prepared we are for war. Everybody knows that this Government will, from the experience we have just had and are now having, proceed to put our country in a stronger position of defense, that we will proceed to build monitors for harbor defenses and such battle ships as our present experience shows will be most effective to defend our flag. We are not going to stop. We should have ample coast defenses, a first-class navy.

